CONGRESSIONAL RECORD:

CONTAINING

THE PROCEEDINGS AND DEBATES

OF THE

SIXTY-THIRD CONGRESS, SECOND SESSION.

VOLUME LI.

WASHINGTON

VOLUME LI, PART XIV.

CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

SIXTY-THIRD CONGRESS, SECOND SESSION.

SENATE.

TUESDAY, August 11, 1914.

The Senate met at 11 o'clock a. m.

Rev. J. L. Kibler, D. D., of the city of Washington, offered the following prayer:

O Lord, we thank Thee for Thy grace and for Thy tender mercies, providing for all the needs of our depraved and sorrowing humanity. Thou art the Prince of Peace and a very present help in trouble. Thou art the source of all life, the fountain of all good, and the inspiration of all worthy endeavors. As we face the responsibilities of this day, therefore, we look first to Thee. May we regard Thy outstretched hand and put our trust in Thee. May we obey Thy laws, rely upon Thy strength, and may we respond to the touches of Thy divine hand upon our consciences. We ask it all for Christ's sake. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of Saturday last was read and approved.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

The VICE PRESIDENT announced his signature to the enrolled bill (S. 4966) proposing an amendment to section 19 of the Federal reserve act, relating to reserves, and for other purposes, which had previously been signed by the Speaker of the House of Representatives.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair desires to call the attention of the Committee on Printing to the fact that more than one-half of the enrolled parchment bills that come to the Vice President for signatures are in such condition, especially as regards the title page, that they would not be permitted to be filed in any court of record by any lawyer in the country. The ink is blurred, words often scarcely legible, and the page woefully "smutty," as the proof printer would designate it. The Chair desires the Committee on Printing to see whether something can not be done to present to the permanent files in the office of the Secretary of State much cleaner and clearer transcripts of enacted laws.

Mr. SMOOT. The chairman of the committee is not here, but I want to thank the Vice President sincerely for bringing this matter to the attention of the Senate. I have recognized it for a long time, and I will say that the committee has had the question under consideration, and I hope at a very early day to see that it is absolutely remedied. There is no necessity for it. There is no excuse for it whatever.

GENERAL EDUCATION BOARD AND CARNEGIE FOUNDATION.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of State, transmitting certain information relative to Senate resolution of the 5th instant, regarding the work of the General Education Board of the Rockefeller Foundation or the Carnegie Foundation. The communication will lie on the table and be printed in the RECORD.

The communication is as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, August 7, 1914.

The Hon. THOMAS R. MARSHALL,
Vice President of the United States.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of an attested copy of the resolution adopted by the Senate on August 5, 1914, by which the Secretary of State and other heads of executive departments of the Government are requested to furnish to the Senate the following information:

"The relation, if any, of the organizations known as the General Education Board of the Rockefeller Foundation and the Carnegie Foundation to the work of their respective departments; a statement showing the names and positions of all employees, if any, of the department whose salaries are paid in whole or in part with funds contributed by the Rockefeller Foundation or the Carnegie Foundation; the names and positions of all administrative officers, if any, of the department who are in any way connected with the work of the General Education Board of the Rockefeller Foundation or the Carnegie Foundation, and the salaries, if any, received by them from the said Rockefeller Foundation or Carnegie Foundation."

Responding to the resolution, so far as the Department of State is concerned, I have the honor to inform you that there are no employees of the Department of State whose salaries are paid in whole or in part with funds contributed by the Rockefeller Foundation or the Carnegie Foundation; nor is there any administrative officer of the Department of State, so far as I have knowledge, who is in any way connected with the work of the General Education Board of the Rockefeller Foundation or the Carnegie Foundation.

I have the honor to be, sir,
Your obedient servant,
W. J. BRYAN.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate a communication from the Attorney General transmitting, in response to a resolution of the 5th instant, certain information relative to the General Education Board of the Rockefeller Foundation and the Carnegie Foundation. The communication will lie on the table and be printed in the RECORD.

The communication is as follows:

OFFICE OF THE ATTORNEY GENERAL,
Washington, D. C., August 6, 1914.

The PRESIDENT OF THE SENATE.

SIR: I have received the resolution of the Senate, dated August 5, 1914, requesting that I inform the Senate concerning the relation, if any, of the organizations known as the General Education Board of the Rockefeller Foundation and the Carnegie Foundation to the work of the Department of Justice; also a statement showing the names and positions of all administrative officers or employees, if any, of this department whose salaries are paid in whole or in part with funds contributed by the Rockefeller Foundation or the Carnegie Foundation.

In reply I have the honor to inform the Senate that the organizations referred to are not in any way connected with the work of the Department of Justice; that there are no employees in this department whose salaries are paid in whole or in part with funds contributed by the Rockefeller Foundation or the Carnegie Foundation, and that there are no administrative officers in this department who are in any way connected with the work of the General Education Board of the Rockefeller Foundation or the Carnegie Foundation.

Very respectfully,
J. C. MCREYNOLDS,
Attorney General.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of Commerce acknowledging the receipt of resolution of August 5 requesting certain information relative to the General Education Board of the Rockefeller Foundation and the Carnegie Foundation. The communication will lie on the table and be printed in the RECORD.

The communication is as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF COMMERCE,
OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
Washington, August 6, 1914.

Hon. JAMES M. BAKER,
Secretary United States Senate, Washington.

MY DEAR SIR: The department is in receipt of a resolution, dated August 5, requesting certain information relative to the General Education Board of the Rockefeller Foundation and the Carnegie Foundation, and will be glad to furnish the same after the matter is taken up with its various bureaus and offices.

Very truly, yours,
E. F. SWEET,
Acting Secretary.

TRANSFER OF VESSELS FROM COASTWISE TRADE.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of Commerce acknowledging receipt of a resolution of August 3, relative to the responsibility of securing vessels now engaged in the coastwise trade of the United States for transfer to the foreign trade, with a view to meeting the present emergency in over-seas transportation. The communication will lie on the table and be printed in the RECORD.

The communication is as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF COMMERCE,
OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
Washington, August 5, 1914.

Hon. JAMES M. BAKER,
Secretary of the Senate.

SIR: I beg to acknowledge receipt of the resolution adopted by the Senate on August 3, directing that an inquiry be made into the possibility of securing vessels now engaged in the coastwise trade of the United States for transfer to the foreign trade, with a view to meeting the present emergency in over-seas transportation.

This matter has been referred to the Commissioner of Navigation for attention, and report will be made to the Senate at the earliest practicable date.

Respectfully,
E. F. SWEET,
Acting Secretary.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by D. K. Hempstead, its enrolling clerk, announced that the House disagrees to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 4405) for the relief of Frederick J. Ernst; asks for a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. POU, Mr. STEPHENS of Mississippi, and Mr. MOTT managers at the conference on the part of the House.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the enrolled bill (S. 5313) to regulate the taking or catching of sponges in the waters of the Gulf of Mexico and the Straits of Florida outside of State jurisdiction; the landing, delivering, curing, selling, or possession of the same; providing means of enforcement of the same, and for other purposes, and it was thereupon signed by the Vice President.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. JAMES. I present a telegram from Mr. Logan C. Murray, president of the Louisville Board of Trade, of Kentucky, and I ask that it be read.

273539

There being no objection, the telegram was read, as follows:

LOUISVILLE, KY., August 10, 1914.

Hon. OLLIE JAMES,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

Our export and import trade is paralyzed by reason of European war and the fact that we have no merchant marine to transport American commerce. It is therefore highly important that the Senate ratify as quickly as possible the Alexander bill (H. R. 18202) permitting American capital and American citizens to purchase merchant vessels wherever they are obtainable, and making them eligible to American registry and free to fly the American flag. Louisville export trade in grain, provisions, lumber, cotton-seed products, flour, agricultural implements, whisky, tobacco, enameled goods, proprietary medicines, and other articles is large and valuable, and all it needs to expand largely is the certainty of ocean transportation. This board of trade, representing general business here, earnestly asks your help.

LOGAN C. MURRAY,
President Louisville Board of Trade.

Mr. O'GORMAN. I present certain communications, which I ask to have read.

There being no objection, the communications were read, as follows:

LOS ANGELES, CAL., August 8, 1914.

Hon. JAMES A. O'GORMAN,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

If consistent, we urge passage House bill admitting foreign ships to American registry, thus affording export opportunities to shipowners of west coast. Failure to so provide will result in great loss to American exporters.

LOS ANGELES CHAMBER OF COMMERCE,
LOUIS M. COLE, President.

NEW YORK, August 10, 1914.

Hon. JAMES A. O'GORMAN,
Chairman Interoceanic Canals Committee,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

The National Foreign Trade Council, standing for the general interest of all commercial, industrial, financial, and transportation elements engaged in or affected by foreign trade, in a special meeting called to take measures for the relief of congestion of American foreign trade due to European war, adopted following resolutions, which they respectfully request you bring to the attention of the Senate:

"Whereas it is of vital necessity for the prosperity of all sections of the United States that our cotton, grain, and all other products and manufactures which are exported, amounting to approximately two and one-half billion dollars per year, as well as the imports essential to our life and industry should find immediate means of ocean transportation: Be it resolved that the National Foreign Trade Council appreciates the desire of the administration to aid in providing shipping facilities to relieve the present congestion of American foreign trade, indorses the efforts of the Congress to enact passage of H. R. 18202, now pending; and

"Whereas even with legislation permitting the American registry and operation of foreign-built ships under the American flag the movement of exports and imports will be retarded during the European war because of prohibitive war risks (British Government insurance covering only British vessels and their cargoes): Therefore be it

"Resolved, That we recommend that the Government promptly provide war-risk insurance on both the hulls and cargoes of American vessels engaged in over-sea trade, and we urge upon Congress the immediate enactment of the laws necessary thereto; and be it

"Resolved further, That the National Foreign Trade Council pledges its hearty cooperation to American bankers in their efforts to restore and maintain stable foreign exchange."

JAMES A. FARRELL, Chairman.

NEW YORK, August 10, 1914.

Hon. JAMES A. O'GORMAN,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

In the interest of relief to the congestion in our export trade most strongly urge the passage of bill now before the Senate permitting American registry to foreign-built ships. Would favor any amendment looking to prohibiting such ships from engaging in coastwise trade.

E. A. CLARKE,
President Lackawanna Steel Co.

CHAMBER OF COMMERCE OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA,
Washington, D. C., August 8, 1914.

Hon. JAMES A. O'GORMAN,
Chairman Committee on Interoceanic Canals,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: The San Francisco Chamber of Commerce, by its president, Mr. C. F. Michael, telegraphs that, representing shippers and shipowners in California, it urges the passage of the pending bill regarding American registry of foreign-built vessels (H. R. 18202) in the form in which it passed the House.

It says also that provisions could be made, as in the case of the Spanish-American War, to give immediately full citizenship papers to foreign masters and officers on foreign-built vessels admitted to American registry, and exchange their foreign licenses for American licenses of the same rating.

The San Francisco Chamber of Commerce is a member of this chamber and we ask that you give consideration to its attitude.

Very truly, yours,

D. A. SKINNER,
Acting Secretary.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I send to the desk a telegram which came to the junior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. OLIVER] in my care during his absence. I ask that it be read.

There being no objection, the telegram was read, as follows:

PHILADELPHIA, PA., August 10, 1914.

Hon. GEORGE T. OLIVER,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

If the Jones amendment to the Panama Canal act, passed by the Senate on Saturday, admitting foreign-built ships to American coast to coast trade, and the Saulsbury amendment admitting foreign-built ships to American coastwise trade, which is to be voted on by the Senate on Tuesday, are enacted into law, it will paralyze the shipbuilding industry on our Atlantic seaboard. In behalf of the shipbuilders who are our customers we urge you in the strongest terms to use your greatest efforts to prevent the passage of the Saulsbury amendment and to effect a reconsideration of the Jones amendment.

THE ADAMS & WESTLAKE CO.,
By E. L. LANGWORTY, Eastern Manager.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I have two telegrams here which I desire to have read.

There being no objection, the telegrams were read, as follows:

NEW YORK, August 5, 1914.

Hon. JAMES E. MARTINE,
Washington, D. C.:

New York & New Jersey Dry Dock Association, composed substantially all shipyards port of New York, respectfully protests against opening indiscriminately navy yards for repair private vessels, particularly until facilities in private yards are exhausted. Large numbers workmen being discharged because no foreign vessels are being repaired; workmen will suffer unless work is provided in private yards.

H. C. HUNTER, Secretary.

ELIZABETH, N. J., August 10, 1914.

Hon. JAMES E. MARTINE,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

The passage of the Saulsbury and Jones amendments to the Panama Canal act will mean the death of shipbuilding on the Atlantic seaboard. We strongly urge you to use all honorable means to prevent the passage of the Saulsbury amendment and to effect the reconsideration of the Jones amendment.

S. L. MOORE & SONS CORPORATION,
Shipbuilders.

Mr. PERKINS. I am directed by the Committee on Commerce to present the following telegram from the president of the Richmond Industrial Commission of California, which I ask may be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the telegram was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

COMMERCE COMMITTEE,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

SIRS: The Richmond Industrial Commission, commercial organization of the city of Richmond, Contra Costa County, Cal., earnestly petitions your honorable committee that everything possible be done for the passage of the rivers and harbors appropriation bill at this session. Harbor development is necessary to all the Nation, in view of our expanding commerce, and especially so in view of the opening of the Panama Canal and other factors that are increasing the ocean carrying trade of the various United States ports and also making development of our rivers necessary. An appropriation for Richmond's inner harbor is embraced in the bill. The city of Richmond has cash ready to be used in conjunction with the Federal appropriation for this work, and is anxious to proceed. The Richmond Harbor is the natural gateway for the valleys of the interior and a convenient port for all western freight shipped in or out via the canal, and including farm products shipped to the Atlantic seaboard, this city being on two continental railroads, of one of which it is the terminus.

Respectfully,

RICHMOND INDUSTRIAL COMMISSION,
GEORGE S. WALL, President.

Mr. STERLING presented petitions of sundry citizens of South Dakota, praying for national prohibition, which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. PERKINS presented a petition of Local Branch, Ship Owners' Association of the Pacific Coast, of San Francisco, Cal., praying for the enactment of legislation to provide for American registry of foreign-built vessels, which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a petition of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Santa Rosa, Cal., praying for the enactment of legislation to provide a compensatory time privilege to postal employees, which was referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

Mr. SHIVELY presented memorials of Fred Farell, H. H. Ambos, jr., B. B. Davis, and 12 other citizens of St. Joseph County, Ind., remonstrating against national prohibition, which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. BRISTOW presented a petition of sundry citizens of Wakeeny, Kans., praying for national prohibition, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. SHEPPARD presented a petition of sundry citizens of Paris, Tex., praying for the enactment of legislation for the recognition of Dr. Cook in the polar discovery, which was referred to the Committee on the Library.

Mr. COLT presented a petition of the Rotary Club, of Providence, R. I., praying for the passage of the river and harbor appropriation bill, which was ordered to lie on the table.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. SWANSON, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to which were referred the following bills, reported them each without amendment and submitted reports thereon:

S. 5113. A bill for increase of cost of a site for a post-office building in the city of Rockingham, N. C. (Rept. No. 737); and

H. R. 13415. A bill to increase the limit of cost of public building at Shelbyville, Tenn. (Rept. No. 738).

Mr. MYERS, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which were referred the following bills, reported them each without amendment and submitted reports thereon:

S. 3107. A bill for the relief of John E. Johnson (Rept. No. 740); and

S. 5970. A bill for the relief of Isaac Bethurum (Rept. No. 741).

Mr. MYERS, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill (S. 3663) for the relief of Rezin Hammond, reported it with an amendment and submitted a report (No. 739) thereon.

NEW YORK ASSAY OFFICE.

Mr. SWANSON. From the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds I report back favorably, without amendment, the bill (S. 3342) for the enlargement, and so forth, of the Wall Street front of the assay office at the city of New York, and I submit a report (No. 736) thereon.

I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill, and in connection with the request I will state that there is a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, Mr. McAdoo, setting forth that it is of the utmost importance to provide for this building as is proposed in the bill. A large amount of gold is now being stored there, and they are anxious to have the building completed, including vaults, as quickly as possible. Several years ago an appropriation of $607,408 was made to enlarge the assay office in Wall Street, New York.

The Treasury Department has ascertained that it is better to tear down the old building and erect a new one, which can be done for the same amount of money appropriated for the enlargement, and this bill simply authorizes the Secretary of the Treasury to erect a new building at a cost not to exceed the amount heretofore authorized.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It authorizes all unexpended balances of appropriations heretofore made under the authority contained in the acts of Congress approved March 4, 1911, and August 26, 1912, for the enlargement, etc., of the Wall Street front of the assay office in New York City, and for vaults therefor, and architectural, engineering, and other technical services in connection therewith, to be reappropriated and made available for the erection of a new fireproof building on the Wall Street front, in continuation, or extension, of the present assay office building fronting on Pine Street, together with suitable vaults for use of said assay office and the adjoining subtreasury, and, if necessary, an entrance from or connection with said subtreasury for access therefrom, at a total limit of cost of not exceeding in the aggregate the present limits of cost for building, vaults, connection with the subtreasury, and the architectural, engineering, or other technical services in connection therewith, of $607,408.

That the authority heretofore given to the Secretary of the Treasury to employ, in his discretion, such architectural, engineering, or other technical services as he may deem necessary in connection with the enlargement, remodeling, or extension of the portion of the assay office in New York City fronting on Wall Street, and to pay for such services from the unexpended balance of the appropriation from which the rear portion of said assay office was constructed, is hereby continued with respect to said new building, payment therefor within the limit heretofore fixed to be made from the amounts herein reappropriated.

That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, further authorized to employ in connection with the Supervising Architect's Office, and without regard to the civil-service laws, rules, or regulations for service, either within or without the District of Columbia, such other specially skilled technical, engineering, consulting, and superintending services as he may deem necessary; all such specially skilled technical, engineering, consulting, and superintending services to be exclusively employed in connection with the plans and specifications for said vaults and the foundations of said building and vaults. And the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to pay for such services mentioned in this paragraph such compensation and such actual necessary traveling and subsistence expenses in connection with such work as he may deem reasonable from the amounts herein reappropriated, all such additional services and traveling expenses hereinbefore authorized to be in addition to and independent of the authorizations and appropriations for personal services and traveling expenses in said office otherwise made.

And in razing the Wall Street front the Secretary of the Treasury may dispose, by gift or otherwise, of the façade of the present building with a view to the preservation of the façade, and the United States shall not be put to any expense beyond that for said razing.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The letter of the Secretary of the Treasury will be printed in the RECORD.

The letter referred to is as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
Washington, July 29, 1914.

Hon. CLAUDE A. SWANSON,
Chairman Committee on Public Buildings,
United States Senate.

MY DEAR SENATOR: The present demand upon the Treasury for gold at New York again shows clearly the need for the new Assay Office Building with the vault space which has been planned therein. A bill providing for this structure passed both Houses of Congress two years ago and was signed by the President, but owing to some defect in the language used it was found necessary to pass another bill, and this measure I understand to be now pending before your committee. The appropriation carried by this bill is of precisely the same amount as that carried by the bill which became a law, and there is no radical change in the measure. The bill should be passed as soon as possible in order that work upon the building may begin. I beg to call your attention to the matter and trust that you may be able to secure action at an early date. It is urgent.

Respectfully,
W. G. MCADOO, Secretary.

BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION INTRODUCED.

Bills and a joint resolution were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. WILLIAMS:

A bill (S. 6247) to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to accept the bonds of certain cities as security for crop-moving deposits, to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

By Mr. CHAMBERLAIN:

A bill (S. 6248) for the relief of Edward G. Jones (with accompanying papers), to the Committee on Public Lands.

By Mr. THOMAS:

A bill (S. 6249) for the relief of homestead entrymen under the reclamation projects in the United States, to the Committee on Public Lands.

A bill (S. 6250) to amend section 2, subdivision G (a), of an act entitled "An act to reduce tariff duties and to provide revenue for the Government, and for other purposes," approved October 3, 1913; to the Committee on Finance.

By Mr. RANSDELL:

A bill (S. 6251) to amend section 1 of an act to amend the national banking laws, approved May 30, 1908, and to extend the provisions of said act to State banks and trust companies; to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

By Mr. BRISTOW:

A bill (S. 6252) granting an increase of pension to James L. Soupene (with accompanying papers); and

A bill (S. 6253) granting a pension to Harvey J. Arterburn (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. JONES:

A bill (S. 6254) granting a pension to Catharine N. Burlingame; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. JAMES:

A bill (S. 6255) granting a pension to Herman Martin (with accompanying papers);

A bill (S. 6256) granting a pension to Henry P. Logsdon (with accompanying papers); and

A bill (S. 6257) granting an increase of pension to Jane Ingram Letcher (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. SHIVELY:

A bill (S. 6258) granting an increase of pension to Charles W. Ewing; and

A bill (S. 6259) granting an increase of pension to James M. Barnett (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I introduce a joint resolution, which I ask may be printed in the RECORD.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 175) authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to make advances of currency upon notes secured by warehouse certificates issued upon cotton, and for other purposes, was read the first time by its title, the second time at length, and referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency, as follows:

Joint resolution (S. J. Res. 175) authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to make advances of currency upon notes secured by warehouse certificates issued upon cotton, and for other purposes.

Resolved, etc., First. That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to withhold from the banks in the States of North Carolina, South Carolina, Georgia, Alabama, Mississippi, Louisiana, Texas, Oklahoma, and Arkansas 50 per cent, or so much thereof as he deems advisable, not to exceed 50 per cent of the currency which otherwise they could receive under the terms of the act approved August 4, 1914, entitled "An act to amend section 27 of the act approved December 23, 1913, known as the Federal reserve act," the same being an amendment of the act approved May 30, 1908, entitled "An act to amend the national banking laws."

Second. The Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to advance upon notes secured by warehouse receipts for lint cotton in bale, for a term not to exceed 12 months, Treasury notes to an amount equal to 50 per cent of the currency which under the act approved May 30, 1908, entitled "An act to amend the national banking laws," together with the amendments thereto, could have been received by the banks of the respective States named, if all of said banks availed themselves of the opportunity of taking said currency. The advances in each State to be the amount which could have been allotted to the banks of said State except for the reduction of the allotment by the Secretary of the Treasury under the authority given him by this joint resolution.

Third. The Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized, if he deems it advisable, to permit the first banks applying for currency under the terms of the act approved August 4, 1914, hereinbefore referred to, to receive each the full amount of currency to which it would be entitled under said act, and to reserve the amount authorized to be advanced upon notes secured by warehouse receipts for lint cotton in bale under the terms of this joint resolution, from the amounts that would otherwise go to the banks last applying for currency and from banks not applying for currency.

Fourth. The Secretary of the Treasury, the Secretary of Agriculture, and the Secretary of Commerce are hereby constituted a board, with authority to prescribe rules and regulations and fix the terms under which the advances herein provided for shall be made.

Fifth. The rates of interest to be charged on said advances shall be the same as the tax prescribed for notes issued by banks under act approved May 30, 1908, and the amendment thereto contained in the act approved December 23, 1913.

Sixth. The sum of $250,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated to enable the Secretary of the Treasury to carry out the provisions of this joint resolution.

RELIEF OF HOMESTEAD ENTRYMEN.

Mr. JONES. A bill was introduced a few moments ago, title of which is for the relief of homestead entrymen under the reclamation projects in the United States. I do not know who introduced the bill, but it occurs to me that it should have been referred to the Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation of Arid Lands instead of to the Committee on Public Lands.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill was introduced by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS].

Mr. JONES. I do not know anything about the bill only as it was read by title.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I think that the lands covered by the bill are public lands, and that similar bills have always been referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. JONES. But the bill to which I refer may not be of that character. It is entitled "A bill for the relief of homestead entrymen," and so forth.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill should clearly be referred to the Committee on Public Lands. It provides that where lands in an irrigation district can not be irrigated settlers may relinquish their claims and apply for other entries.

Mr. JONES. That is entirely different.

INTERNATIONAL NAVAL CONFERENCE (S. DOC. NO. 563).

Mr. O'GORMAN. Mr. President, there have been frequent references in the last few days to the London conference regarding the establishment of uniform rules affecting the neutrality of nations. Much interest is manifested in that particular document, and I ask that a copy, which was used at the time the recommendations of the conference came to the Senate for ratification, may be published as a Senate document.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

TRANSFER OF MERCHANT SHIPS.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, there has been some difference of opinion with reference to the validity of the transfer of the merchant ships of a belligerent to a neutral after the outbreak of war. I have here a very carefully prepared opinion by Hon. Cone Johnson, of the State Department, in which he discusses this question very thoroughly and reviews all the authorities. I ask that this opinion of the Solicitor of the State Department be printed in the RECORD and that it also be made a Senate document. I would suggest that as a Senate document it might be incorporated in the same document with the London conference agreement or understanding presented by the Senator from New York [Mr. O'GORMAN].

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

Mr. SIMMONS. It is very short.

Mr. SMOOT. It is not generally agreed that a document of this kind shall be printed in the RECORD and also as a public document.

Mr. SIMMONS. If the Senator objects to it——

Mr. SMOOT. I have no objection whatever to its being printed as a document.

Mr. SIMMONS. I think it ought to be printed in the RECORD, that we may have it in an available form not only for the Senate but for the other House. As Senators know, a Senate document is printed a long time before it is known to be in existence by Members of the other body, and probably by some Members of this body who do not happen to be present when the order to print is made.

Mr. SMOOT. I simply want to say to the Senator that it is not a good plan to print a public document and also to load the RECORD with it. This matter, however, is a vital one and is now being considered, and for that reason I shall not object.

Mr. SIMMONS. I agree with the general rule laid down by the Senator from Utah.

There being no objection, the communication was ordered to be printed as a document and also to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

SOLICITOR'S OFFICE, STATE DEPARTMENT,
August 7, 1914.

THE TRANSFER OF MERCHANT SHIPS OF A BELLIGERENT TO A NEUTRAL AFTER THE OUTBREAK OF WAR.

CONCLUSIONS FROM THE MEMORANDUM ATTACHED.

1. Merchant ships of a belligerent may be transferred to a neutral after the outbreak of hostilities.

2. If the sale of the ship is made in good faith, without defeasance or reservation of title or interest in the vendor, without any understanding, expressed or tacit, that the vessel is to be retransferred after hostilities, and without the indicia or badges of a collusive or colorable transaction.

3. But transfer can not be made of such vessel in a blockaded port or while in transitu.

4. The transfer must be allowable under and in conformity to the municipal regulations of the country of the neutral purchaser.

5. The declaration of the London convention that transfers of an enemy vessel to a neutral during war will not be valid unless it be shown that the same was not made to evade the consequences to which an enemy vessel, as such, is exposed, if it were controlling of the question, relates only to the good faith of the transfer and not to the ulterior motives of the parties to reap the natural advantages to flow from the operation of the vessel under the flag of a country not at war, while it inverts the burden of proof of the good faith of the transaction.

THE RIGHT OF NEUTRALS TO PURCHASE MERCHANT SHIPS FROM BELLIGERENTS IN TIME OF WAR.

INTRODUCTORY.

The right of neutrals to purchase merchant ships from belligerents in time of war is based upon, and is indeed part of, the right of neutrals to continue in time of war to trade with belligerents, which right is undoubted, subject to certain exceptions, relating principally to contraband and blockade. This right to trade with belligerents is of universal recognition, although on occasions it has been denied in practice. During the Napoleonic wars the French and British Governments assumed to dictate the trade in which neutrals should be permitted to engage with the belligerents and to prohibit them from trading with belligerents altogether. But these decrees met with the firmest resistance on the part of the American Government at the time, and after the occasions which produced them had passed, the English Government was compelled to reprobate and abandon them. The commerce of neutrals should not be interrupted by the exigencies of war. The right of the citizens of a neutral country to trade in merchant vessels belonging to the citizens of a belligerent, with certain well-defined exceptions, may be said to be of well-nigh universal admission.

THE POSITION OF THE UNITED STATES.

The position of the United States on this question is historical, and, so far as my investigation has extended, has been uniform. This position may be stated as follows:

A neutral has a perfect right to purchase the merchant vessels of belligerents during a state of war, when such purchase is bona fide, without defeasance, reservation of title or interest, and intended to convey perfect and permanent title to the purchaser. This rule is subject to certain exceptions herein noted.

PRECEDENTS.

I shall now recite some of the precedents illustrating the position uniformly maintained by the United States.

1. February 19, 1856, Secretary of State Marcy to Mr. Mason:

"The principle, therefore, that a neutral has a perfect right to purchase the merchant vessels of a belligerent has been maintained by England, by Russia, and by the United States; and it is inconsistent with these historical facts to say that the contrary doctrine avowed by France has had the sanction of the chief maritime nations or that it forms part of the whole doctrine of maritime law." (Misc. Inst., France, Vol. XV, 321; see 11th Wait's State Papers, 203.)

(The position thus stated by Secretary Marcy is undoubtedly in harmony with the general English rule, but has been contested by France, where, under governmental regulations, enemy-built vessels can not be made neutral by a sale to a neutral after hostilities begin. It is also claimed that the position of Russia is in line with the French contention. But it appears that the position of Russia is correctly stated by Secretary Marcy, supra.)

Secretary of State Cass to United States consuls, Circular No. 10, June 1, 1859:

"Inquiries having been addressed to the department as to the right of a citizen of the United States to purchase the vessel of a belligerent during the present war in Europe, I have to inform you that a similar question arose during the late Crimean War and was deliberately and carefully investigated by the administration for the time being and resulted in the conviction that a vessel so purchased in good faith becomes the property of the purchaser and is entitled to the protection of the flag of the United States, though a special act of Congress would be necessary to enable her to obtain a register from the proper department. These views are entirely concurred in by the existing executive government of the United States and will be maintained whenever there may be occasion therefor."

To the same effect, Secretary Cass to Mr. Mason, June 20, 1859 (30 MS. Dom. Let., 414), and Secretary Cass to Mr. Gittings, June 24, 1859 (30 Dom. Let., 429).

The regulations referred to, supra, pointed out that the purchase, in order to be valid, must be in good faith and not a simulated purchase of vessels to be employed in hostile operations against countries with which the United States are at peace. In this connection it is safe to say that where there has been merely an outward transfer of title, as when the original owner is left in command and direction of the vessel, and the same is continued in identically the same service or trade, especially where the original owner retains, though secretly, an interest in the vessel or its operation, the sale would be treated as a mere subterfuge to screen the vessel from capture by one of the belligerents, and in such case the ostensible owner would not be entitled to the protection accorded to a vessel flying the flag of the neutral country. (Under this, see Mr. Fish, Secretary of State, to Mr. Marsh, January 29, 1877, MS. Inst., to Chile, vol. 2, p. 11.)

Boutwell, Secretary of the Treasury, to Mr. Washburne, minister to France, May 23, 1871, and sent to the Secretary of State at same time (see MS. Misc. Let.):

2. "Can a foreign vessel be purchased by a citizen of the United States?

"In reply I have to observe that the natural right to acquire property by purchase has been held by high authority to be unaffected, so far as neutrals are concerned, by the mere fact that a state of war exists between two or more powers, from the citizens or subjects of one of which the purchase is made. Such right is subject, however, to the restrictions imposed by international law, by treaty, or by the belligerent powers, respectively, as to the property of their own citizens or subjects during the existence of such war. This principle is stated by one of the former Attorneys General of the United States, as follows: 'A state of war interrupts no contract of purchase and sale, or of transportation, as between neutral and belligerent, except in articles contraband of war.'"

3. The opinion of the Attorney General referred to was that of Mr. Cushing in 1854 (6 Op. Atty. Gen., p. 638) and 1855 (7 Op. Atty. Gen., p. 538), wherein the Attorney General said:

"A citizen of the United States may purchase a ship of a belligerent power, at home or abroad, in a belligerent port, or on the high seas, provided the purchase be made bona fide and the property be passed absolutely and without reserve, and the ship so purchased becomes entitled to bear the flag and receive the protection of the United States."

4. On June 20, 1879 (Foreign Relations, 1879, p. 884), Secretary of State Evarts to Mr. Christiancy, minister to Peru, affirmed the general doctrine as above stated, but pointed out the temptations to the abuse of the right and the great danger from inconsiderate action on the part of United States consuls in facilitating such transfers, but stated that "although the validity of the transfer may in the end be judicially inquired into, much harm might result from a simulated sale before a final decision on the subject could be reached; still the possible abuse of power by a sale is not a sufficient reason for abrogating the power, especially if Congress should abstain from forbidding the purchase and use abroad of foreign-built ships by American citizens."

In a letter to Minister Christiancy, December 26, 1879 (Foreign Relations, 1879, p. 894), and in a similar instruction to the minister to Chile, Secretary Evarts again stated, amongst other things, that:

"The right of Americans to buy foreign-built vessels and to carry on commerce with them is clear and undoubted * * *. As a consequence, an adjunct of this right, that of flying the American flag, can not be prohibited. If circumstances justify, on the part of the consular officers, an opinion that the sale is honest and that the vessel has really become the property of a citizen of the United States, she may properly fly the flag of the owner's country as an indication of such ownership and as an emblem of the owner's nationality."

(In this connection he said that a ship so transferred but not registered as an American vessel was not entitled to the immunities and thorough protection accorded to registered American vessels plying between ports of the United States and those of foreign countries; that American owners domiciled abroad and engaged in business of that sort take upon themselves the risks to such traffic, and that, if seized by one of the belligerents, they have no right of diplomatic protection other than that they should be accorded fair treatment in prize courts.)

5. In reply to request for sanction of a proposed transfer of an enemy vessel to a neutral in a blockaded Cuban port in 1898 the department said, through Assistant Secretary Moore, that it would not give such desired permission or any privilege to the transfer from a belligerent to a neutral of a vessel in a blockaded port. (Mr. Moore to Messrs. Butler et al., May 10, 1898, 228 Dom. Let., 378.)

(The refusal of this request was evidently based upon the fact that the vessel intended to be transferred was at the time in a blockaded port of the Cuban Government. It will be seen that this forms an exception to the general rule as hereinbefore stated.)

6. In this same connection the case of the Benito Estenger (176 U. S., 568) is valuable as illustrating the general principle stated. In that case Chief Justice Fuller said:

"Transfer of vessels flagrante bello were originally held invalid, but the rule has been modified and is thus given by Mr. Hall, who, stating that in France their sale is forbidden and are declared to be prize in all cases in which they have been transferred to neutrals after the buyers could have knowledge of the outbreak of war, says: 'In England and the United States the right to purchase vessels is in principle admitted, they being in themselves legitimate objects of trade as fully as any other kind of merchandise, but the practice of fraud being great, the circumstances attending a sale are severely scrutinized and the transfer is not held to be good if it is subjected to any condition or tacit understanding by which the vendor keeps an interest in the vessel or its profits, control over it, and power of revocation, or a right to its restoration at the conclusion of war.'"

He cites Justice Story on Principles and Practice of Prize Courts, who states:

"In respect to the transfer of enemy's ships during war it is certain that purchases of them by neutrals are not in general illegal, but are liable to great suspicions, and if good proof be not given of their validity by bill of sale and payment of a reasonable consideration it will materially impair the validity of a neutral claim; and if after such transfer the ship be employed habitually in the enemy's trade or under the management of a hostile proprietor the sale will be deemed merely colorable and collusive."

(The Chief Justice cites several English cases, which are valuable on the question of fraudulent and colorable transfers.)

7. The Russian Prize Regulations of March 27, 1895, section 7 (Foreign Relations, 1904, p. 736), prescribe that merchant vessels acquired from the hostile power, or its subjects, by persons of neutral nationality are acknowledged to be hostile vessels, unless it is proven that the acquisition must be considered according to the laws of the nation to whom the purchaser belongs as having actually taken place before the purchaser received news of the declaration of war, or that the vessels acquired in the manner mentioned, although after the receipt of such news, were acquired conscientiously and not for the purpose of covering hostile property.

8. I find no citation of any American precedent or authority which denounces the general doctrine of the right of a neutral to purchase the vessel of a belligerent in time of war, where such purchase is made in good faith and is not subject to the charge that it was colorable or collusive only.

AUTHORITIES ON INTERNATIONAL LAW.

1. Oppenheim's International Law (p. 206), discussing this question, says:

"Since many vessels are liable to capture, the question must be taken into consideration whether the fact that an enemy vessel has been sold during war to a subject of a neutral or to a subject of the belligerent State whose forces seized her has the effect of excluding her appropriation. It is obvious that if the question is answered in the affirmative, the owners of enemy vessels can evade the danger of having their property captured by selling their vessels. There is no general rule of international law which answered this question. The rule ought to be that, since commerce between belligerent subjects and neutral subjects is not at all prohibited through the outbreak of war, a bona fide sale of enemy property should have the effect of freeing such vessels from appropriation, as they are in fact no longer enemy property. But the practice among the States varies. Thus France does not recognize any such sale after the outbreak of war. On the other hand, the practice of Great Britain and the United States of America recognizes such sales, provided they are made bona fide and the new owner has actually taken possession of the sold vessel. If the sale was contracted in transitu, the vessel having started her voyage as an enemy vessel, the sale is not recognized when the vessel is detained on her voyage before the new owner has taken actual possession of her."

(The attempted sale of a vessel in transitu seems to form another exception to the rule permitting the sale of enemy vessels to neutrals. This and the other exception of an attempted sale of an enemy vessel in a blockaded port appear to constitute the two principal exceptions.)

2. Halleck's International Law (vol. 2, p. 93), discussing the subject, says:

"The transfer, in time of war, of the vessel of an enemy to a neutral is a transaction, from its very nature, liable to strong suspicion and consequently is examined with a jealous vigilance and subjected to rules of peculiar strictness in the prize court of an opposite belligerent. Nevertheless, neutrals have a right to make such purchases of merchant vessels, when they act with good faith, and the belligerent powers are not justified, by the law of nations, in attempting to prohibit such transfer by a sweeping interdiction, as was done in former years by the French and English Governments. Ordinances of this character form no part of the law of nations and consequently are not binding upon the prize courts, even of the country by which they are issued. Nevertheless, where the sale is claimed to have been made by an enemy to a neutral in time of war it is not unreasonable that these motives and terms should be an object of searching inquiry. Hence courts of admiralty have established severe rules respecting such transfers."

(He states these rules to be in substance: The sale must be absolute and unconditional: the title and interest of the vendor must be completely and absolutely divested; if there is a covenant, agreement, or tacit understanding by which he retains any proof of his interest, the contract is vitiated and in international law is regarded as void. He points out various instances in which a sale would be considered as colorable only.)

3. Fillimore's International Law, volume 3, page 735, says:

"In respect to the transfers of enemy ships during war, it is certain that purchases of them by neutrals are not in general illegal; but such purchases are liable to great suspicion; and if good proof be not given of their validity by bill of sale and payment of a reasonable consideration, it will materially impair the validity of the neutral claim; and if the purchase be made by an agent, his letters of procuration must be produced and proved; and if, after such transfer, the ship be employed habitually in the enemy's trade, or under the management of a hostile proprietor, the sale will be deemed merely colorable."

He quotes the privy council in 1857 as follows:

"The general rule is open to no doubt. A neutral, while a war is imminent, or after it has commenced, is at liberty to purchase either goods or ships (not being ships of war) from either belligerent, and the purchase is valid, whether the subject of it be lying in a neutral port or in an enemy's port. During a time of peace, without prospect of war, any transfer sufficient to transfer the property between the vendor and vendee is good; also against a captor if war afterwards unexpectedly breaks out. But in case of war, either actual or imminent, this rule is subject to qualification, and it is stated that in such case a mere transfer by documents, which would be sufficient to bind the parties, is not sufficient to change the property as against captors as long as the ship or goods remains in transitu."

LONDON CONVENTION OF 1909.

The London convention (which was not ratified by the signatory powers and becomes valuable only as indicative of the disposition of the several Governments) confirms rather than denies the position herein maintained.

Article 56 of the convention is as follows:

"The transfer of an enemy vessel to a neutral flag affected after the outbreak of hostilities is void unless it is proved that such transfer was not made in order to evade the consequences to which an enemy vessel, as such, is exposed.

"Provided that there is an absolute presumption that a transfer is void—

"(1) If the transfer has been made during a voyage or in a blockaded port.

"(2) If a right to repurchase or recover the vessel is reserved to the vendor.

"(3) If the requirements of the municipal law governing the right to fly the flag under which the vessel is sailing have not been fulfilled."

The effect of this article would be merely to change the burden of proof by reversing the presumption of the bona fides of the sale and specifying certain conditions under which the sale would be conclusively presumed to be void. But this article does not change the general rule which I have asserted, to wit that the sale of a belligerent vessel to a neutral in time of war is valid where such sale is made in good faith and divests all title and interest of the vendor. In this connection the report of the drafting committee of the convention is instructive. Of this article it said:

"The rule respecting transfer made after the outbreak of hostilities is more simple. Such a transfer is only valid if it is proved that its object was not to evade the consequences to which the enemy vessel is exposed. The rule accepted in respect to transfers made before the outbreak of hostilities is inverted. In that case there is a presumption that the transfer is valid; in the present that it is void, provided always that proof to the contrary may be given. For instance, it might be proved that the transfer had taken place by inheritance."

In this same connection attention is directed to the report to their Government by the British delegates to the convention respecting the work of the convention. Referring to this article they said:

"The provisions respecting transfers made during war are less complicated. The general rule is that such transfers are considered void unless it be proved that they were not made with a view to evade the consequences which the retention of enemy nationality would entail. This is only another way of stating the principle already explained that transfers effected after the outbreak of hostilities are good if made bona fide, but that it is for the owners of the vessels transferred to prove such bona fides. The provisions under this head are practically in accord with the rules hitherto enforced by British prize courts."

From all of which it will appear that the declaration of the London convention on the question of the transfer of merchant vessels from a belligerent to a neutral flag, but restates the position long maintained by the United States, Great Britain, and most of the other maritime nations, except as to the burden of proof of the bona fides of such a transfer made during the existence of war. It is the bona fides of the sale which is the essence of a good transfer, and it is not perceived that the ulterior motive actuating the parties to the transfer is to govern, though such motive may have been the natural advantages in having the ship to fly the flag of a neutral rather than that of a country at war. If the transfer was bona fide, without defeasance or reservation of title or interest, without any understanding that the vessel should be retransferred at the end of hostilities, and without other indicia of a simulated or fictitious transfer, and not of a ship in a blockaded port or in transitu, the transfer is valid under international law, as it would be under the London convention, though the ulterior motive of the vendor and vendee may have been the natural advantages of flying the flag of a country at peace.

This memorandum is hurriedly struck off and I have not had time or opportunity to revise it; but it is believed that it correctly presents the status of the question involved.

CONE JOHNSON.

WOMEN IN WAR.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, the New York World of last Friday contained a very interesting and illuminating editorial, entitled "Women in War." Some of the conclusions drawn by the author of this article are so evident and so thoroughly in opposition to the shop-worn argument against woman suffrage, that in time of war woman can not and does not bear any of its burdens, I ask that it be read from the desk, it being very short.

There being no objection, the Secretary read as follows:

[From the New York World, August 8, 1914.]

WOMEN IN WAR.

Doubtless the farm women of France did not require the spur of Premier Viviani's appeal to them to "complete the work of gathering the crops left unfinished by the men who have been called to arms." The women of Paris have taken up so far as they could the work of the menfolk who had to go to the front, and in rural France the women are full partners of the men in farm management. What the women of the Balkans did they will be prompt to do.

This work the nation is glad enough to have them perform for its defense; of course they can not fight, as they will be reminded if they ever ask for the ballot. That is the final argument against votes for women. Yet is not gathering the crops as important for national safety as service on the firing line? It is still true, as Napoleon said, that an army travels on its belly; and God is on the side of the full granaries equally with the strongest battalions.

There is the Amazonian precedent for women warriors, and there have been war queens from Boadicea on; yet it is improbable enough that women will ever take a material part in the actual fighting of battles. But with every advance they make in industry, with every proof they give of their ability to do man's work of peace, they weaken the traditional argument against their fitness for the ballot. If they can not participate in campaigns as soldiers, they make it possible for men to do so.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, in January of this year I ventured to address the Senate, and during the course of my remarks I referred to the enormous loss of human life and the destruction of property consequent upon war. I ask that the following paragraph from that speech may be read at the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator desire the article read or printed in the RECORD?

Mr. ASHURST. I should like to have it read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

"Twenty years hence, when the muse of history shall come to write of the magnitude of the social revolution and of the changing of the old order which is occurring in our Nation now, but which we do not see because it is so near us, it will then be pointed out that woman suffrage was made a part of our American system because for centuries governments had been going to war without asking the consent of the women who furnished the sons who, after the carnage of battle, are heaped into a trench in 'one red burial blent.'

"The waste of all governments through war is world-wide. Through war and its related agencies the taxes of the world are about double what they were in 1896.

"Through militarism the world is living beyond its means and is borrowing the means of the coming generations.

"Since the formation of our Federal Union, in 1787, for each dollar that as a Nation we have paid out for promoting the arts of peace, the development of agriculture and the mechanical sciences, for the facilitation of internal trade and intercourse, and for the diffusion of knowledge, we have paid out $700 for the purpose of military aggression or defense.

"On February 12, 1849, the Committee on Agriculture of the House of Representatives submitted a report indorsing the views of the Secretary of the Treasury, together with a bill creating a new department of the Government to be known as the Department of the Interior, and in support of the bill the report, among other things, stated as follows:

"The general fact remains unaffected that war and preparations for war have been regarded as the chief duty and end of this Government, while the arts of peace and production whereby nations are subsisted, civilization advanced, and happiness secured have been esteemed unworthy the attention or foreign to the objects of this Government. It seems to us that this should not always continue, but that we should, as a wise people, reorganize the Government so far as to fulfill these duties also, which are suggested by the nature, aspirations, and wants of our race as physical, moral, and intellectual beings; that it should do something toward protecting the people against those internal enemies—ignorance, destitution, and vice—as well as against those foreign foes who may invade or who it is apprehended may assail us.

"The pen of the future historian will point out that the women of the world became weary of passing through the valley of the shadow of death, bearing sons as a bloody sacrifice to the Moloch of war. If their sons are to be thus sacrificed, they demand that they shall have a voice as to when war shall be declared.

"'But,' say some persons with fertile and winged imagination, 'women do not go to war; hence they should have no voice in determining the matter.' The conclusion is not well founded, for female courage, female patriotism, and female influence are a 'war power,' or, rather, are just as much sinews of war at times as are ball cartridges. I reply that women do the work of the Red Cross and the hospital, and frequently the heavier and more important work which the men leave behind them. Their patriotism is just as virile, their devotion to country just as unswerving, as that of the men. History records many instances of the bravery, daring, dauntless courage, and prowess of women on the battlefield."

LEASE OF MINERAL LANDS.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, I have here a short article published in Mining Science upon a subject that is engaging the attention of the other House of Congress, and which will unquestionably be taken up in this body at some time, perhaps at the next session, relating to leasing the natural resources of the public domain. It is a very able article by Mr. Chester T. Kennan, mining engineer, who lives in a locality close to where some of the mineral resources of Colorado are being developed, and who has given a great deal of study to this very important question. I ask unanimous consent that it be incorporated as a part of the RECORD.

There being no objection, the matter referred to was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

PREDATORY BUREAUCRATS AND THE LEASING SYSTEM.

(Chester T. Kennan, M. E.)

No system of true conservation or good government requires that our citizens be made tenantry of a governmental landlord.

The land and natural resources alone make possible industrial and commercial existence of the individual State; they constitute its first capital and stock in trade, upon which it must conduct its business and development and maintain a government "republican in form," as required by its act of admission as a State.

The right of taxation is so necessary and fundamental that a sovereign State without it can not continue. To the latter imperative end, and to place the new States on an equal footing with the original States, and to provide that ours be a Nation of home owners, it has been this Nation's policy from the beginning to pass the public lands and national resources into private ownership, private control, and private development.

It is the plain duty of every citizen to assert, and the courts to maintain, the sovereignty of the State in conformity with that article of the Federal Constitution which provides that "the powers not delegated to the United States by the Constitution, nor prohibited by it to the States, are reserved to the States, respectively, or to the people." It is, therefore, the manifest right of every citizen to demand government by the people rather than by bureaus of the Central Government; and in so far as the constitutional power of regulation in these respects is vested in the several States it is fundamental and imperative that it be not divested or invaded.

The acts of Congress admitting the public-land States to the Union contain the declarations which are taken from the ordinance of July 13, 1787, including the following provision: "The State of ——— shall be one and is hereby declared to be one of the United States of America, and admitted into the Union on an equal footing with the original States in all respects whatever."

It is also provided in such acts of admission of new States that "they shall never lay any tax or assessment of any description whatever upon the public domain."

Neither the United States nor any State has the power to do any act or pass any law which will create inequality between the States, and any attempt on the part of either to do so is void and of no effect, ab initio. (39 Fed. Rep., 730; 9 Peters, 224; 15 Peters, 449; 104 U. S., 621; 146 U. S., 387; 152 U. S., 387; 164 U. S., 240; 168 U. S., 349; 176 U. S., 83, 87; 187 U. S., 479, 483; 190 U. S., 508, 519; 198 U. S., 371; 198 Fed. Rep., 539.)

The United States alone has no power to create unequal States by Executive act, by law of Congress, or by judicial interpretation of those laws, and all of such attempts are void. (198 Fed. Rep., 539.)

In 1845 the United States Supreme Court, in the case of Pollard's lessee v. Hagan (3 How., 212), decided and laid down as fundamental law of the land "that the transaction between the United States and Virginia and Georgia and the Louisiana Purchase constituted a contract and created a trust, under which the United States secured control of the public lands to pay the public debts by bona fide disposing of them in order that new States might be erected, which should be equal in every respect to the original States; that the United States holds the lands for temporary purposes only, and in trust for the States where they lie; and that until the lands were disposed of by the United States the new State was not on a footing of equality with the original States.

As late as May, 1911, the United States Supreme Court, in the case of Coyle v. Oklahoma (221 U. S., 559), quotes the above case of Pollard's Lessee v. Hagan with approval and reaffirms the perfect equality of the State in relation to the United States.

The United States Government holds the public domain in trust (not in fee). What each citizen, therefore, owns in the public domain is his right to acquire a segment of it if he chooses so to do. Congress has no power to authorize the Central Government to seize the title in fee and perpetuity and rent the lands to the people.

The status of our public-land system now is, and always has been, that the Central Government holds the public domain temporarily and in trust, to be erected into sovereign States upon an equal footing with the original States in every respect; to afford equal opportunity to every citizen to acquire a home; and to be disposed of at nominal prices to private ownership, in order that the Central Government might, as speedily as possible, retire as a landlord from the several States. The people have always emphasized that the Government should not hold the public lands, even in trust, any longer than absolutely necessary to systematically and equitably pass them to private ownership. The day has long gone by when it was thought right or justifiable that the king, government, ruling classes, or bureaucrats should own and control the land in perpetuity and rent it to the people.

Under this beneficent, enlightened democratic land system we have reared the leading and most progressive Nation of the world.

The bureaucrats, or "conservationists"—under the latter alias they seem to prefer to operate—now demand that our established system of land tenure be subverted, and our form of government in a vital principle revolutionized.

They are now conjuring Uncle Sam to be a traitor to his trust, to embezzle the "trust fund," to become the most royal, selfish landlord this world has ever witnessed, to seize soil within the States in perpetuity, free from taxation, to rent the land to his tenant vassals, to deny public-land States equality with the original States, to destroy their sovereignty, make them provinces, and draw a line around the western third of the United States and denominate it on the map, "Ireland of America—doomed forever to fight for 'home rule.'"

Manifestly, their scheme is not progressive, but reactionary at least 1,000 years.

Any form of conservation which fails to take into account the rights and needs of the present generation evidently does not cover the whole field and has no place in this country.

True conservation may be defined as the least practicable waste consistent with the greatest practicable use.

Conservation is a technical and scientific subject, while the ownership and passing of title to the public land is a political and sociological subject, and the two have no necessary connection; yet, while sailing under the fair banner of "conservation," our bureaucrats have attempted to create and take over to themselves the most gigantic land monopoly this world has ever witnessed—already having under their control in forest reserves, withdrawals, etc., near 200,000,000 acres, an area greater than many kingdoms of Europe combined.

An example of true conservation is presented by the management of our great stockyards, where every conceivable part of the slaughtered animal is saved and placed to a fitting use. The great modern coal-coking plants and large petroleum refineries are striking examples of conservation, by saving a vast number of by-products that would otherwise be wasted or not placed to their most valuable use. Every advance in metallurgical processes which enables us to more cheaply extract metals from their ores and thereby utilize lower grades of ore at a profit is a long step in the field of true conservation. Life-saving and labor-saving devices and the protection of property from destruction and waste by fire are legitimate and worthy forms of conservation.

But unmindful of the truism so pertinently expressed by President Wilson, that "conservation is not reservation," our bureaucrats have practically ignored conservation and devoted all their energies to reservation, seeking to reserve under their own control all the public domain and its natural resources as against the public-land States and the people, until we are now burdened with the omnipresent forest reserves, park reserves, military reserves, naval reserves, coal reserves, water-power reserves, missionary reserves, Government reserves, school reserves, bird reserves, and archæological reserves, and then they withdrew practically all the balance of the desirable lands from market under the pretense of "classification"; and now they are introducing bills in Congress to accomplish their final coup d'etat by having the Government seize title to the public domain in fee and perpetuity, and lease it to the people, the bureaucrats at last firmly in the saddle as administrators of the grand feudal empire.

During the sinister progress of this long-drawn-out campaign for bureaucratic autocracy the musty air of medieval tyranny has become ever thicker and more suffocating to western nostrils, consistently with their purpose, the most strenuous effort of the bureaucrats have been exerted to retain the public domain in a state of nature, to prevent development, and to prevent the public lands from passing to private ownership until such time as they could prevail upon Congress to have the central government seize the public domain in fee and rent it to the people and make the bureaucrats administrators of the vast estate.

What coterie of politicians, pray, would not like to be administrators of such vast empire, with power, salaries, perquisites, patronage, and opportunities for graft unlimited?

While each State has all the power to suppress or destroy monopoly within its borders that the central government has within its sphere, yet while striving to create the greatest land monopoly that ever existed, the most popular slogan of the bureaucrats has been that only their plan could prevent monopoly of the public domain. Even if we had no special statutes in this behalf, monopoly could be suppressed or destroyed under the common law of England.

Would it not be timely and apropos for our lawmakers at Washington now, while they have their hands in at investigating and dissolving "trusts," to investigate this one, the greatest and most noxious of them all—the public-domain trust of the United States—now hatching on the floors of Congress?

There appears to be no limit to the legislative power of these autocrats of the bureaus. They boldly occupy the "twilight zone" between State rights and the rights and powers of the central government; and to enforce their bureau-made laws have inaugurated a reign of terrorism in the Western States through an organized army of many thousands of men, including forest rangers, petty officers, mineral examiners, general solicitors, special solicitors, attorneys, press agents, statisticians, common spies, muckrakers, lecturers, detectives, secret-service agents, affidavit gleaners, collectors of rents and bills and royalties, star-chamber courts, etc. While we are compelled to admit that the spy system of our bureaus is now the finest in all the world—not even that of Turkey or Russia excepted—in simple justice to the American people we are gratified to state that the people are not proud of it. We are bowed down with humiliation and shame that such a glaring example of monstrous tyranny and oppression has gained a foothold on American soil.

We should not now turn our backs upon our enlightened form of government, and, at the bidding of these purely political "conservationists" for gain, retrace our steps to feudal times and conditions. We should not drift from the principle of encouraging the individual, the small owner, and the home, but if occasionally there are abuses, or men file upon land wrongfully, let the individual case be punished under the established laws of the land.

Under the leasing system we would have the feudal condition of a portion of our citizens being freeholders and freemen and another portion being tenantry and serfs of the ruling landlord. We would then have on American soil the political spectacle of one portion of our citizens paying taxes to maintain an ancient form of government over another portion.

The Western States hold that it is the just prerogative of each State in the Union to adopt such system of true conservation of the resources within its borders as may best suit the needs and purposes of its people, exercising therein such practical economy in behalf of future generations as may by each State be deemed wise and provident.

As an illustration Gov. Ammons has well pointed out that the leasing system would mean, in effect, that Colorado would ultimately pay into the Federal Treasury on coal alone, figuring the present highest rate of royalty, the enormous tax of $37,100,000,000, while it would pay annually on water power alone, when fully developed, twice as much as it now collects in State taxes for all purposes.

The people realize and keenly appreciate that there is a wide distinction between the act of two citizens equal under the law making a contract of lease between themselves and the ruling landlord, who is also the lawmaker, contracting or forcing a contract with his tribute payer under the law. It is a luminous fact in history familiar to all that whenever a government and its officials became vested with the resources of the people and their opportunities to make a living, the people were no longer free and that form of government was doomed to eventual, if not speedy, wreck.

The experiment of governing people through the soil has been often tried, but never with ultimate success—the man who says it should now be tried, whatever he may call himself, is a socialist, pure and simple; but he is too late with his doctrine in this country, unless he proposes that Uncle Sam seize the title in fee to the whole area of the United States and lease it all, so that we shall all be on an equal footing. Abraham Lincoln said: "Tell the people the truth, and the Nation is safe."

THE COTTON CROP.

Mr. RANSDELL. I have received from Mr. W. B. Thompson, of New Orleans, a very interesting telegram in reference to the cotton-crop situation, which I ask to have printed in the RECORD without reading.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I am not going to object to the telegram presented by the Senator from Louisiana being printed in the RECORD, but I wish to give notice to the Senate now that the practice of filling the RECORD each morning with every kind of telegram and every kind of articles from newspapers has become an absolute evil. I pick up the RECORD of this morning and I find that 14,753 pages have been printed at this session of Congress. I think this practice ought to be stopped; it is wrong. I think it is not only an absolute waste of Government money, but it does the country no good.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, the Senator from Utah is more familiar with this matter than is any other Senator, inasmuch as he has been at the head of the Printing Committee. I ask the Senator about what has been the average number of pages of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD in former sessions of Congress?

Mr. SMOOT. We have hardly ever exceeded 6,000 pages.

Mr. GALLINGER. And there are how many pages now?

Mr. SMOOT. Fourteen thousand seven hundred and fifty-three. Before this session is closed there will be 16,000 pages of the RECORD.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I sympathize with what the Senator from Utah has said. I have called attention to the same matter on various occasions, but I have discontinued entering my protests, for the reason that it seems to be the policy of Congress to load down the RECORD with every conceivable article that can be found on pretty much every conceivable subject. Of course, I would not object to the printing in the RECORD of the article which the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. RANSDELL] presents, because other articles have gone in this morning, but I do think we ought to come to the conclusion that it is a bad practice.

Mr. RANSDELL. Mr. President, I think the suggestions made by the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] and the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER] are wise; I believe the RECORD is sometimes encumbered with matter that ought not to go into it; but that is not true of the article I have presented. It is an article which was prepared by one of the ablest cotton men of the South. It was presented at two or three conferences of our southern cotton people, who are trying to handle the situation, which affects not only the South but the entire Nation. If we lose two or three hundred million dollars on our cotton the Nation is going to be affected by the loss.

This morning I received requests in the mail for copies of this article. It is a very able article by one of the great men of this country. It is not very long and it will not encumber the RECORD. It is going to furnish meat and wisdom to those who are interested in the subject of cotton, and I hope there will be no objection to its being printed in the RECORD.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, as I have said, I am not going to object to the article being printed in the RECORD, but I want to say that I do not think it is going to save us one hundred or two hundred million dollars.

Mr. RANSDELL. It is going to help to do it.

Mr. SMOOT. Of course it encumbers the RECORD according to its length, and no more; but this morning I suppose there have been already at least a dozen or fifteen such communications put in the RECORD, which means the filling of many of its pages.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, will the Senator from Utah permit an interruption there?

Mr. SMOOT. I certainly will.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I want to say, in addition to what the Senator from Utah has mentioned as to the vast increase of the volume of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, that this practice consumes the greater part of the morning hour, which ought to be devoted to the consideration of resolutions and bills, and, if possible, also to the consideration of the calendar. It works evil in both directions.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I fully agree with the Senator.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the printing in the RECORD of the article presented by the Senator from Louisiana? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

[Telegram.]

NEW ORLEANS, August 5, 1914.

Hon. JOS. E. RANSDELL,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

The cotton crop will soon be moving in volume. It is imperative that these supplies be held off the market until some plan can be put into operation for taking care of the proportion which under normal conditions would be exported for foreign consumption. If the crop is moved to market even in normal volume, the effect will be disastrous, because on account of conditions abroad the demand will be only about one-half of the normal. In such case the spinners who can operate will not buy except on the bargain basis, which is certain to obtain if cotton is freely offered for sale. The sure result of such conditions would be an abnormal and extraordinary profit to those spinners who could manufacture goods and a cruel and unnecessary impoverishment of the farmer. The remedy must be applied not after the movement to market has begun, but before. It must be applied now.

It therefore follows that the initial step in any plan of relief must be an insistent and compelling appeal directed to the cotton producers and merchants, urging them and warning them not to offer cotton for sale for the time being, but to hold back at all costs until opportunity has been given to perfect measures for permanent relief.

I take it that the Federal Government is not only willing, but anxious to employ its resources in support of any legitimate and feasible plan for preventing the sectional and national calamity which would follow the sale of the cotton crop under panic conditions. Positively the only way to avert this catastrophe is to summarily shrink the supply of cotton in the same proportion that demand has been summarily curtailed. This adjustment can not be accomplished, except by segregating the artificially created surplus and putting the world on notice that such proportion of the crop is not for sale until demand increases sufficiently to absorb it for the needs of actual consumption. But this segregation of supplies can not be accomplished unless there shall be a corresponding increase in the supply of funds to carry the surplus through the abnormal period. Under present conditions the banking resources of the South are inadequate for this purpose. The resources of the Government are entirely adequate.

It therefore follows that the second step in the plan must be to secure the promise of the governmental authority that it will make it possible for the financial institutions of the South to provide themselves with whatever money may be required to hold the surplus of the crop in suspension, which sum will be under $300,000,000. It will not be necessary for the Government to give anybody anything. Neither the Government nor the banks need lose one dollar in the transactions which will save the cotton producer of the South. All that is necessary is for the volume of money available to be sufficient to take care of all the good cotton business offered upon proper margin. There need be no change whatever in the principles upon which the cotton business has been conducted. The only difference will be that the amount of money invested in cotton loans will be larger, in order that the increased requirements of the producer may be accommodated. The fact that baled cotton is not perishable and does not deteriorate with time makes it an ideal security.

In my opinion all discussion of methods involving direct application of governmental aid is an utter waste of time. I mean that any scheme whereby the Government will take hold of the crop surplus and finance it is wholly impracticable. It is impossible to concentrate this proportion of the crop, and without such concentration such holdings could not be handled by the Government, either as an asset or as collateral. Any plan of so-called Government valorization of a commodity scattered throughout the South is visionary and futile. No plan, unless it be based upon sound business principles, will serve the purpose. The only safe and workable plan is for the Government to give its aid to the end that our financial institutions shall be supplied with adequate funds, which they shall distribute in loans upon good cotton security intelligently selected and in accord with sound business principles.

But even though the Government should be willing to lend its aid, the plan would not be to the full extent effective unless the owners of cotton availed themselves of the facilities. It would profit little to devise a plan whereby the surplus of the crop might be carried if the owners of this surplus or of a considerable proportion of it should, either through ignorance or unreasoning fear, precipitate their holdings upon the market. When the plan is devised it is imperative that the beneficiaries should be fully advised thereof, in order that cooperation would be secured. In order to take care of the present situation and avert the impending crisis the farmers must hold back their cotton, and in order that they may do this consistently it is necessary that they be fully apprised of the situation and of the relief measures that have been adopted. The plan of salvation must be brought vividly to their attention, and an intelligent appeal must be made for their cooperation.

I think, therefore, that the third step in this plan should be to call at the earliest possible moment a conference of the governors of the several cotton-producing States, together with representative planters, merchants, and bankers. Such a convention held at this time for the purpose in view would attract the attention of the cotton-producing South. From this conference should issue a definite pronouncement, setting forth the conditions as they exist in fact and not in excited imagination, and promulgating the relief plan through which and by cooperation of all concerned the situation may be saved. I know of no better way of informing the farmers of the truth, impressing them with the necessity of concerted holding of this crop, and reassuring them as to the feasibility and results of such action.

In my opinion, the situation is by no means hopeless, but, on the contrary, susceptible of profitable solution, provided it is handled intelligently and with sudden vigor. Approximately 7,000,000 bales must be withdrawn from the market just as completely and to the same extent as the demand for that number of bales has been summarily curtailed. An available supply of $35 or $40 per bale, or a total of from $250,000,000 to $275,000,000 would be the maximum necessary to fully accomplish the purpose on a perfectly safe business basis. This sum would not be required at one time. I do not think near this amount. In addition to the available resources of our banking institutions, would be required, especially if it were positively known to the world that the American cotton farmer was prepared to hold and intended to hold all his cotton that was not needed by the operating mills. I believe that on this basis the approximately 7,000,000 bales of the coming crop needed by the American and Canadian mills would sell not at panic prices but at commercial value, which, if the other 7,000,000 bales not presently needed should be eliminated from sale, would be around 13 cents. Then as the situation cleared the withheld surplus could be disposed of in orderly movement and at adequate prices on the basis of supply feeding and not overfeeding demand. But to bring about this result we must have action from our leaders, swift and determined. Above all, the instant necessity requires that cotton be not offered for sale on the present market. This is the day of quick action. The cotton South must be mobilized.

W. B. THOMPSON.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Mr. President, while the discussion along this line is proceeding, I think it might be well for me to call attention to a telegram which I think was read into the RECORD a few moments ago, at the request of the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BRANDEGEE], which absolutely misstates the conditions so far as the facts are concerned which are set forth in it. I refer to the telegram addressed to the junior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. OLIVER], and presented by the Senator from Connecticut, urging that an amendment, which it denominates the Saulsbury amendment, admitting foreign-built ships to American coastwise trade shall be defeated, because of the great injury it is going to do.

As I bear the name of Saulsbury and am the only Member of the Senate of that name, I wish to state that, as a matter of fact, I have never submitted an amendment of that character at all. The RECORD of Saturday's proceedings itself shows I stated that the amendment did not admit foreign-built ships to the coastwise trade, but only admitted them to trade in coastwise commerce when they were engaged in a voyage requiring the passage through the Panama Canal; yet we have the RECORD encumbered by such telegrams as this, misstating the actual facts and misstating the position taken by Members of this body. That statement was made by me on Saturday, and yet, this morning, we have telegrams—this is from Philadelphia, but I have received a number of them myself—and a number of letters of various kinds attacking that particular amendment, assuming that its purport was as stated in the Philadelphia telegram. It does seem to me that such things are entirely unnecessary.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will not ask the Senator at this time clearly and succinctly to explain precisely what his amendment does contemplate; but I know that there is a general impression abroad that it goes beyond the so-called Jones amendment. When the bill is up for consideration I shall ask the Senator to state, for my information as well as the information of other Senators, just what his amendment contemplates.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Mr. President, while the matter is up it may save time—and I do not want to consume the time of the Senate uselessly—if I make a statement. The only difference between the Jones amendment and the amendment offered by me is that vessels traveling through the Panama Canal might touch at ports on either coast, down and up, to discharge or take on cargo from any port on the Atlantic coast for another Atlantic port, or to take on cargo from an Atlantic port to the Pacific coast. That is the only distinction, and the voyage on which the vessel is engaged must be through the Panama Canal.

Mr. GALLINGER. That is, foreign-built vessels?

Mr. SAULSBURY. Foreign-built vessels; yes. I may say further that in the amendment it is expressly provided that such foreign-built vessels shall not be employed in the coastwise trade of the United States unless they be employed on such a voyage.

FREDERICK J. ERNST.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives, disagreeing to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 4405) for the relief of Frederick J. Ernst, and requesting a conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. BRYAN. I move that the Senate insist upon its amendments, agree to the conference asked for by the House, the conferees on the part of the Senate to be appointed by the Chair.

The motion was agreed to; and the Vice President appointed Mr. BRYAN, Mr. WHITE, and Mr. STERLING conferees on the part of the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Morning business is closed.

REGISTRY OF FOREIGN-BUILT VESSELS.

Mr. O'GORMAN. I ask that the emergency-shipping bill be laid before the Senate.

There being no objection, the Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 18202) to provide for the admission of foreign-built ships to American registry for the foreign trade, and for other purposes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The pending amendment is the amendment proposed by the Senator from Delaware [Mr. SAULSBURY], which the Secretary will read.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Mr. President, I desire to offer an amendment in lieu of the one proposed, as in many respects the objects of that amendment were satisfied by the Jones amendment, which has been adopted. I therefore ask leave to withdraw that amendment, and I offer the one which I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to insert, on page 3, line 7, after the word "thereof," the words "whose stock is likewise owned by citizens of the United States," so that if amended it will read:

SEC. 4132. Vessels built within the United States and belonging wholly to citizens thereof; and vessels which may be captured in war by citizens of the United States and lawfully condemned as prize, or which may be adjudged to be forfeited for a breach of the laws of the United States; and seagoing vessels, whether steam or sail, which have been certified by the Steamboat-Inspection Service as safe to carry dry and perishable cargo, wherever built, which are to engage only in trade with foreign countries or with the Philippine Islands and the islands of Guam and Tutuila, being wholly owned by citizens of the United States or corporations organized and chartered under the laws of the United States or of any State thereof whose stock is likewise owned by citizens of the United States, the president and managing directors of which shall be citizens of the United States, and no others, may be registered as directed in this title, etc.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Mr. President, the object of this amendment is that which I and those who have been with me in the amendments which have been offered heretofore have been seeking—to make the foreign-built vessels which shall be registered as vessels of the United States the bona fide property of the citizens of the United States.

The law as it stands at present would permit the holding of a large part, and possibly nearly all, of the capital invested in such vessels by nonresidents of the United States, by citizens of a belligerent from whom the vessel has been purchased, by our own citizens continuing to hold the actual property in the vessel through the stock ownership of an American corporation holding the vessel itself. It has been our thought that that might produce disagreeable complications, to say the least, with respect to the belligerent nations. The effort which I am making is to provide that our own people—American citizens—shall own these vessels which we admit to registry, and which have been purchased from a foreign nation in this time of war.

Our laws are very strict regarding the ownership of foreign-built vessels admitted to American registry and regarding our own vessels which are built in the United States. They must be owned by citizens of the United States. No citizen of a foreign country can have the slightest interest in them. Why we should allow a possible subterfuge to be worked by the ownership of an American corporation which is itself owned by citizens of a foreign country I can not see. I do not know why there should be any objection to this amendment. I have reduced the differences between those who have taken part in this debate to the very narrowest limits.

Mr. WEST. Mr. President——

Mr. SAULSBURY. If the Senator will pardon me, I will yield to him with pleasure in just one moment. If those who have the management of the bill can accept this amendment and then make section 4142 apply as it should to section 4132, I do not think there will be any difficulty, because all the other objects that we have sought have been practically accomplished by amendments which have been adopted.

I call the attention of the Senator from New York to the provisions of section 4142 of the Revised Statutes, which should be made to comply with this amended section, at any rate.

I now yield, with pleasure, to the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. WEST. Mr. President, are ships of this character to be used in foreign trade alone, or are they to be used in both foreign and coastwise trade?

Mr. SAULSBURY. Under the amendment which has been adopted, proposed by the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES], foreign-built ships with American registry, as the amendment now stands, may be admitted to the interconstal trade—that is, trade between the Atlantic and Pacific—but to none other. There is no other provision for admitting these vessels into the coastwise trade.

I do not know that the amendment requires any further explanation than that which I have given of it. Its object would seem to be manifest. It is to have our own citizens own our boats.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I should like to make an inquiry of the Senator. Apparently, now, no corporation organized under the laws of the United States, or any of the United States, will be able to register a vessel unless all of its stock is owned by citizens of the United States.

Mr. SAULSBURY. That would be the case if this amendment should be adopted. May I call the Senator's attention to the present provisions of our laws, and how strict they are?

Mr. WALSH. I am familiar with them.

Mr. SAULSBURY. The Senator is familiar with section 4142, requiring affidavits to be made?

Mr. WALSH. Yes. Is the Senator able to tell us whether there is any other nation on earth that has requirements so stringent as these, namely, that refuses registry to a ship owned by a corporation any of whose stock, even one share, is owned by an alien?

Mr. SAULSBURY. I may say, of course, that I have not had time, as the Senator doubtless will understand, to examine the shipping laws of all the foreign nations during the time this bill has been under debate; but answering him categorically, I will say that I do not know.

Mr. WALSH. I understood the amendment offered by the Senator the other day to contemplate the ownership of 90 per cent of the stock by American citizens. Now, it is proposed that registration shall be denied to a ship owned by an American corporation if a single share of the stock is held by one not a citizen of the United States.

Mr. SAULSBURY. That undoubtedly would be the effect of it; but my effort has been to quiet the fears of those who were advocating the measure which I was seeking to amend, and to place it precisely where it would be with a bona fide ownership in our own citizens.

Mr. WALSH. Let me make a further inquiry. Assume that a ship does register under these provisions, every share of her stock being owned by American citizens, and some rival wants to drive her out of the business. Would it not be possible for that rival to go out into the market and buy a share of stock, or a few shares of stock, and thus require the cancellation of her registry?

Mr. SAULSBURY. I can not say that such a course would work a cancellation. Certainly it would not be permitted to do so under such circumstances, I fancy.

Mr. O'GORMAN. Mr. President, I thought the Senator from Delaware would enlighten the Senate as to the benefits that would be conferred upon the shipping of the United States by the adoption of this amendment. So far as I am concerned he has given us no enlightenment. A day or two ago he proposed an amendment making it obligatory upon the corporation owning a ship that 90 per cent of its stock should be held by American citizens. After some discussion he modified that and substituted the requirement that 51 per cent of the stock of the corporation should be held by American citizens.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Mr. President, I think the Senator is in error. That suggestion was made by the Senator from Utah and accepted by me, if I recall correctly.

Mr. O'GORMAN. Yes; it was accepted by the Senator. Now, the Senator abandons the 90 per cent limitation and the 51 per cent limitation and insists that all of the stock of an American corporation must be held by American citizens.

What would be the consequences of the adoption of this amendment? We are striving in this emergency to increase our merchant marine. We are trying to induce American corporations owning foreign-built ships to bring their ships under the American flag. The adoption of this amendment would not only deter an American corporation from taking advantage of the provisions of the bill, but its consequences would go far beyond that. It would take practically one-half of the shipping now engaged in the coastwise trade out of the American business, because this amendment touches all ships, whether American built or foreign built; and if it be shown that any of the stock in any American corporation owning an American-built or a foreign-built ship is held by a foreigner, that circumstance will exclude that ship from our foreign trade as well as from our coastwise trade.

The adoption of this amendment can serve no possible purpose. It will not even benefit the private shipyards of the country, which look upon this legislation unfavorably, because we have but six ships now flying the American flag in the trans-Atlantic trade. The private shipyards of this country are building no ships intended for the foreign trade. Therefore, even though they think they may be benefited by the defeat of this legislation, they will be disappointed.

If it is the judgment of the Senate that the request of the President and the representation of the House of Representatives that we need immediate legislation to meet this emergency should be refused, let it adopt the amendment offered by the Senator from Delaware.

Mr. FALL. Mr. President, as I understand, the amendment of the Senator from Delaware is intended to provide only for the registration of ships the property of corporations 90 per cent of whose stock is owned by American citizens. I refer to the original amendment. I do not exactly understand the new amendment. Does the new amendment change section 6 as proposed?

Mr. SAULSBURY. The amendment now proposed, Mr. President, places corporations of stockholders in the precise position that individuals would be. In reply to the Senator from New Mexico and also the Senator from New York, I may read the requirements as to the oath to be taken by the owner seeking registration not only of any foreign-built vessel when it has been condemned as a prize, and so on, but of an American-built vessel. If the Senator is familiar with it, as he probably is, of course he may not consider it a sufficient reply; but I think it is well to have before us the requirements regarding the registration even of American-built ships.

Mr. FALL. I shall be glad to have the Senator read it. It may throw some light on the point to which I am seeking to call his attention.

Mr. SAULSBURY. When the owner or owners, as the case may be, take the oath required prior to the registry, they must swear—

> That the person so swearing is a citizen of the United States, and that there is no subject or citizen of any foreign prince or state, directly or indirectly, by way of trust, confidence, or otherwise, interested in such vessel or in the profits or issues thereof; and that the master thereof is a citizen, naming the master, and stating the means whereby or manner in which he is a citizen.

In other words, I do not think that in this time of war we should venture farther than our laws now provide in the direction of embroiling ourselves even in the disputes of the belligerents. I do not think it would lead to anything more serious than disputes with the foreign powers, and possibly condemnation in the prize courts; but it seems to me that we should not go out to find trouble, but should rather remain in the position where we always have been under our present laws, and which I think is probably entirely safe, in regard to the ownership of boats, even when purchased abroad.

Mr. O'GORMAN. May I say a word apropos of what has just been said by the Senator from Delaware? The courts of the country have decided that an American corporation, or a corporation organized in any State of the United States, is a citizen within the terms of the law just read by the Senator from Delaware, and remains a citizen even though part of its stock be held by foreigners. They have decided that the stockholder is not the owner of the property, the ship in a case such as suggested by the Senator from Delaware. The corporation is the entity which has the title to the vessel, and if the corporation be an American corporation it is an American citizen within the language read by the Senator. That is so even though a large part, or possibly all, of the stock should be held by foreigners.

Mr. FALL. That is as I understand.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Mr. President, with the consent of the Senator from New Mexico I should like to ask the Senator from New York how he would construe the requirements as to the oath which the owner must take in order to obtain registry, that no subject or citizen of any foreign prince or State is interested "in the profits or issues thereof," meaning of the vessel, if an American corporation owned 95 per cent of the stock, and practically all the stockholders of the American corporation were foreigners? I may say that I have read from section 4142 of the Revised Statutes.

Mr. O'GORMAN. In the case of the United States v. Delaware & Hudson Co. (213 U. S., 366), it was held that the fact that a foreigner may hold some stock gives him no interest, direct or indirect, in the ownership of the vessel, because the vessel is owned by the corporation, by the entity.

Mr. FALL. I might say that in practice I think the matter referred to by both Senators has been considered recently by the State Department. I recall that an American corporation, organized and doing business, I think, in the State of Maine, bought a ship during the recent war between Turkey and Italy. It was a Turkish vessel, and was sunk flying the American flag. The stock of that corporation was owned by foreigners, and the Government did not interfere because there was a doubt as to the right of that vessel to registry or as to its being a bona fide United States ship. That matter was up a few months ago during the Italian-Turkish War. I know that this Government did not interfere for the benefit of the corporation in making an attempt to recover the value of the vessel which was sunk.

But we are away from the point, Mr. President. I am simply desiring to call the attention of the Senator from Delaware to the fact that his proposed amendment changes in some form or directly changes the first portion of the bill; that is, the change in section 4132 might be broadly construed as simply applying to another class of vessels, and does not reach the point the Senator is intending to reach at all. The amendment to this section provides directly for the registration of certain vessels—> wherever built, which are to engage only in trade with foreign countries or with the Philippine Islands or with the islands of Guam and Tutuila, being wholly owned by citizens of the United States or corporations organized and chartered under the laws of the United States or of any State thereof, the president and managing directors of which shall be citizens of the United States, and no others, may be registered as directed in this title.

Now, the amendment as offered in section 6 would not affect that section at all. It would simply provide another class, prescribing the manner in which the bill of sale of ships purchased apparently in foreign ports should be registered, and does not confine the business of the registration of the ships solely to ships the majority of the stock of which is owned in the United States, which I presume is the Senator's intention.

I simply call the Senator's attention to the fact that he does not reach the point at which he is directing his amendment, as I understand it.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I will say that I did not very clearly hear what the Senator said, and I will confer with him before we reach a vote. I appreciate the point the Senator is making.

Mr. FALL. I will repeat it very briefly. I call the Senator's attention to the fact that under the provisions of the bill as offered by the committee ships which are owned by American corporations, 90 per cent of the stock of which may be owned by foreigners, are subject to registration and to do business under the provisions of this act, and the amendment does not do away with that provision at all.

Mr. NELSON. I think the Senator from New Mexico is laboring under a misapprehension. The amendment that is printed at the end of the bill as it appears is not the pending amendment.

Mr. FALL. I so understood, and therefore——

Mr. NELSON. The amendment offered now is an amendment to be added after the word "thereof," in line 7, on page 3.

Mr. FALL. I was asking the Senator from Delaware if his amendment reaches the point to which I was calling attention, as section 6 did not reach it.

Mr. SAULSBURY. My impression is that the pending amendment does reach it. I could not clearly catch what the Senator from New Mexico said about it.

Mr. FALL. I think it possible that the pending amendment reaches exactly the point about which I rose to ask the Senator—that is, as to whether the pending amendment does reach this point in section 6. As proposed it did not reach it, but I think the pending amendment does reach it.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I think likely it does.

Mr. SIMMONS. I think the Senator from Delaware is laboring under a clear misapprehension with reference to the rights of registry under the present law. It is true that the oath with reference to it is required to be made, but, as the Senator from New York says, the meaning of that oath and its effect as applied to the corporation has been construed by the department and by the courts to have reference to the ownership of the property, which is held to be in the corporation as an entity and not in the stockholders.

I have here, Mr. President, an opinion rendered by ex-Attorney General George W. Wickersham while he was Attorney General of the United States, dated July 11, 1911, in which he discusses the effect of the oath upon the registry of a vessel the stock of which is in part owned by foreigners. He reaches the conclusion toward the end of his opinion that——

A vessel belonging to a domestic corporation is entitled to registry or enrollment, even though some of the stock of the company be owned by aliens.

That opinion was given in construing the meaning of the oath that the Senator from Delaware has referred to.

He says:

Upon a consideration of the several statutes—

Among them the statute from which the Senator has read—

I am of opinion that in the act of 1825 Congress declared a corporation of the United States a "citizen" thereof within the meaning of the navigation laws. Therefore, a vessel belonging to a domestic corporation is owned by a citizen of the United States, even though some of the stock in that corporation belongs to aliens; alien stockholders have neither the legal nor equitable ownership of any part of the vessel. As said by the Supreme Court of the United States in Humphreys v. McKissock (140 U. S., 304, 312):

"Both the commissioner and the court—

That is, the lower court—

"seem to have confounded the ownership of stock in a corporation with ownership of its property. But nothing is more distinct than the two rights; the ownership of one confers no ownership of the other. * * * The corporation, the artificial being created, holds the property, and alone can mortgage or transfer it."

But that question has been absolutely, I think, put to rest in the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States in the United States against Delaware & Hudson Co., where the commodities clause of the so-called Hepburn Act was construed, the provisions of which with reference to ownership of the interest in the property on the part of the railroads being even more stringent than the requirement under the oath read by the Senator.

The decision was to the effect that those requirements would not disqualify a railroad which happened to have some stock in a corporation that was engaged in operations in violation of the Hepburn Act. Let me read from that opinion; I think it settles this controversy:

A similar question was raised in United States v. Delaware & Hudson Co. (213 U. S., 366), where the Supreme Court construed the so-called commodities clause of the Hepburn Act of June 29, 1906. That clause—

I call the attention of the Senator from Delaware to this—

That clause provided that it should be unlawful for any railroad company to transport in interstate or foreign commerce any commodity owned by it in whole or in part "or in which it may have any interest, direct or indirect." The United States filed a bill to restrain, among other things, some of the carriers from transporting coal belonging to a corporation some of the stock of which was owned by the carrier. The Supreme Court, applying the foregoing reasoning, held (413, 414) that the carrier had no interest, direct or indirect, in the property of the corporation whose stock it owned. This construction of substantially the same language seems controlling here.

When he says "controlling here," he is referring to the affidavit, as I understand it, which the Senator has read from the Revised Statutes.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, what I wish to know of the Senator is this: What policy is it that he desires the Government to pursue? A corporation is the creature of a statute. A corporation is simply the creature of either a legislative body of a State or of Congress. The question is not what was required of corporations in the past but what we shall require of corporations in this emergency. That is what we are getting at. Does the Senator want the policy of this country to be such that foreigners can transfer to a corporation organized under the laws of either Delaware or New Jersey, or other States, at an expense of about $50, vessels built in a foreign country, own practically all of the stock of such American corporation, and yet have the right and benefits of American registry and the right to use the American flag, possibly in an effort to evade the exigencies of war, and return to its native port to become a part of the navy of a belligerent nation?

Mr. SIMMONS. I do not desire that, nor do I think that will happen.

Mr. PITTMAN. Is not that possible?

Mr. SIMMONS. The Senator is putting a very extreme case which I do not think will ever happen. All I desire is that the law that has obtained upon this subject from the beginning, so far as I know, and I have studied it to some extent, shall remain. The law that has obtained from the beginning has permitted corporations organized under a State or under the United States to acquire the ownership of a vessel.

Mr. PITTMAN. I am not stating what the past law has been. I want to know what the present law is to be.

Mr. SIMMONS. We reaffirmed that principle when we passed the Panama Canal act, and I do not see now any reason why we should change that law.

The Senator says that there is a reason growing out of what he calls the possibility of this Government getting into foreign complications if any part of the stock of a steamboat shall be owned by a citizen of a foreign country. I want to say to the Senator that there is hardly any other country that I know of which makes—certainly Great Britain, which is the greatest shipping country in the world, does not make—any such requirement as that he insists upon; as a matter of fact, a great many American-owned corporations are to-day flying the British flag, and probably every dollar of their stock is owned in this country. That is true of the United Fruit Co. The stock of that company, I understand, is owned in this country, or largely in this country. It is certainly owned by an American corporation. It is an American corporation, and yet it flies the British flag.

Does the Senator mean to say that because the British Government puts its flag over an American corporation, if we should get into a war with some other country and Great Britain was a neutral, it would render the ships owned by this corporation flying the British flag liable to seizure to which another British ship, owned entirely by British subjects, would not be subject? The Senator probably does not mean that.

Mr. PITTMAN. The question I asked has never been answered yet. I repeat the remark which I made. The question is not that our existing law allows a certain thing. I am not talking about what our existing laws allow. I am talking about what this law we are now passing should allow. Every lawyer knows that a corporation is an entity and every lawyer knows that such an entity has all the rights of an individual within the grant. There is no restriction, I take it, under the present incorporation law that any particular quantity of stock of a corporation in this country shall be owned by citizens of this country. There is no requirement of that kind, but the question is, should there not be such a requirement. That is what I am getting down to. It is no use to argue what the law has been in the past. We are making a law and we can make the law any way we desire. But the Senator has argued that a foreign corporation owning a vessel can organize a dummy corporation in one of our States here and transfer its vessel to such corporation and take all the stock in consideration of such transfer. As far as the fiction of the law is concerned, the foreign corporation has not any interest in that ship because the American corporation has become the purchaser of it. As far as the beneficial use is concerned, as far as every essential of ownership is concerned, except the mere fiction of law, the foreign corporation is still the owner of that ship. It controls the directors. It controls the American corporation. It derives every bit of profit from the American corporation.

Now, those are the two essentials of ownership, control, and participation in profits, and yet I admit under the fiction of law the foreign corporation has no ownership in the ship after its transfer to a dummy corporation. That is the fiction of the law. Corporations have been utilized for years to cover those kinds of transactions and they always will. It is simply a question as to whether the Senate wants to do that.

Now, the Senator says that that vessel could be sold to an American corporation and that the stock could be owned by the same corporation that sold it.

Mr. SIMMONS. No.

Mr. PITTMAN. I may be exaggerating a little; I will draw the distinction later on. He says that the same company which now owns that ship may own all the stock in a new corporation and it would be entitled to American registry and it would be entitled to use the American flag, and that Great Britain would have no right to complain because the same law exists to-day with regard to her flag on the ocean. But let us see whether they would have a right to do that.

Mr. SIMMONS. The Senator is misrepresenting me; but he can go ahead.

The Senator entirely misunderstood what I said. What I did say was that under the laws of Great Britain a foreign corporation could own a ship which might be admitted to registry and could sail under the British flag. I said that as a matter of fact a number of American corporations owning vessels now sail under the British flag.

Mr. PITTMAN. And therefore——

Mr. SIMMONS. Let me finish. I instanced the United Fruit Co.'s fleet of ships owned by an American corporation and now flying the British flag. If we were at war, say, with France, Great Britain being a neutral, as we are in this case, does the Senator contend that because the fruit company's ships are owned by an American corporation and under the British flag they would be entitled any less to the protection of Great Britain than if the fruit company's ships were owned by English citizens? Will there be any more reason why the other nations of the world, the belligerents, France and the United States being the belligerents in that case, would not respect the flag of Great Britain flying over the fruit company's steamers owned by an American corporation, as if the fruit company's ships were owned by a British corporation and flying the British flag?

Mr. PITTMAN. All right.

Mr. SIMMONS. Under the laws of nations would not the two belligerents, the United States and France, in the case I have put, respect the rights of the British flag just the same if the United Fruit Co.'s ships were owned by an American corporation as if they were owned by a foreign corporation?

Mr. PITTMAN. The Senator thinks they would?

Mr. SIMMONS. I think they would under international law. That is what I said, that under international law I think they would.

Mr. PITTMAN. All right; then Germany, England, and France would respect our flag if raised upon the Kronprinzessin Cecilie, and that would enable that vessel to go through the British and French fleets right into Germany?

Mr. SIMMONS. Let me qualify that. If that vessel came under American registry before the declaration of war, undoubtedly they would respect that, but if it came under registry after the declaration of war, then it would be necessary for the owner to make clear proof of the bona fides of that transaction, of the transfer; and that is all the difference.

Mr. PITTMAN. It would be bona fide, would it not? Could there be any question of the bona fides of a foreign corporation transferring to an American corporation in consideration for all of the stock of the American corporation?

Mr. SIMMONS. Bona fides require not only proof that the consideration is paid if the vessel is sold to a stranger, but it also requires proof that it was not purchased simply for the purposes of escaping the consequences of the war. I think very probably that latter condition would apply only in such an extreme case as the Senator has put, but I do not know; I can not anticipate absolutely what would be the decision of the courts of the world upon any hypothetical case; but I assume if the Kronprinzessin Cecilie, now belonging to a German corporation and flying the German flag, were to incorporate under American law, with identically the same stockholders, that would raise a question which would require proof in a prize court.

Mr. PITTMAN. What kind of proof?

Mr. SIMMONS. Proof in a prize court that the transfer from one corporation to the other was not for the purpose of escaping the consequences of war.

Mr. PITTMAN. Then, suppose all of the stock of the new corporation—the American corporation—was transferred to the foreign corporation in consideration for the vessel; would the Senator consider that a fraudulent transfer for the purpose of avoiding the exigencies of war?

Mr. SIMMONS. As I have just said, that would be a question for the courts; and I believe that a court would hold in an extreme case of that sort that the evidence was sufficient to justify the finding that the transfer was made for the purpose of avoiding the consequences of war, but I can not tell. However, let me say this to the Senator——

Mr. PITTMAN. If that were the case——

Mr. SIMMONS. The Senator from Nevada asked me a question a little while ago, which he said I did not answer, in reference to this very vessel as to which he now asks me the question. Let me say to the Senator that when a vessel is under the American flag this Government does not guarantee that that flag renders it absolutely immune to seizure upon the high seas for doing those things which are prohibited in the international code. The only thing this Government does is to guarantee that so long as that vessel flies the American flag, if captured at sea and held upon the ground that it is violating some principle of international law, the owners of that property shall have a fair hearing in the prize court; that is all.

If a vessel is purchased under this bill, if it becomes a law, or if its owners incorporate under this bill, and is given the benefits of American registry and flies the American flag when it goes upon the high seas, that vessel will be subject to be captured by one of the belligerent cruisers and taken into a prize court for two reasons: First, upon the ground that the transfer is not in good faith; to use the expressive term very frequently employed by the Senator, that the transaction was a fictitious one, and that there had been no real change in ownership; that the vessel was in the same ownership after it was put under the American flag as before it was put under the American flag. According to all the authorities, if it is established in that court that the transfer was only colorable, that vessel is subject to forfeiture; and because it is subject to forfeiture and declared forfeited is not a ground of quarrel between nations. That is a thing which is happening every day.

Then, again, if the transfer were brought about for the express purpose of avoiding the consequences of the war, the vessel would be held subject to seizure. The United States does not guarantee the bona fides of the transaction at all.

In that condition of things, if the owners of the Kronprinzessin Cecilie wanted to take advantage of this act, incorporate under our laws, and fly the American flag, does not the Senator believe that, as reasonably prudent men, they would be deterred from attempting that process of escaping the consequences of the war by the danger that they would incur? Does not the Senator think, too, that the United States assumes some sort of obligation whenever it puts its flag over a vessel? It assumes the obligation, at least, of seeing that it is given fair treatment upon the seas and in prize courts; and does not the Senator believe that the United States before it admitted such a vessel to registry would exercise some discretion for the purpose of protecting itself from getting into possible complications?

As a matter of fact, whenever an American citizen applies for the right to hoist the American flag over a foreign-purchased vessel owned by him our Government, anxious to protect itself from any possible complications, requires its consuls abroad to make a very careful inquiry and investigation—and that is specified in the instructions sent to consuls—as to whether the transaction is really a bona fide transaction, whether the money has actually been paid and title actually passed to the ship.

For what reason? Because if it is a fictitious transaction that ship is subject to seizure, and the Government is then under obligations of seeing that it obtains a fair and impartial trial in the prize court. That is as far, however, as the obligation of the Government goes, either in the case of a vessel purchased abroad and owned by an American citizen, but not registered, or in a case of a foreign vessel purchased by an American citizen or an American corporation and registered. In either case the obligation of the Government extends no further than to seeing that in the event of capture if the bona fides of that transaction are called in question, if the right of that ship to fly the American flag is called in question, and the vessel is seized and taken before a prize court, it gets a fair trial.

Mr. President, that being the entire extent of our obligations, the peril being thrown upon the ship owner, the ship owner being required to see that he complies with international law at his peril, I do not see the danger which the Senator points out; but I do see, Mr. President, that if we shall say that all the stock of these corporations shall be owned by American citizens, a great many ships that are now flying the American flag will have to give up their registry, and I do see that the possibility of acquiring ships to sail under the American flag to meet the present emergency will be greatly diminished.

Mr. PITTMAN. Now, look at the peculiar situation in which the Senator has left himself. He has argued that there is no law of corporations requiring any ownership by American citizens of the stock of an American corporation and that it can all be owned by foreigners and yet be a legal transaction under the law. Then, in answer to my hypothetical question, in a case where the property is transferred to a domestic corporation in consideration for all of the stock of that corporation, he says he would look upon that transaction with suspicion; and yet that is the ordinary transaction that takes place when a domestic corporation is put in charge of a foreign ship and all the stock of the domestic corporation is owned by foreigners or by foreign corporations. Such is the regular routine of such transactions. The Senator has argued that that is legal, and yet he admits that he would look on it with suspicion, as a fictitious transaction.

The Senator also says that the obligation of the United States when a vessel under these circumstances comes under the jurisdiction of a prize court is to see that it has a fair trial; that it is the obligation of the Government to oversee that transaction. Then, why does not the Government oversee the transaction of the register and the raising of the flag before it comes to the question of capture?

Does not the Senator know that under this bill, if it shall become a law, if the American corporation is properly organized under the laws of one of our States and there is a bill of sale, in proper form, given to it for a ship, in consideration for all of the stock of the American corporation, in the eyes of the law in the respective States it is a legitimate transaction?

The Senator has already argued that it is a legitimate transaction. Yes; it is a legitimate transaction; but it is not the kind of a transaction we like; it is not the kind of a transaction that the Senator himself would approve, for he has admitted that he would look with suspicion on that kind of a transaction. He has stated his belief that a prize court would look on it with suspicion. Now, why should we permit that we be placed in such an ambiguous position?

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, the Senator knows that when I used the word "suspicion" I was speaking with reference to the extreme case he mentioned. I think that case and cases similar to it would be subject to suspicion; but I do not think the owners of the vessel would care to take the risk; I do not think this would apply by any means to a corporation a part of whose stock was owned by foreigners. The circumstances of every case would have to control the question, and the court would determine whether the transaction really was for the purpose of escaping the consequences of war.

Mr. PITTMAN. But the Senator has admitted that if the Kronprinzessin Cecilie were transferred to an American corporation organized for the purpose of holding it, and all of the stock of the American corporation went right back to the present owners of that ship, he would look upon the transaction with suspicion; and yet, under his own argument as to the law, we would be powerless to do anything in that kind of a case. The Senator has admitted that that transaction would be perfectly legitimate, but he says he would look on it with suspicion I admit that it is perfectly legal—I agree with him as to that—under the present law, but I should look on it with suspicion; and not only should I look upon it with suspicion, but I should look on it as France and Great Britain would have a right to look on it—as an effort on the part of this Government to lend its flag and its registry to a German vessel to enable it to go through the French and British fleet and to become a part of the naval reserve of Germany. That is the way that Great Britain and France would have a right to look on it.

Mr. SIMMONS. The Senator again misunderstands me when says that I said that the Government of the United States would be absolutely powerless to do anything to prevent such suspicious transfers as would probably exist in the case which he puts with reference to this particular German ship.

Mr. PITTMAN. Then how could we stop it?

Mr. SIMMONS. I have said to the Senator that whenever a ship was bought abroad our consuls are instructed to make very careful investigation, and if they ascertained that the transaction was suspicious; that in all probability it was not a bona fide transaction; that the title had not passed and the money had not been paid and that the transfer was merely colorable, they were directed not to give a certificate of ownership. Now, does the Senator believe when a vessel applies to us for registry upon the ground that it has become the property of citizens of the United States that the Government in issuing its papers of registration would be any less particular than it requires its consuls to be in issuing the certificate of ownership? Does not the Senator suppose that the Government would make inquiry to ascertain whether the transfer of any kind of a vessel was a bona fide transaction?

Mr. PITTMAN. But the Senator has already argued that such a transaction is legal.

Mr. SIMMONS. Does not the Senator believe it would make inquiry in the case he has put whether there was simply a colorable transfer to escape the consequences of war?

Mr. PITTMAN. But the Senator has already argued that the hypothetical case I have stated would be within the law.

Mr. SIMMONS. I read the decision of the court in which it was held that the fact that part of the stock of a corporation was owned by foreigners did not deprive the corporation of the right of registration. I do not know; I will not say that the Kronprinzessin Cecilie, under the strict interpretation of the law, if there were no suspicion of its application being made merely for the purpose of escaping the consequences of the war, would not be entitled to registration. I said I did not attempt to decide that question.

Mr. PITTMAN. The same principle is involved whether half the stock is owned by a foreign corporation or all the stock is owned by a foreign corporation; there is no distinction in principle and law. The law which the Senator read is good law as the law exists to-day. Every share of stock could be owned by a foreign corporation and it would be legal; and if it is legal, then no consul or any other officer having charge of registration could prevent the registration under the present law. Under the circumstances I have cited the Kronprinzessin Cecilie would be entitled to registration. There is no question about that, and no consul or other registration officer could interfere with it, because that is the law, as the able Senator has shown.

Mr. SIMMONS. But the Senator will not see the point I make. It might be legal upon certain conditions. First, in order to make it legal, it must appear that the transaction is a bona fide one; it must appear that it is not made simply for the purpose of escaping the consequences of the war. Now, if the Government had the technical right under the statute to register, it would inquire into those things and determine those questions before it would admit to American registration.

Mr. PITTMAN. How impossible it is to determine what the Senator wants determined. He says it is legal for the foreign company to transfer its vessel to a domestic company and own all of the stock of the domestic company, and, having done that, the foreign company does not have to do anything else; it is legal and the vessel is entitled to registry and is entitled to fly the American flag without saying what else it is going to do. I would look on it with suspicion, and everybody else would do so. When you get down to the bottom of the matter it is not a question of what the law has been in the past; it is the restrictions we are going to place on it in the future.

I want to say right now that if the United States were at war with some foreign nation to-day and a lot of ships of that foreign nation were in neutral ports we would feel very bitter against a neutral nation that would allow the use of its flag and its registry solely for the purpose of having the ships of our foe return to their own waters; and that is exactly the condition here. There is not such an emergency as to require that. There is not any necessity for our adopting a subterfuge that will permit these vessels to go back to a belligerent nation. There is no reason why we should open our ports and lend our flag and our registry to the ships of a belligerent nation so that they may go back and escape the exigencies of war. We have no right to do that; and I tell you, whether we are violating the law of nations or not, we are violating a law of friendship which we have no right to violate and which we should not violate. We are lending our flag and our registry to a subterfuge which the Senator from North Carolina himself says he looks on with suspicion.

Oh, it is true that he says that does not concern the Government; it is for the ship flying the flag to take its chances. I say, however, that it does concern the Government. It concerns the honor and dignity of this Government. It concerns the standing of this Government among the nations of the world. I am sorry to see that our anxiety to obtain ships to carry our produce has driven us to the extreme necessity of lending the American flag and American registry even under circumstances which we ourselves admit would be looked on with suspicion.

I do not think it is necessary. I would rather have this Government spend every bit of money it has in its Treasury, I would rather have it extend its credit to the limit and buy its own ships through bona fide purchases, and place the American flag above them and carry all the ocean commerce of this country than to see us lend ourselves to any subterfuge, even if it should obtain ships for our commerce.

Unless such ships are purchased by American citizens or by corporations controlled by American citizens they will not be permanent additions to our commerce, and will probably only be under our flag long enough to reach foreign waters.

I am for building up the American merchant marine, but I am for building it up through American citizens.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, on Saturday I was perhaps responsible for not permitting a small minority to pass a bill which involved great consequences to the peace of this Nation, as I see it. I am just as much interested in increasing our facilities for foreign commerce as is any Senator on this floor, but I want to do whatever is done in entire harmony with a spirit of good will toward all the warring nations of Europe. I want to benefit our commerce in fact, and not merely in name. I think we should have legislation which should go to the substance of the thing hoped for, and not be content with the form. I want to provide some method so that when a vessel sails the seas under American registry and flies the American flag it may mean something to American commerce and to the American traveler. I want to have some sort of a law which is going to be just, at least, to all parties who may desire to engage in foreign commerce.

Attention has been called to the statutes upon this subject. Without taking the time to refer to all of these sections, before the pendency of this bill the only vessels that were entitled to American registry were, first, American-built vessels; secondly, those which had been condemned as prizes; third, those that were forfeited; and later, under the Panama Canal act, we were permitted to register those of foreign build which were not more than 5 years old. Under section 4142, if there was an American-built vessel which was applying for American registry and ninety-nine one-hundredths of it was owned by American citizens individually and one one-hundredth part of it was owned by a foreigner, that vessel would not be entitled to registry under our laws. Under the pending bill, however, if it is a foreign-built vessel, and it sees fit to take out an American charter under the laws of Maine or of Delaware or of New Jersey, and ninety-nine one-hundredths interest in the stock of that vessel is owned by foreigners, belligerents, and only one one-hundredth of it is owned by an American citizen, that vessel would be entitled to American registry.

Now, see the situation. In the one case, with ninety-nine one-hundredths interest in the vessel owned by American citizens, it could not be registered; but in the case of a foreign-built vessel ninety-nine one-hundredths of it could be owned by foreigners and it would be entitled to American registry.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President——

Mr. POMERENE. I yield to the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. GALLINGER. Several days ago I called attention to that very point; and I will now ask the distinguished Senator from Ohio whether he thinks foreign Governments would look with favor upon a subterfuge of that kind.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, that question answers itself. We can draw fine-haired distinctions here on the floor of the Senate when it comes to the question whether a railroad corporation is directly or indirectly interested in the stock of another American corporation, or when it comes to a question between American citizens, or when it comes to a question between an American corporation and the United States Government, and the courts may lay down a rule such as is contained in the case of United States v. Delaware & Hudson Co. (213 U. S., 366), to which the Senator from New York kindly referred a moment ago. If, however, we are to have a question of this kind confronting the United States for decision and it involves on one side the American Government and on the other one of the belligerents in Europe—let us suppose for the sake of the argument that it is the German Kaiser—and one of his war vessels stops a German-owned vessel flying the American flag, and the commander of the warship says to the commander of the merchantman, "This is a German-owned vessel." The commander of the vessel replies, "Oh, no; we are sailing under the American flag. We have an American charter. We have taken out a charter under the laws of New Jersey." The commander of the German cruiser says, "Well, who owns this stock?" "Oh, ninety-nine one-hundredths of the stock in this vessel is owned by the subjects of the Kaiser and one one-hundredth of its stock is owned by an American citizen." Do Senators believe for one moment that a vessel thus owned and thus sailing under the American flag would be protected as against seizure by the German cruiser?

Let us take another illustration: Suppose some German subjects own a line of vessels. They want American registry, because they fear the combined fleets of France, Great Britain, and Russia. They come over to the State of Delaware and some lawyer takes out a charter under the laws of the State of Delaware and organizes a corporation. Under the laws of that State, if I understand correctly, there must be one resident director. He must be the owner of three shares of stock; it may be of the par value of $1 per share. Now, under the pending bill we have an American-owned fleet, after its transfer from the German citizens to this newly formed corporation. It is entitled to registry under the committee's bill which is pending here. It has the right to fly the American flag. Would it be a sufficient answer by the United States Government to the British fleet or to the French fleet or to the Russian fleet to say: "Yes; we have a Delaware charter. A citizen of Delaware owns three shares of stock in this corporation, of $1 per share par value. It is therefore an American-owned vessel, even though all the rest of this stock, representing the interest of these German citizens, continues to be German owned." Should such a vessel be entitled to the protection of the American flag?

On Saturday, when this bill was before the Senate, and a similar question was put by myself to the very distinguished Senator who has charge of this bill, he answered:

> No; in the case the Senator supposes if 95 per cent, 97 per cent, or a very large percentage of the stock were held by citizens of France, it would go very far toward justifying a finding by the prize court that the transfer of the ship or of the flag was not done in good faith, and the purchasers of the ship and those who sail the ship would take the consequences of their own conduct.

Now, let me ask a question. The purpose of the committee and the purpose of Congress is to benefit American shipping abroad. Does any Senator for a moment think that by an attempt to perpetrate a fraud of this kind upon the fleets of the world we are benefiting American shipping? Let it be known, if you please, that one of these ships is transferred to a Delaware corporation in the way I have indicated, I wish some Senator would point out to me the American merchant who would ship a cargo of his merchandise to any of the ports of Europe under the flimsy protection the American flag could afford under such circumstances.

Let me make another suggestion: Some Senators are in the habit of occasionally sending their families to Europe for a vacation—a good thing to do, a thing that every man would love to do; but I take it no Senator would be willing to trust his family's safety and comfort during the European war to a vessel 99 per cent of whose stock was owned by one of the belligerents and only 1 per cent owned by an American citizen.

Mr. SHIVELY. Mr. President, will the Senator permit a suggestion at this point?

Mr. POMERENE. Just a moment. Are the American merchantmen to come here asking for bread, and will they be content with the stone you are offering them?

Mr. SHIVELY. Will the Senator yield to me for a moment?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. POMERENE. I do.

Mr. SHIVELY. I am much interested in the discussion of this question by the Senator, and note the earnestness with which he is pressing his point; but it seems to me that all the cases he has put for illustration may easily come under the present state of the law; that no particular innovation is being imported into our statutes by the pending bill.

Mr. POMERENE. Oh, Mr. President——

Mr. SHIVELY. I will ask the Senator to wait a moment if he yields to me.

Mr. POMERENE. I yield.

Mr. SHIVELY. That is to say, is it not altogether possible, as to the International Mercantile Marine Co., that possibly 99 per cent of its stock may now or at some future time be held by foreigners, and yet all these liners now carrying the American flag would be in precisely the same position in which the Senator places these ships in the suppositious case he places before the Senate?

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I recognize the force of the Senator's question; but when we are confronted by a defect in the present law, and we are seeking to secure safety for American shipping, are we to blind our eyes to that defect and increase it?

Are we to say that under present laws this only applies to such ships as may be 5 years old and because a preceding Congress made a mistake that we are to go on blindly along the same line and increase the defect in the law which it enacted?

Mr. SHIVELY. Have there been any of the mischievous consequences developed under the present law that the Senator speaks of?

Mr. POMERENE. Since this question arose there has been no such awful war as there is in Europe to-day. There have been no such opportunities to have ourselves involved in that awful conflict. There never was a time when the excitement in Europe was so intense as now. Never in your life or mine has there been a situation where a mere match might at any moment be touched to a powder magazine and thereby involve this Government in that controversy. There is a different situation now from what there was when the Panama Canal act was adopted.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The morning hour having expired, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A bill (H. R. 15657) to supplement existing laws against unlawful restraints and monopolies, and for other purposes.

Mr. CULBERSON. I ask unanimous consent that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none. The unfinished business is temporarily laid aside and the Senator from Ohio has the floor.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I recall that just a few weeks or perhaps a few months ago we heard a good many witticisms in this Chamber at the expense of a policy of "watchful waiting" by our great President in the relations of this Government with Mexico. I remember very well that when the news came by wire that some vicious assault had been made on an American citizen, that some life was wiped out here or there, we were all more or less impatient; but I dare say there is not a Senator in this Chamber who is not willing to breathe the prayer that some European sovereigns might have been controlled by a policy of "watchful waiting." The newspapers of the last few days record the fact that nearly 100,000 lives have been wiped out in this gigantic struggle in Europe because of the absence of a policy of "watchful waiting." Declarations of war are being made by one great power against another almost daily because there was no policy of "watchful waiting."

I speak of this because it portrays to us the intensity of feeling in European circles to-day. It shows to my mind that in the presence of excitement they are willing to seize upon almost any excuse, no matter how trivial it may seem to us, in order to declare war. I hope that the hundred million of American people will not be called upon to shed one drop of blood or spend one dollar of its treasure in that awful struggle.

And, now, what is the situation? Knowing the conditions in Europe, knowing that hostile fleets are upon every one of the seas, the purpose of the Senate, or at least of some of the Senators, seems to be to provide for American shipping, and to do it in a spirit of fraud toward belligerents in Europe. I will not say in a spirit of intentional fraud, but I do say that the effect would be one of actual fraud.

Now, we are trying to say to the American people, to the cotton planters of the South, to the wheat growers of the West, to our great manufacturing industries, to our commerce, "We are going to devise some ways and means by which you can market your products abroad." How are we going to do it? By increasing a real American merchant marine? No. We are going to play some sort of a trick upon the European powers. We are going to say to the Germans, "Go to Delaware, take out a charter, get some American citizen to take three shares of your stock, and we will protect German bottoms by the American flag." And again, we are saying to France and to Great Britain and to Russia, "Come, go with us to New Jersey; you do not need to change ownership in fact; all you need to do is to go to the capitol at Trenton, take out a charter, get some New Jerseyman to take one share of this stock, and all the rest of the stock may be owned by France or Russia or Great Britain." And we call this protection to American commerce! God save the day!

When we place the Stars and Stripes over any bottom I want that to be a signal of safety to every merchant who has a cargo of goods to send abroad, and I want it to be a harbinger of safety to every American who wants to send his family abroad without being subjected to the inconvenience and the discomfiture of being stopped in midocean by some warring cruiser and taken to some strange foreign port.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. POMERENE. I do.

Mr. WALSH. The Senator from Ohio was asked by the Senator from Indiana [Mr. SHIVELY] as to whether any mischievous consequence had ensued from the law as it now stands, and he answered very pertinently and very properly that the conditions now existing are quite different from those that existed at the time that act was passed two years ago. I desire to ask the Senator from Ohio if he recalls any mischievous consequences that have ensued that foreigners have had with their statute laws of the same character throughout many continental wars?

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I can not answer that question. I do not know.

Mr. WALSH. Then, for the information of the Senate, I want to read in Maclachlan's Law Merchant what the law of England on this matter is. Speaking of ships entitled to registry and of those who own them, the author says:

> Thirdly, bodies corporate, established under, subject to the laws of some part of His Majesty's dominions, and having their principal place of business in those dominions. An incorporated British company is not disqualified because there are alien shareholders on its register; for a corporation is a legal entity, whose national character is independent of that of its members.

There is a reference to three cases determined by the highest courts of England upon that provision of the law.

I can not help drawing the conclusion from the fact that this law has been in existence in Great Britain since prior to the year 1846 that the opportunities for unfortunate complications which the Senator has seemed to apprehend are very few and far between and not likely at all to arise. At least Great Britain seems never to have been thrown into the difficulties and the misfortunes of a foreign war by reason of that particular statute.

Mr. POMERENE. I recognize the diligence of the Senator from Montana; but let me ask, does the Senator mean by that last statement that there has been no such misfortune or that he does not know of any?

Mr. WALSH. I assume that these cases I have—I sent for them—arose on exactly such conditions.

Mr. POMERENE. It may be so. My answer is——

Mr. WEST. Mr. President——

Mr. POMERENE. Just one moment. I wish to answer this question. My answer is that it does not appear that the Parliament of Great Britain passed that law during such a critical situation as this. My answer, further, is that, so far as I know, at least, there is no Government on the face of the globe that is attempting similar legislation to that which is reported by the committee.

Mr. WALSH. If the Senator from Ohio will pardon me—because the Senator referred to the case of some German ship now in our port likely to be fictitiously transferred to the American flag for the purpose of escaping the consequences of the war—I want to invite the attention of the Senator to the fact that the only nation with which we will be likely to get into a controversy in a transaction of that character is Great Britain; and when Great Britain finds us with exactly the same statute which she has had on her statute books for three-quarters of a century, in what attitude is she to complain about our legislation, passed when the war was not in contemplation at all?

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, it is not going to be of very much benefit to us to weigh probabilities. I will not assume the rôle of prophet sufficient to say that we are only likely to be involved with Great Britain. I think the Kaiser has a good deal of a navy, France and Russia have, and Italy, if she becomes embroiled, has; and these transfers are to be made now for what? For the benefit of American commerce. Are there any marine insurance companies now that would be likely to take insurance upon those vessels or their cargoes under those circumstances?

Mr. REED. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. POMERENE. I do.

Mr. REED. The Senator made a very forcible argument to the effect that a vessel might under the bill as it stands without the amendment become the property of an American corporation, and every share of which, except perhaps three or four, might be owned by the subjects of foreign powers. I think there is a great deal in that argument. The Senator proceeded to say under those circumstances it would be a mere subterfuge to transfer the vessel at this time.

Now, conceding that to be true, does not this amendment go to just as extreme a length in the other direction by providing that all the stock must be owned by American citizens, so that the acquisition by any subject of a foreign power of even one share of stock would operate at once to make a vessel ineligible for American registry?

I make that preliminary statement in order that my question may be clear. Why should not this amendment, if it is adopted, be changed to provide that a majority of the stock shall be owned by American citizens?

Mr. POMERENE. That is a very pertinent question. The reason as I understand for the framing of the amendment as it has been offered by the Senator from Delaware was that when it comes to ownership by American citizens, and when I use that term I mean individuals, persons, the entire ownership must be in American citizens. When it comes to the registering of a vessel which has been condemned in a prize court the entire ownership must be in American citizens. When it comes to the registration of a vessel which has been declared forfeited because violating American laws the entire interest must be in American citizens. When it comes to the ownership of an American-built vessel the entire interest must be in Americans if owned by individuals. And now the question will suggest itself to the Senator's mind, why should there be discrimination against American-built vessels or against any of the other classes of vessels that I have named and in favor of a foreign vessel which up to date may have been owned entirely by European subjects?

But I recognize that there is much in what the Senator says, and it may be that if in the wisdom of the Senate they see fit to declare that a substantial amount, over and above a majority of the stock, should be American owned, I think, speaking for myself, I would be content, because that would show to the world and to the American shipping interests that we were acting in good faith, and that we were not attempting to pass legislation here which pretends to benefit American shipping and at the same time would be a snare by which American merchantmen would lose their cargoes.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. POMERENE. I do.

Mr. LEWIS. My sympathies in this case in this discussion upon the amendment are with the amendment. I rise to call the attention of the Senator from Ohio to the uncertainty that may arise in the very condition against which he is inveighing, but particularly to call the attention of the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH] that while it may be true that in one court it might be held that a flag speaking ownership will be accepted prima facie as conclusive and as a mere ownership in reality, and be no further investigated, that is an instance of what the English court might do; but as a vindication of the theory of the Senator from Ohio that these uncertainties may involve us elsewhere, I call the attention of the able Senator from Montana and of the able Senator from Ohio that in 1872 the direct reverse rule was held in another court, and I direct their attention to the following:

An exceptional case was decided by the French Conseil des Prises in 1872, in which a vessel was held not to be concluded as to her national character by the flag she carried. The Palme was, in 1871, captured by a French cruiser on a voyage from Akkra to Bremen. She carried the German flag, and was, therefore, prima facie lawful prize. Evidence was produced which showed that the Palme was a German-built vessel; that in 1866 she was sold to the Société du Commerce des Missions Protestantes, a Swiss corporation; and that she still belonged to the société at the time of capture, though she then carried the German flag. It also appeared that the Swiss Federal Council did not permit Swiss subjects to fly the Federal flag, and that France had, in 1854, refused to acknowledge any Swiss maritime flag. Thus, the société being compelled to sail its ship under some flag, that of Germany had been retained. In order to do this, the ship was nominally assigned to an agent of the société at Bremen, while the real owners were the société itself. Under these circumstances, the vessel being in reality owned by Swiss, and consequently neutral subjects, the Conseil des Prises held that she was not a German vessel, and therefore restored her to the owners, reversing the decree of the court below.

I call attention to that case merely to show that while in an English court it could be held as the able Senator from Montana points out, in a French court it was held precisely the reverse.

Mr. POMERENE. I thank the Senator for his contribution to the discussion.

Now, Mr. President, following out the argument, I can imagine my friend, the distinguished Senator from New York, on one of these French-owned vessels with one share of stock held by a New Jersey corporation in order to entitle it to registry, with all the other stock held by Frenchmen, and the vessel flying the American flag. I can see the Senator with his great dignity and ability saying to the captain of the German cruiser, "You are mistaken; this is an American-owned vessel under the American flag, and I cite the Two hundred and thirteenth United States Supreme Court Reports to sustain my position." I do not think under those circumstances it would stop the cannon's mouth. I believe that under those circumstances, though we would be flying the American flag, we would be in the position of Isaac of old when he said, "It is the hand of Esau, but it is the voice of Jacob."

Mr. President, I have talked as I have because I feel most intensely that without some amendment along the line of that proposed by the Senator from Delaware this bill would be a very great disappointment to American shippers.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from New York if he does not think that it would be wise to place some limitation upon the amount of stock which can be owned by citizens of foreign countries? It seems to me that to permit, for instance, following the illustration of the Senator from Ohio, the stockholders in a German or French or English company, that in turn owns a vessel, to come over to Delaware or New Jersey, or any other American State, and transfer three or four shares of their stock to citizens of the United States, organize an American company, all the stock of which except three or four shares is owned by these subjects of foreign countries, and then run the American flag up over that boat would be a manifest subterfuge and might involve us in some trouble. It would not result in a transfer of these boats, or any of them, really to American citizens, but would simply be the furnishing by our country of the protection of our flag to vessels that are, in fact, foreign vessels. Now, would not the Senator from New York think that there ought to be at least a majority of the stock owned by American citizens?

Mr. O'GORMAN. It has never been the policy, Mr. President, of the American Government to impose any such restriction regarding the holding of stock in American corporations owning ships. There is no such restriction to-day with respect to the ownership even of American ships now engaged in the coastwise trade. I have no doubt that thousands of shares of the stock of American corporations now engaged in the coastwise trade are held by aliens.

The entire criticism of the bill seems to be leveled against its least important feature. The possible abuse of legislation is never regarded as a good argument against its adoption. There are few laws that can not be evaded, or, at least, where efforts will not be made to evade.

As I have had occasion to say on other occasions, the most important benefit to be conferred upon American shipping by the adoption of this bill is to allow the American registry of foreign-built ships which have been owned for years by American corporations. A few days ago, basing my statement on some figures then accessible, I said there were certain foreign-built ships owned by American citizens and American corporations which would represent a net tonnage of 250,000 tons, all of which can be admitted at once into our American marine. With the permission of the Senator from Missouri at this time, I should like to call attention to an article in the Shipping Illustrated, which states that there are now foreign-built ships owned by American vessels and American corporations flying foreign flags representing nearly 1,000,000 tons gross register; and if there be no objection, I should like to have this article from Shipping Illustrated, together with a list of these ships, printed as a part of my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CLAPP in the chair). Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. POMERENE. May I ask the Senator from New York who is the author of the article which he desires printed in the RECORD?

Mr. O'GORMAN. Shipping Illustrated is edited by Mr. R. de Tankerville and is published weekly at 22 Thames Street, New York City, by the Shipping Illustrated Co. As every line of this article is pertinent to the matter now being discussed, I am tempted to trespass upon the time of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED] to ask the Secretary to read it for the benefit of the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from New York for that purpose?

Mr. REED. I yield for that purpose.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read the part of the article referred to, which, entire, is as follows:

NEW YORK, Saturday, August 8, 1914.

OBSERVATIONS FROM THE BRIDGE.

It was to be expected that until the world had settled down to the actual realization of the influence of the war situation on every line of human activity there would be more or less of that demoralization which is inseparable from any cataclysm. Never before within the memory of any living man has such a period as the present been traversed; shipping business is at a standstill, mining, agriculture, and manufacturing are affected, yet there is nothing to indicate that speedy relief will be long in materializing. For one thing, the country is now confronted with the consequences of its folly in compelling its citizens, through oppressive laws and lack of laws, to conduct their carrying trade to foreign markets entirely in foreign bottoms.

Of course this can be speedily remedied by allowing the free transfer to American registry of ships built abroad and owned by American citizens or corporations. This would in no way affect our domestic commerce, in which only "enrolled" vessels are allowed to take part, and under existing laws—which no serious effort has as yet been made to amend—only American-built vessels may secure enrollment. It is not vital to our export trade, however, that the registry of such vessels as are listed in the opposite column be changed to American, for many maritime nations are still in a state of neutrality and no difficulty would be experienced in seeking the protection of the Scandinavian, Cuban, Uruguayan, and Greek flags should not other means prove available. The fact is not sufficiently appreciated here that the disorganization of trade in European waters is bound to bring over to these shores in search of employment an imposing number of cargo boats now owned in neutral countries bordering on the Mediterranean. Few of these vessels are seen ordinarily in the American trades, but with the shutting down of the shipping centers of the old world they will come hither to load the coal and grain no longer obtainable in Great Britain and in the Black Sea. It is almost superfluous to add that the crippling of the European trade centers will also affect ship repairing to a very large extent, and although it is reasonable to assume that only absolutely needed repairs will be carried out during the period of hostilities, there will be great demand for the facilities possessed by our leading establishments in the way of docking and repairing.

AMERICAN-OWNED VESSELS UNDER FOREIGN FLAGS.

We give below a list of vessels under foreign flags owned by American corporations. The vessels thus listed form an imposing fleet of nearly a million tons gross register, one-third of which is composed of tank steamers and another third of high-class passenger and cargo steamers fitted with refrigerating apparatus. The vessels of the White Star Line do not figure in this list, as it is believed that an agreement exists between the British Government and the International Mercantile Marine Co. to keep these vessels under the British flag, besides which the White Star fleet was hypothecated in Great Britain to defray the cost of the large liners built in recent years. Similarly, the fleet of the Leyland Line, which occupies the leading rank in the shipping trade of the Gulf ports, has not been taken into consideration, as this line is under separate management from the other fleets controlled by the International Mercantile Marine Co. The vessels of the American, Red Star, Atlantic Transport and Dominion Lines mentioned below were under American control prior to the formation of the trans-Atlantic combine and it is not believed that any obstacle exists to their transfer to American register. It will be noticed that the United States

Steel Corporation is the owner of five British vessels. This concern has now under charter an additional number of high-class cargo liners, but it can not be ascertained at present just how much the steel corporation is financially interested in the latter, although their immediate transfer to the American flag would present no difficulties. In the following table the date of construction is given opposite the name of each steamer and the gross register tonnage follows:

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I am very heartily in favor of this bill, and hope it will be passed, and passed speedily; but it seems to me, with the limited examination I have been able to give to the question, that to permit foreign-owned vessels to transfer to our flag by merely taking out articles of incorporation for a company in this country, and to permit that to be done at this time, might involve us in some serious complications. The moment one of these ships, although entirely owned by the subjects of a foreign power, is permitted to sail under our flag, it will clamorously demand its protection. The mere fact that we go through the form of organizing a corporation and taking out an American charter and transferring the vessel to an American company will not help us if, in fact, all that has been done is a mere subterfuge; if it is a mere paper transaction; if the beneficial ownership is, after all, vested where it was before the transaction began, to wit, in the subjects of foreign powers.

Mr. WEST. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator right there?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. REED. I do.

Mr. WEST. I do not know whether the Senator from Missouri took not of it at the time, but I desire to call his attention to an incident I mentioned several days ago. I referred to the vessel at that time as the Mississippi, though I now think it was the Texas, which, while sailing on the Bay of Smyrna, was fired into, if I recall correctly, by the Turks, or perhaps it was blown up by a mine in that bay. Does the Senator from Missouri recall whatever became of that case or whether it ever reached the prize court? If that vessel had an American registry, it seems to me to be practically, though I am not certain as to that, on all fours with the cases to which reference has been made.

Mr. REED. I am not sufficiently familiar with the case to throw any light upon it.

Coming back to the topic, I feel some hesitancy in expressing an opinion, but it occurs to me that there is danger lurking in the bill unless some amendment to it is adopted.

It seems to me, Mr. President, that all courts in the end would look at the substance rather than to the form. The Senator from New York makes the point, in answer to my interrogatory, that while it is true that vessels owned by individuals must be owned by citizens of the United States in order to entitle them to register under our flag, there is no limitation as to the ownership of the stock of corporations.

I want to say in reply to that, that I do not believe any foreign-built ship ought to be owned by a company which is merely organized here nominally, the real ownership being in a foreign country. I do not think that is right. I would be perfectly willing in a time of absolute peace to say that any vessel wherever and however built and however owned might register under our flag, subject to local conditions which we saw fit to attach. I think that would be wise. While I think it would be wise in a time of absolute peace, I doubt its wisdom now.

The hope has been expressed on the floor of the Senate that under conditions now existing it will be possible for American citizens to actually become the owners of a large number of foreign-built vessels, and that there will be a transfer to American ownership; but the fact that at the present time a company can be organized in this country without any of the stock being owned here, except three or four shares, does not meet the difficulty which confronts us, for that may result in a number of those vessels merely transferring their allegiance in the nominal way of taking out a charter here.

Mr. President, I think it would be wise to amend the amendment by making it read:

At least two-thirds of whose stock is owned by citizens of the United States.

I say that because I am perfectly confident that if the owners of German steamship lines, or English or French lines, come over here and take out corporate charters and make a nominal transfer of their vessels without any change in stock ownership, it will almost inevitably follow that they will claim the defense of our flag, and we will become embroiled in a controversy from which now happily we are entirely free.

I offer that amendment to the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Missouri to the amendment of the Senator from Delaware will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to amend the amendment by inserting before the word "whose" the words "at least two-thirds of," so that it will read:

At least two-thirds of whose stock is likewise owned by the citizens of the United States.

Mr. LANE. Mr. President——

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, as we are about to vote——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Oregon first addressed the Chair.

Mr. GALLINGER. I rise to suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The absence of a quorum is suggested. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Mr. JONES. I desire to announce that the junior Senator from Michigan [Mr. TOWNSEND] is necessarily absent. He is paired with the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON]. I ask that this announcement may stand for the day.

I also announce that the senior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] is necessarily absent on account of illness.

Mr. SWANSON. I desire to announce that my colleague [Mr. MARTIN of Virginia] is unavoidably detained from the Senate. I will let this announcement stand for the day.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I am requested to announce the absence of the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. CHILTON] on official business. He is paired with the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. FALL].

Mr. PAGE. I wish to announce the unavoidable absence of my colleague [Mr. DILLINGHAM], and to state that he is paired with the Senator from Maryland [Mr. SMITH].

Mr. GALLINGER. I am requested to announce the unavoidable absence of the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. GOFF], and his pair with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN]. I also announce the unavoidable absence of the junior Senator from Maine [Mr. BURLEIGH] on account of death in his family; and also the unavoidable absence of the two Senators from Massachusetts.

Mr. SMOOT. I desire to announce the unavoidable absence of my colleague [Mr. SUTHERLAND]. He has a general pair with the senior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. CLARKE]. I also desire to announce the absence of the junior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. STEPHENSON] and his pair with the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE].

Mr. WHITE. I wish to announce the absence of my colleague [Mr. BANKHEAD], who is unavoidably detained from the Senate. He is paired. I ask that this amendment may stand for the day.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Fifty Senators have answered to the roll call. There is a quorum present.

Mr. LANE obtained the floor.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair has recognized the Senator from Oregon.

Mr. LANE. I give way to the Senator from Delaware.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Oregon yields to the Senator from Delaware.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Mr. President, I desire to say that, in view of the sentiment which I know prevails among Senators, I am willing to accept the amendment just offered by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED] to the amendment submitted by myself, so as to make it part of my amendment. The amendment of the Senator from Missouri provides that two-thirds of the stock of the holding company shall be owned by American citizens. My reason for accepting the amendment is that in a measure it certainly provides against unfortunate contingencies which I think might arise. I think that American citizens ought to own entirely the vessels which it is proposed shall come under our flag, but if a two-thirds interest in these vessels is owned by Americans I think it will be a great evidence of our good faith in allowing our flag to fly over them. For that reason I accept the amendment.

I wish to call the attention of the Senator who has charge of this bill to the fact that if under the provisions of the bill as it stands now, unamended, one of the vessels proposed to be allowed American registry shall be seized while flying our flag, in all human probability the first prize court applied to will condemn that vessel as a lawful prize, and then what force or effect can we hope to derive from the provisions of this bill which we have debated so long? The whole plan, the whole scheme, the whole idea of this bill will go up in the smoke of the first gun that is fired across the bows of such a vessel, which will not in reality be an American vessel. If we do anything, we want to accomplish something of substantial good and benefit to the commerce of this country.

What good, may I ask, will foreign-owned steamships be to the commerce of this country? Let our own citizens acquire them if they can, and if they own them, Mr. President, they will pass unscathed through any prize court. It is with that end in view that I have insisted so strongly on this amendment as the best I can possibly get, and I hope that it will obtain a majority vote in the Senate.

Mr. O'GORMAN. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Delaware yield to the Senator from New York?

Mr. SAULSBURY. Certainly.

Mr. O'GORMAN. I have just had read at the Secretary's desk an extract from Shipping Illustrated, stating in substance that the gross tonnage of foreign-built ships now owned either by American citizens or American corporations aggregates almost a million tons. Those vessels have been owned for years by American citizens or American corporations. Is it the idea of the Senator from Delaware that we should not give American registry to any of those vessels which have been owned by American corporations for years unless those American corporations are able to prove that 75 per cent of their stock is actually owned by citizens of the United States?

Mr. SAULSBURY. No such effect will flow from the amendment offered by the Senator from Missouri to the amendment which I have proposed. His amendment only provides that two-thirds of the stock shall be owned by citizens of the United States.

I will say to the Senator from New York that if he would prepare and offer a satisfactory amendment providing that where any vessel or any number of vessels have heretofore been substantially owned by citizens of the United States they shall now be admitted to registry under our flag without regard to this particular provision, I would support it. I am trying to provide against fraud upon the flag and the possibility of our becoming involved in complications with foreign nations who are now belligerents.

Mr. O'GORMAN. And the purpose of the Senator's amendment, as well as the purpose of the amendment offered by the junior Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED], which the Senator from Delaware has accepted, is to impose that restriction upon American corporations which have been the owners of these ships for years, some of them 5, 10, 15, or 20 years?

Mr. SAULSBURY. The only restriction that either the amendment offered by the Senator from Missouri or myself will impose upon the owners of ships desiring American registry is that they shall satisfy the collector under oath as to the citizenship of the owners. In the case of the amendment of the Senator from Missouri the collector must be satisfied that two-thirds of the stock of the company which controls the boats is owned by American citizens.

Now, if the Senator from New York is simply seeking to transfer to our flag ships in which our own citizens have a trifling interest, it does not seem to me that this is a proper occasion for us to take the risk involved.

Mr. O'GORMAN. Does the Senator believe that if his amendment or the one offered by the junior Senator from Missouri is adopted a single ship will be added to our merchant marine?

Mr. SAULSBURY. I will say, Mr. President, there is every reason to believe that if any ships under any circumstances will be added to our merchant marine any ship which is owned to the extent of two-thirds by our own citizens will immediately seek registry under the American flag.

Mr. O'GORMAN. Does the Senator known of a single foreign-built ship now owned by an American corporation where two-thirds of the stock of the American corporation is held by citizens of United States?

Mr. SAULSBURY. I am not familiar with the citizenship of corporations owning shipping interests.

Mr. O'GORMAN. I wish to repeat, Mr. President, what I have said several times, that if it is the purpose of any Senator, no matter what his motives may be, absolutely to defeat this emergency legislation, the best way to accomplish it is to adopt this amendment.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, before the Senator from New York takes his seat——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Oregon [Mr. LANE] has the floor. Does he yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. LANE. I yield to the Senator from Montana.

Mr. WALSH. I thank the Senator from Oregon. I wish to inquire of the Senator from New York—the document read at the desk did not convey the information—as to what information he can give us concerning the ownership of the stock of American corporations owning vessels sailing under a foreign registry. My understanding is that the stock is practically all held in this country, and ships controlled by such corporations would, therefore, be entitled to registry under the amendment offered by the Senator from Delaware.

Mr. O'GORMAN. I have no understanding that all the stock is practically held in this country. I assume that all the stock is not held in this country. We find that our American railroad stocks are held in large part by foreigners, and I would be quite surprised if a very large part, perhaps a majority, of the stock of the various steamship companies, including steamship companies in our coastwise trade, were not held by foreigners.

Mr. WALSH. Is the Senator able to give us any definite information with respect to that?

Mr. O'GORMAN. No.

Mr. LANE. Mr. President, this country is confronted with a peculiar situation, due to the fact that the nations occupying the greater portion of the inhabitable world at this time are at war with one another, and also due to the fact that in the past we have had navigation laws which practically excluded the people of this country from participation in the navigation of the seas. As a result we are marooned. Indirectly, I presume, this country in a financial way will be a great suf-

I am trying to provide against fraud upon the flag and the possibility of our becoming involved in complications with foreign nations who are now belligerents.

Mr. O'GORMAN. And the purpose of the Senator's amendment, as well as the purpose of the amendment offered by the junior Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED], which the Senator from Delaware has accepted, is to impose that restriction upon American corporations which have been the owners of these ships for years, some of them 5, 10, 15, or 20 years?

Mr. SAULSBURY. The only restriction that either the amendment offered by the Senator from Missouri or myself will impose upon the owners of ships desiring American registry is that they shall satisfy the collector under oath as to the citizenship of the owners. In the case of the amendment of the Senator from Missouri the collector must be satisfied that two-thirds of the stock of the company which controls the boats is owned by American citizens.

Now, if the Senator from New York is simply seeking to transfer to our flag ships in which our own citizens have a trifling interest, it does not seem to me that this is a proper occasion for us to take the risk involved.

Mr. O'GORMAN. Does the Senator believe that if his amendment or the one offered by the junior Senator from Missouri is adopted a single ship will be added to our merchant marine?

Mr. SAULSBURY. I will say, Mr. President, there is every reason to believe that if any ships under any circumstances will be added to our merchant marine any ship which is owned to the extent of two-thirds by our own citizens will immediately seek registry under the American flag.

Mr. O'GORMAN. Does the Senator known of a single foreign-built ship now owned by an American corporation where two-thirds of the stock of the American corporation is held by citizens of United States?

Mr. SAULSBURY. I am not familiar with the citizenship of corporations owning shipping interests.

Mr. O'GORMAN. I wish to repeat, Mr. President, what I have said several times, that if it is the purpose of any Senator, no matter what his motives may be, absolutely to defeat this emergency legislation, the best way to accomplish it is to adopt this amendment.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, before the Senator from New York takes his seat——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Oregon [Mr. LANE] has the floor. Does he yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. LANE. I yield to the Senator from Montana.

Mr. WALSH. I thank the Senator from Oregon. I wish to inquire of the Senator from New York—the document read at the desk did not convey the information—as to what information he can give us concerning the ownership of the stock of American corporations owning vessels sailing under a foreign registry. My understanding is that the stock is practically all held in this country, and ships controlled by such corporations would, therefore, be entitled to registry under the amendment offered by the Senator from Delaware.

Mr. O'GORMAN. I have no understanding that all the stock is practically held in this country. I assume that all the stock is not held in this country. We find that our American railroad stocks are held in large part by foreigners, and I would be quite surprised if a very large part, perhaps a majority, of the stock of the various steamship companies, including steamship companies in our coastwise trade, were not held by foreigners.

Mr. WALSH. Is the Senator able to give us any definite information with respect to that?

Mr. O'GORMAN. No.

Mr. LANE. Mr. President, this country is confronted with a peculiar situation, due to the fact that the nations occupying the greater portion of the inhabitable world at this time are at war with one another, and also due to the fact that in the past we have had navigation laws which practically excluded the people of this country from participation in the navigation of the seas. As a result we are marooned. Indirectly, I presume, this country in a financial way will be a great sufferer; not the largest, but one of the great sufferers from this war.

There are two great needs at this time. In Europe they need supplies. They need food. They need clothing. In this country we need a market for a surplus of products of food and clothing, which we could sell them at a fair price if we had ships in which to deliver the goods. We have no ships. As nearly as I can ascertain, there are but very few, a limited number—I would not dare say how few—which are legitimately entitled to enter upon the trade at this time.

There was an article published in the New York Herald a day or two ago which stated that the majority of these ships are owned by American citizens who have formed themselves into corporations. These ships fly the flags of other countries and sail under them and have been registered in foreign lands. They are manned with crews of foreigners, and at this time they are out of commission, for the reason that the nation under whose registry they sail is at war with some other nation.

When this bill was presented here a few days ago I had the hope that it was an emergency measure for the relief of all of the people of this country. In the South the planters who raise cotton are being met with conditions which are absolutely disastrous, I am told. In the Middle West and all through our farming sections, in the valley of the Mississippi River and farther west on the Pacific coast, the farmers have raised millions upon millions of bushels of corn and wheat, and there is no market for either. In fact, the man who has raised the most cotton and the man who has raised the most corn and the most wheat and gathered for the use of other people these necessities of life, the man who has sweated out under the burning rays of the sun to do so, is the man who is now being punished. I presumed when this bill was introduced that it was to assist those men in marketing their supplies, and also that it would bring relief to the suffering and unfortunate people—good people all, yet mistaken in their motives, perhaps—throughout Europe, who to-day are killing one another by thousands. Men are dying and being left in trenches five and six deep, and for every man that dies there is left a woman—a sister, a mother, a sweetheart, a wife—or a child who is deprived of the support of its father, its brother, or its caretaker.

It is a most critical state of affairs with all the people of those nations. They are a jealous people, jealous of one another, as vicious in their temper at this time as a yellow jacket; and this Nation, if it does its duty by itself and by them, must be careful how it interferes with any of their affairs in any way which might bring trouble upon us.

We have one duty before us, and that is to act the part of a good and honest neighbor, and our acts must be above suspicion. We owe it to these countries that are suffering and we owe it to ourselves.

The condition of this country at this time, when it has an abundance of the necessaries of life to sell, which the unfortunate people of Europe sorely need and are anxious to purchase from us at a fair price, and yet which, owing to the fact that we have no ships in which to transport the hard-earned products of the farmer and other producers of this country, must remain a burden on their hands, and the people of Europe suffer hunger for want of them, is an arraignment of our shipping laws which calls for a speedy revision of them.

I shall not enter into a discussion of the shameful history of other legislation which has preceded this, whereby the shipping interest of a great nation has been sacrificed for the benefit of a small coterie of the least worthy of its citizens, and through their greed, aided by the treachery and truckling subservience of unfaithful representatives, it finds itself at this time in the debased condition in that respect which it occupies to-day. All of this will be written and properly commented upon by others in due time. At this time, with an urgent demand existing for the products of this country, we have no ships in which to transport them. The ships of the countries which offer us a market have been driven off the seas, and an emergency exists which it is our duty to relieve. We owe this duty not only to ourselves, but also to our afflicted neighbors across the seas. In our efforts to accomplish this commendable task we are bound by the rules of war to do no act which will be prejudicial to any one of the warring nations.

It so happens that as a Nation we are also in a position at this time where we have need of a large number of colliers and supply ships for our Navy. It is said to be a fact beyond successful dispute that our Navy, in the event that we should be so unfortunate as to be drawn into a war, would be practically of no value to us for the reason that we have no vessels upon which we could ship supplies to it. About all we could do with it under these circumstances would be to withdraw a large part of it into some safe harbor until the war was over. We need vessels, therefore, to act as auxiliaries to our Navy, and an emergency exists in that respect. We need vessels, also, of the same type to carry our goods to market, and our need in that respect is also an emergent one. This Nation is sure to suffer great loss if it longer leaves these wants unattended to. The remedy is simple, the need immediate. The construction and purchase at this time by the Government of a sufficient number of vessels to meet one need will also supply the other. What excuse is there for not doing so? The ownership and use of these vessels to be operated by this Government to carry our foodstuffs and other products abroad neither can nor will give offense to any other nation. Their operation will afford relief and even give profit to the producers of this country. Of what use to the people of this country is its Government if that Government does not come to its relief in a time of emergency in their affairs, when it can do so without running any risk and at the same time provide for a serious defect in its national defense?

The bill under consideration allows American registration of vessels now flying the flags of foreign countries which are at war with one another when such vessels are purchased or already owned by citizens of this country. This provision is almost sure to make trouble for this country and will cause disputes to arise respecting such transactions and transfers when the European war has ended. Under the terms of this measure this Nation will have to stand sponsor, among others, for the good faith of a number of enterprising gentlemen upon whose sense of honor it is not safe to bet anything of value. It is a risky project for us to enter into, and I hope it will be carefully considered and safeguarded before we venture upon it.

I very much doubt if any business man would invest his money in a vessel which will have to run so many chances of being seized by some one or other of the combatants. I have been to sea in many different kinds of craft, but you could not give me any one of them to be held upon such terms of ownership. The bill will, however, "let in" quite a number of steamers which are now owned by unpatriotic American citizens, but which, flying foreign flags and manned with foreign officers and crews, are now registered as foreign bottoms.

These vessels are subject to seizure on the high seas by any one of the nations at war with the particular one whose colors they falsely sail under. It will be a regular godsend and source of infinite gain to these dodgers of our shipping laws if we, at the risk of incurring war with better men than they are, can be "shooed," under the stress of an emergency, into allowing them to shift their flags and come back under our registry and protection at this time, when it becomes profitable for them to do so. As soon as the war is over, and it again becomes more profitable for them, they will promptly register as foreign bottoms; and I have no doubt that we shall be called upon to stay here on some other hot August evening to devise and rush through a measure which will "let them out" from under our flag, back into registry with some other country, where the "pickings" for the time are better than they are here.

I am informed that there are a large number of such vessels belonging to American citizens; and so far as I am concerned I think that inasmuch as they have registered foreign for selfish reasons, and in order to make profit by so doing, in decency they ought to stand by the countries which have registered their vessels and protected them in their business for so many years. This measure provides that vessels which have been built by their American owners in foreign yards for the especial and sole reason that they could be constructed there 30 per cent cheaper than here, and which, ever since they were built, have been manned with foreign crews because it was cheaper to so man them, and have registered foreign in order to dodge their taxes and thus round out their program, and who, in addition to these advantages, have used their vessels to keep American ships off the seas, shall now come back into the fold under our special care and on equal terms with other American ships.

To whom are these special favors to be granted? Who are the principal beneficiaries under this bill? The people, the cotton planter, the wheat grower, the other farmer? No! This measure will afford but little or no relief to them, for the reason that very few, if any, of this tax-dodging fleet of ships owned by American citizens—save the mark—are merchant vessels, and none others are available at this time. Whose ships are they, and what number of them will come in under American registry?

In an article in the New York Herald of two days ago I find this statement in respect to this matter:

At the offices of the Standard Oil Co. it was said that no decision had been reached in regard to the registration of their fleet of steamships, although it was admitted that the question was under consideration and that the passage of the bill would mean that action to this end would be taken. The Standard Oil fleet, including the vessels controlled by the subsidiary companies, is one of the largest in the world and practically equals in tonnage the total number of vessels now flying the American flag.

BIG STANDARD OIL FLEET.

The Dutch Oil Co., one of the important subsidiary companies of the Standard, has 40 vessels under its control, of a total of 112,000 tons, and practically all flying the Dutch flag. These, it is believed, will be placed under American registry, as well as the many vessels flying English, German, French, Norwegian, Danish, Swedish, Austrian, Italian, and Russian flags, which either are controlled or owned outright by the Standard interests.

* * * * * * *

Next in importance, say marine authorities to the Standard Oil fleet is that of the United States Steel corporation. It now numbers more than 40 vessels, principally under the English and German flags, and, like that of the Standard Oil Co., is being increased by the addition of new vessels. Its tonnage is estimated at 80,000 tons, and the vessels ply from Atlantic and Pacific ports to all parts of the world.

Officials of the Barber Line, whose vessels ply principally to ports in the Far East, would make no statement on the probable efficacy of the bill, should it become a law, in building up a greater American merchant marine, although it is said on good authority that this line will be among the first to apply for American registry for their vessels.

PAY HIGHER WAGES.

Objection is raised by some steamship lines to certain clauses in the bill which make it mandatory on the part of the owners of vessels seeking American registry to employ nothing but American officers and seamen. On this basis a strong opposition developed to the measure, it being contended that it would be impossible to compete with foreign lines because of the higher wages which are demanded by American officers and seamen.

That complaint is set up at this time; that objection is made to this bill at a time when all foreign-owned ships are off the sea, when there are no competing vessels. They object to the clause which demands that American seamen shall man these vessels which are to go under American registry. They desire to come under our registry and under the protection of the flag of this country manned by foreign officers and foreign seamen, one ship of the Standard Oil Co.'s tank line going out officered by Germans, another by Belgians, and a third by English crews under our registry and flying our flag.

You can readily understand the anomalous position in which this country would be placed in protecting these gentry and their ships and insuring their safety at sea—vessels manned in such a manner—and yet they demand that at this time, and the bill has in it a provision which permits of that being done.

I protest it. I protest allowing American registry and the protection of the American Navy to a vessel which goes to sea with a foreign crew for the reason that it is not willing to pay American seamen the regular wages which an American seaman is entitled to.

This measure will afford little or no relief, as I have said, to the farmer, to the cotton raiser, to the wheat grower, for the reason that very few, if any, of this fleet of ships will come under the registry. Whose ships are they? I have asked that question. One of the largest fleets, as I have said, and one which practically equals in tonnage the total number of all of the other vessels now flying the American flag, belongs to the genial and wholesouled Standard Oil Co. These steamers are mostly tank steamers. They carry oil, and if they are allowed to register can carry neither wheat nor cotton nor any other merchandise, unless you could squeeze it down and compress it and force it through an 8-inch pipe into the hold of the vessel and into the tank, which can not be done. They were not built to stow such cargo. If they are allowed to sail under our flag, the flag which for years past they have flouted, as this bill grants them the privilege of doing, they will continue to carry oil, and they will have the right to demand convoy by our warships in delivering their wares. By dodging about from one registration to another they will have incurred the risk of seizure on the high seas by all the countries at war with one another, and this Nation will be put to the expense of guarding them and minimizing their chances in that respect.

It is utterly unfair to ask this Nation to be a party to such a jughandled proposition. These vessels are now snugly moored in our and other neutral ports, and dare not go to sea, and if they are now permitted to hoist our flag, it will be a transfer of registry that will and ought to be resented by the nations to whom their officers and crews have sworn allegiance, and this country may be compelled to fight for having been a party to such a transparent transfer.

Another and the next largest of these bogus foreign fleets, with 40 steamers under foreign registry now seeking the Nation's aid and protection, with sure faith in the people's servants, is the kindly, beneficent, and humble Steel Trust. What paeans of joy and outbursts of gratitude will arise from the people of this country when they wake up and realize that in the stress of their hardship, brought upon them by, perhaps, the greatest armed conflict that the world has ever seen, an emergency measure purporting to be for their relief has been rushed through the Senate whereof the greatest and almost the only beneficiaries are the good old Standard Oil Co. and the equally revered Steel Trust.

The author of this bill, in his exuberant enthusiasm to get our products to market and relieve the distress in starving Europe has, guilelessly, no doubt, so drawn it that about the only producers in sight at this time who will surely benefit from it are the Standard Oil Co. and the Steel Trust; and the hungry ones over the sea will have to assuage their hunger and content themselves with vaseline or kerosene sandwiches enveloped in boiler plate. [Laughter.] Neither the cotton planters of the South nor the wheat or corn growers of the middle States of the West nor any other producer of any useful thing now needed in Europe will secure much, if any, relief from their distress by allowing this flag-shifting fleet to dodge back under our registry at this time. As a matter of fact, they run a serious risk of having to fight and lose their lives and property in defending the attempt which will be made by the owners of these ships to evade their obligations to the countries under whose laws they sought and secured the right to register and fly the flags under whose protection they sail the seas.

The owners of these ships know no country. They have neither patriotism nor politics. They subscribe equal amounts to the campaign funds of all parties, and would as soon and as cheerfully and as quickly desert this country in its hour of need and hoist a foreign flag and sail away under a foreign registry and leave it to its fate in time of war, with as little sense of obligation or gratitude as they now show in deserting the countries which have stood guard over them and against us up until this time.

I do not think the people of this country feel under any obligation to the Standard Oil Co. and the Steel Trust of so deep and lasting a character as to render them desirous of going to war with some other nation in order that they may shift the registry of their ships for the purposes of private gain. I would not want to shoot some one nor get shot myself in such a cause.

I wonder if any Senator here thinks for a moment that either Germany or England or France or the American people, the real victims of misplaced confidence, are going to be fooled by that kind of a transfer of the registration of such craft?

The fact must not be overlooked that some of the American owners of this fleet of foreign vessels object to being compelled to employ American crews, and wish the right, and no doubt will obtain it, to employ crews of foreigners, for the reason that they can hire them cheaper than Americans. No merchant marine can or will ever be built up by such methods or such shipowners.

This country owes nothing to men who operate their shipping as foreigners, neither can it afford to run any risk of war, and it does run a serious risk at this time if they are allowed to register under the circumstances by standing sponsor for them in their attempt to evade their obligations to the countries whose colors they asked permission to use.

The only hope for getting our products to the markets of Europe and elsewhere at this time and the only honorable method open to us now and which we ought to pursue, which will also be of general benefit and not for the personal profit of those who have a plethora of this world's goods, is for this Government to purchase a fleet of carriers and use its great power to aid the people to reach the markets of the world, free from the suspicion of having used a subterfuge or of having taken an advantage of the calamitous and chaotic condition under which all Europe is laboring while doing so.

If the ships of foresworn Americans are taken in under the registry of this country at this time, under the existing circumstances it will be an act of bad faith on our part, in my opinion, which later along will be justly protested and for which we as a nation will have to pay. In making a final settlement for this or some other error we will perhaps need our Navy, and need it badly. It is without supply ships and unable to be properly handled by reason of that defect. Common prudence, therefore, and plain ordinary horse sense demands that we as a nation purchase at this time, when they can be bought cheaply, a fleet of 30 or 40 good steamers suitable for both purposes. Now is the appointed time; after war begins it will be too late.

Whatever else we do we should purchase these auxiliaries before we pass this bill. Its passage will probably render their services a necessity which we will be unable to supply. Half the value of our fighting ability at sea is lost to us on account of the lack of such vessels.

I am going then to offer as a substitute for the bill an amendment providing for the purchase of such auxiliary ships. It is my opinion that that is the only safe course which this country can pursue at this time. There is question going to be made when we take over, as we will immediately after this bill has passed, all the foreign registered ships of the Standard Oil Co. and the Steel Trust and other corporations who have registered their ships foreign for the purpose of evading our shipping laws. That fact will be set up. They may be captured, and they will bring influence to bear on us, and Congress will be besieged to afford them protection. If the bill were amended so that it would apply only to ships which were purchased after it had become a law, when such transactions were bona fide, it would be a different matter. But this bill provides for taking over several hundred vessels which have been sailing all the seas of the world, carrying the products of this Nation, which were placed in this country by nature and mined out of the land by the hands of American citizens, into the markets of the world under foreign registry, with crews who have sworn allegiance to some other country, owned by men who are part owners in other ships which are outfitted as auxiliary cruisers and are allotted munitions of war and arms or guns for the purpose of wiping the shipping of this and other countries off the seas at any time that war exists between them and us.

Unpatriotic citizens are going to be, under this bill, the principal beneficiaries. No cotton planter will get one bale of cotton to Europe unless some different provisions are made. No wheat grower will benefit. Their crops will rot upon their hands, and immediately and promptly the enormous dividends, which in one instance ran last year at the rate of $1,000,000 a day, will begin again to accrue to these people who have registered their ships foreign and now, under this bill, are to be allowed to dodge back in under the registry of this country, with the right to demand the protection of this Navy, a Navy which has not ships enough to carry coal to it.

The real, nice live question presented will be that this country will have to go to war with some country that has colliers for a navy. It is nearly as important as the need for carriers of cotton, which we can weave into cloth and wear ourselves, and wheat, which we will be compelled to grind into flour and ourselves consume. There is a need for colliers and ships as tenders to the Navy of this country. It is half paralyzed with helplessness on account of the lack of them.

I should like to see a bill come in here and be passed which would reach the actual needs, the real needs, of the people of this country—the plain, good, common people, who when the country goes to war will have to go out and fight for it and die for it and who have to pay the expense of maintaining the war.

Therefore I offer as a substitute for this bill a repetition of that which was presented here the other day by the Senator from Nevada [Mr. NEWLANDS]. It asks for $25,000,000 for the purchase of such carriers, such supply ships for the use of our Navy, and which will carry in the meantime, until we need them for our Navy, the products of this country to the suffering and the unfortunate people of Europe. I offer it as a substitute for this bill, on which the best lawyers in the Senate differ as to the meaning thereof. I am going to ask for a vote by yeas and nays on it.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I rise to a question of order. Is a substitute for the pending measure in order at this time?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is not in order until after the pending amendment has been disposed of.

Mr. LANE. I intend to offer it when it is in order.

Mr. THOMAS. I have no objection to its presentation at the proper time.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, I desire to state some views in support of a position I have taken, in order that those views may be recorded in the proper place provided by our parliamentary system for the expression of the public view of any man supporting public measures on this floor. But a moment, I trust certainly not more than a moment or two, will be occupied by me.

I am not able to agree with any of the advanced reasons urged by any of the eminent Senators as sufficient for the support of this amendment, nor do I dissent from them. I rather propose to express for myself my particular reasons upon these particular reasons and announce an unqualified and unreserved support of the amendments which have for their purpose the preventing the ships purchased by the citizens of this Government or which shall in spirit be owned by the Government being controlled by those who might be antagonistic to our welfare, both commercial and military.

Mr. President, it is always a mark of agreeable vanity for a man to refer to something he himself in the past has done or something he himself has said whenever he wishes to vindicate his previous observations or previous conduct. It is an agreeable occupation not forbidden by any strict rule of propriety, and therefore I may be pardoned if I indulge in it for just a second.

When I presented before this honorable body my theory for the support of the view of the President in behalf of the measure looking to the repeal of the free-tolls provision, I stated some things which were regarded as the expressions of extravagance. Many eminent journals and excellent newspapers of the country rather regarded certain of my views as oratorical hyperbole—the mere exclamations on the part of an alarmist. I then said that I had never been in favor of the construction of the Panama Canal in the manner in which it was laid and executed, and added that it was my solemn opinion, as I viewed the procession of history, that that event would entail upon my country a chapter of incidents, a procession of responsibilities, of so great a character that they could not be detailed in public speech in public place. I did say, if I remember my expression, "the stroke that gashed the side of the earth in the hopes that merely the waters of commerce would run through would yet be the blow that opened a viaduct for the blood of my countrymen to run through" Saying as I did, fearing as I do, hoping, of course, that such event may never transpire, yet I now give the reason why I support this amendment apart from the reasons advanced by the eminent Senators who have supported the amendment from their different viewpoints.

Mr. President, no man in this body will be less careful than I as to any expression that might be tortured in public opinion to allude to the unhappy and disastrous conflict that is pending across the sea. In the observance of our strict neutrality I will be found, I hope, among the foremost in its absolute obedience, but I will be permitted a departure from silence, in expression not misunderstood, in calling attention to events that I fear can happen.

Let us illustrate for a moment—a mere conjecture of the imagination—that Japan does have what we read in the papers, an alliance, offensive and defensive, with England. Let us assume that a Japanese ship would start forth from Japanese waters with a view of reaching around to the Atlantic and assailing one of the enemies of her ally. We will assume that enemy to be either Germany in the North Atlantic or Austria upon the far Adriatic.

Mr. GALLINGER. May I interrupt the Senator?

Mr. LEWIS. Surely.

Mr. GALLINGER. I always listen to the Senator with great interest. I will ask the Senator if it has not been made to appear that the alliance between Japan and England relates o affairs in the East, that if there is trouble in that part of the world Japan will cooperate there rather than in war such as the nations are now engaged in? I do not know that that is a fact, but I have seen it so stated.

Mr. LEWIS. I thank the Senator from New Hampshire. It may be, if there be such an alliance, it is limited to the fields of operation suggested by him. He will see from the concluding observation that I am now entering upon that such was my anticipation.

We will assume that it is presumed on the part of the Japanese that by moving from the Atlantic they may either aid their allies or intercept some ship that may be coming from the Orient toward Germany, anxious to join with the main force to the Atlantic, or to prevent the German ship from coming from the Province of Kiaochow, the German possession of the Orient, the Japanese ship shall proceed in advance and to prevent the German warships from uniting with her fleet upon the Atlantic; the Japanese ship, to accomplish the object, should find itself in our canal, and, to use a mere figure of speech as I am not speaking of any now actual conditions, to prevent the union of the German ships from the Pacific with the ships on the Atlantic the Japanese ship shall blow up the Panama Canal or blow into it such obstructions as should prevent these ships by force going through our canal, then the United States will have been forced into the conflict. While such would be a violation, as we well know, of the provisions of treaties and would only be excused on the ground of an extreme measure of war, we realize that in times of war treaties serve but little purpose. The treaty against the advance into Belgium, or that of Holland, the peace of Utrecht, or, indeed, that of the affair of Trent, seem to have little weight in the minds of eminent statesmen in certain parts of the world to-day.

Now, the point that is in my mind strongly is this: Supposing we in this moment of what we call an emergency are swept from our substantial moorings, from the calm consideration of the interests of the Nation at large, and merely that we may serve a temporary emergency permit the ships of foreign countries to be purchased by apparently Americans, the flag of America reared at the masthead carrying with it all the protection and benefits it assures, and yet owned by citizens of foreign countries. Suddenly, sir, we find ourselves in this unfortunate condition, which my imagination, let us say, may have drawn as a mere indulgence of doleful fear—the necessity of national defense on our seas against a combined European enemy. Then, sir, under the privileges of this act instead of being able to promptly impress these vessels into service of our Navy there as auxiliaries, as demanded by the Senator from Nevada [Mr. NEWLANDS], and most strongly fortified by observations from the Senator from Oregon [Mr. LANE], we would find ourselves in that peculiar position which Spain found herself when in conflict with England, when she used vessels owned in France, when upon a time known to the memory of the historians in this body the ships turned their power against the country of the flag and fought for the land of their owners. The ships owned by foreigners, Mr. President, would serve no object of our success; such under foreign ownership would execute the ancient expression of "blood being thicker than water." We would not be enabled to impress these ships for immediate uses of our Navy or to be sure of their loyalty or to be guaranteed of their fealty. To the contrary, probably these foreign-owned ships would have the American flag hauled down and the flag of the country of the owners would be hauled up and they at once be converted into a fleet of enemy's ships. This could transpire by nothing but a command of the officers and crew, providing there was anyone in charge of that ship who held allegiance to its owners. Thus it must be perfectly plain that unless there was such ownership in these ships we are providing for of so large a percentage that the American spirit at this particular time would have the guaranty which it should have at such a critical hour, it might be a fatal blunder. We should be assured of the fealty and patriotism not only of the owner of the ship but its command and its crew. Eminent writers on international law discussing these exigencies as to other lands have made clear the view that there are differences in events of peace and those in time of war. Mr. Wheaton in his work on international law has occasion to say:

> A distinction is made between the ship, which is held bound by the character imposed upon it by the authority of the Government from which all the documents issue, and the goods, whose character has no such dependence upon the authority of the State. In time of war a more strict principle may be necessary.

Therefore, I respectfully urge that because of the things which the mind has a right to anticipate; because of things which conditions suggest to the thoughtful soul at this serious hour, because of those unexpected but ever-arising exigencies which can occur in a theater of operation such as there is all about us, it would be for reasons other than the mere service of merchandise, it would be for reasons other than the mere matter of commerce, seriously dangerous, in my opinion, that there should be ships bought from any foreign owners or foreign countries and left in such a position of foreign ownership that their fealty, fidelity, or service to us in the hour of unexpected but possible emergency could be surely relied upon and assured.

Mr. President, since we do realize that it was in just such events as are now existing that similar conditions of distress did arise to other countries as that which I dare fear may arise as to my own—it is a time when prudence suggests caution and patriotism should summon us on guard. I support the amendment requiring two-thirds of the ownership of these to be purchased ships to be held by bona fide Americans.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Delaware [Mr. SAULSBURY].

Mr. WEST. We have been discussing so many amendments that I should like to have the pending amendment read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read the amendment.

The SECRETARY. On page 3, line 7, after the word "thereof," insert "at least two-thirds of whose stock is likewise owned by citizens of the United States."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment. [Putting the question.] The noes appear to have it.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The yeas and nays are demanded. Is there a second? [After a pause.] The Chair is of opinion that there is not a sufficient second. The request for the yeas and nays will be submitted again.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The absence of a quorum having been suggested, the Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Hollis	O'Gorman	Smoot
Borah	Hughes	Overman	Sterling
Brady	James	Page	Stone
Brandegee	Johnson	Perkins	Swanson
Bristow	Jones	Pittman	Thomas
Bryan	Kern	Poindexter	Thompson
Chamberlain	Lane	Pomerene	Thornton
Clapp	Lee, Md.	Ransdell	Tillman
Colt	Lewis	Saulsbury	Vardaman
Culberson	McCumber	Shafroth	Walsh
Cummins	Martine, N. J.	Sheppard	West
Fall	Myers	Shively	White
Gallinger	Nelson	Simmons	Williams
Gronna	Newlands	Smith, Ga.

Mr. JAMES. I desire to announce that my colleague [Mr. CAMDEN] is unavoidably absent and is paired. This announcement will stand for the day.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Fifty-five Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

Mr. O'GORMAN. Before taking a vote on the final passage of the bill, I ask leave at this time to move an amendment affecting——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair desires to inform the Senator from New York that there is an amendment now pending, the amendment of the Senator from Delaware [Mr. SAULSBURY].

Mr. SAULSBURY. I renew my request for the yeas and nays.

Mr. O'GORMAN I understood that that was disposed of. The result of the vote was announced.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair does not want to have the Senator put it too strongly. A demand was made for a quorum pending the request for the yeas and nays.

Mr. O'GORMAN. But the Chair decided that there were not a sufficient number seconding the demand, and I assumed that that closed the parliamentary stage of the matter.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair decided once that in his judgment there were not a sufficient number seconding the demand, and the question was then put to the Senate again, and, with that pending, the absence of a quorum was suggested.

Mr. GALLINGER. The yeas and nays have been demanded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The yeas and nays are demanded. Is there a second?

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, inasmuch as I indicated a day or two ago my intention to support the amendment originally offered by the Senator from Delaware, I desire to say just a word with regard to the subject and to state my reason for the vote which I shall give against the amendment as it is now proposed.

When the Senator from Delaware offered the amendment, as I interpreted it and as I still interpret it, the condition which he seeks to impose upon the transfer of ships and their right to an American registry applied only to ships purchased hereafter. The amendment he now proposes applies the condition to all ships whether hereafter purchased or now owned by American citizens or American corporations. While I think the precaution which he suggests is not only a wise but an imperative one so far as future acquisitions are concerned, I think it a very unwise one so far as ships now owned by our citizens and our corporations are concerned.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Will the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Delaware?

Mr. CUMMINS. I yield.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Mr. President, I will say to the Senator from Iowa that I suggested to the Senator from New York having charge of the bill that if such an amendment could be prepared and should be offered to take care of ships presently owned by American corporations, while I would prefer, of course, that the stock should be owned by American citizens, I would vote for it. Therefore, if the Senator from Iowa suggests such an amendment as that, applying this principle which we have been trying to apply to ships which will hereafter be purchased, I have no objection to it. It is a question of good faith with us as to the real American ownership.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I hope that such an amendment will be offered. I think that to put this condition upon ships now owned by our own citizens, and which now have the right to American registry, would be not only to fail to meet the emergency which confronts us, but would be to restrict the privileges which our people now have. I am sure that no foreign nation could look upon the continuation of our policy in that regard as an offense; whereas I think liberalizing of our shipping laws, to enable ships that do not now have the right of registry to take it, and thus to be protected by our neutral position, would be and ought to be looked upon by a foreign nation as an unfriendly act. I shall, therefore, vote against the amendment proposed by the Senator from Delaware [Mr. SAULSBURY]; but I hope that an amendment which confines this principle to future acquisitions will be offered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Delaware, on which the yeas and nays have been ordered. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. OLIVER], which I transfer to the junior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. CAMDEN], and vote "nay."

The PRESIDING OFFICER (when Mr. CLAPP's name was called). Owing to the absence of his pair the present occupant of the chair refrains from voting.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas (when his name was called). I have a pair with the junior Senator from Utah [Mr. SUTHERLAND]. I transfer that pair to the Senator from Arizona [Mr. SMITH], and vote "nay." I will allow this announcement to stand until another one shall supersede it.

Mr. CULBERSON (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. DU PONT]. I transfer that pair to the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD] and vote "nay."

Mr. FALL (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. CHILTON]. He being absent I withhold my vote. Were I at liberty to vote I should vote "nay."

Mr. BRYAN (when Mr. FLETCHER's name was called). My colleague [Mr. FLETCHER] is unavoidably absent. He is paired with the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN]. This announcement may stand for the day.

Mr. HOLLIS (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from Maine [Mr. BURLEIGH]. I therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. JAMES (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WEEKS]. In his absence I withhold my vote.

Mr. MYERS (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. MCLEAN]. In his absence I withhold my vote.

Mr. REED (when his name was called). I have a pair with the Senator from Michigan [Mr. SMITH]. I do not know how he would vote if he were present and I do not feel at liberty to vote. Under the circumstances I prefer to withhold my vote. If permitted to vote, I should vote "yea."

Mr. SMITH of Maryland (when his name was called). I have a pair with the senior Senator from Vermont [Mr. DILLINGHAM]. In his absence I withhold my vote.

Mr. STONE (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. CLARK]. As that Senator is not present I withhold my vote.

Mr. THOMAS (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from New York [Mr. ROOT], which I transfer to the senior Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK] and vote "nay."

Mr. TILLMAN (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. GOFF] to my colleague [Mr. SMITH] and vote "nay."

Mr. WALSH (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. LIPPITT]. In his absence I withhold my vote.

Mr. WILLIAMS (when his name was called). I have a pair with the senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE]. I have not been able to secure a transfer of that pair. If I were at liberty to vote, I should vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE]. I transfer that pair to the senior Senator from Virginia [Mr. MARTIN] and vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. JAMES. I transfer my pair with the junior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WEEKS] to the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. SHIELDS] and vote "nay."

Mr. FALL. I am informed that the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. CHILTON], with whom I am paired, if present would vote as I shall. I therefore vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. GALLINGER. I am requested to announce that the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. CATRON] is paired with the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN]; the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. CRAWFORD] is paired with the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. LEA]; the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. STEPHENSON] is paired with the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE]; and the Senator from Michigan [Mr. TOWNSEND] is paired with the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON].

The result was announced—yeas 11, nays 39, as follows:

YEAS—11.

Ashurst	Lewis	Pittman	Smoot
Brady	Martine, N. J.	Pomerene	White
Gallinger	Newlands	Saulsbury

NAYS—39.

Brandegee	Gronna	O'Gorman	Smith, Ga.

So Mr. SAULSBURY's amendment was rejected.

Mr. O'GORMAN. Mr. President, in the Panama Canal act, passed in 1912, there was inserted a provision making all material of foreign production necessary for the construction and repair of vessels free of duty. In 1913, in the tariff act, there was included a substantially similar provision, the wording, however, being slightly different, which as supposed to supersede the provision, in that respect, of the act of 1912. The department advises me that they are acting under the exemption clause of the tariff act of 1913, and the repetition of the exemption paragraph in the act of 1912, as it is contained in the amendment which we adopted at the suggestion of the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BRANDEGEE], is not only unnecessary but might be embarrassing. I ask, therefore, to strike out, on page 3 of the bill, beginning with the word "That," in line 18, down to and including the word "prescribe," in line 25.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from New York will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 3, beginning with the word "That," in line 18, it is proposed to strike out all down to and including the word "prescribe," in line 25, as follows:

That all materials of foreign production which may be necessary for the construction or repair of vessels built in the United States and all such materials necessary for the building or repair of their machinery and all articles necessary for their outfit and equipment may be imported into the United States free of duty under such regulations as the Secretary of the Treasury may prescribe.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, I want to ask the Senator from New York if it is certain that the provision of the tariff law which he has cited did operate as an amendment to section 4132?

Mr. O'GORMAN. It would have the effect, being the last of the two enactments, of repealing so much of the 1912 provision as might be inconsistent with the latter.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. And it has been so ruled and held by the officers of the department?

Mr. O'GORMAN. Oh, yes.

Mr. NELSON. But, Mr. President, would not the reenactment of the provision in this bill, the passage of this bill being subsequent to the tariff act, govern?

Mr. O'GORMAN. It would; and that suggests the embarrassment. The department advises me that in the operation of the tariff law passed a year go they are following the language that was embraced in that statute. I will read it to show how similar it is to the paragraph we now propose to strike out. The provision in the tariff law is as follows:

J. Subsection 5. That all materials of foreign production which may be necessary for the construction of naval vessels or other vessels of the United States, vessels built in the United States for foreign account and ownership, or for the purpose of being employed in the foreign or domestic trade, and all such materials necessary for the building of their machinery, and all articles necessary for their outfit and equipment, may be imported in bond—

In that respect the language differs—under such regulations as the Secretary of the Treasury may prescribe; and upon proof that such materials have been used for such purposes no duties shall be paid thereon.

That suggests the principal difference. In 1912, in the Panama Canal act, we provided that such materials might be admitted free of duty. The language of the tariff law provides, in substance, that there shall be a remission of duty upon proof that the materials were actually employed in the construction or repair of ships.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from New York.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, in relation to this same matter, I wish to ask the Senator from New York if he will put into the RECORD the letter from the department on the subject?

Mr. O'GORMAN. Yes; if there is no objection, that may be done.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I think the letter would explain the matter better.

Mr. O'GORMAN. I send the letter to the desk and ask that it may be printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. In the absence of objection, it will be so ordered.

The letter referred to is as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
Washington, August 10, 1914.

Hon. JAMES A. O'GORMAN,
Chairman Committee on Interoceanic Canals,
United States Senate.

SIR: I have the honor to refer to the following provision contained in the bill H. R. 18202, as reported from your committee on the 6th instant:

"That all materials of foreign production which may be necessary for the construction or repair of vessels built in the United States, and all such materials necessary for the building or repair of their machinery, and all articles necessary for their outfit and equipment may be imported into the United States free of duty under such regulations as the Secretary of the Treasury may prescribe."

The department has held, in Treasury decision 34150, of February 5, 1914, that the same provision, as contained in section 5 of the Panama Canal act of August 24, 1912, was superseded by the provisions of subsections 5 and 6, paragraph J, section 4, tariff act of October 3, 1913, which read as follows:

"SUBSEC. 5. That all materials of foreign production which may be necessary for the construction of naval vessels or other vessels of the United States, vessels built in the United States for foreign account and ownership, or for the purpose of being employed in the foreign or domestic trade, and all such materials necessary for the building of their machinery, and all articles necessary for their outfit and equipment may be imported in bond under such regulations as the Secretary of the Treasury may prescribe, and upon proof that such materials have been used for such purposes no duties shall be paid thereon.

"SUBSEC. 6. That all articles of foreign production needed for the repair of naval vessels of, or other vessels owner or used by, the United States, and vessels now or hereafter registered under the laws of the United States, may be withdrawn from bonded warehouses free of duty under such regulations as the Secretary of the Treasury may prescribe."

Inasmuch as the repeal of those provisions of the present tariff act by the reenactment of the corresponding provisions of the Panama Canal act was probably not intended, and would create an embarrassing situation with respect to pending importations and to the regulations promulgated by this department under the tariff act, the matter is brought to your attention for such action as you may deem proper.

Respectfully,

BYRON R. NEWTON,
Acting Secretary.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I desire to offer an amendment striking from the bill as it now stands the so-called Jones amendment, which I ask that the Secretary may state.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read as requested.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to strike out section 3 as adopted in Committee of the Whole, which reads as follows:

SEC. 3. The President is hereby authorized, whenever in his judgment the needs of domestic trade require, to suspend by order, for such length of time as he may deem desirable, the provisions of law confining the trade from points on the Atlantic coast to points on the Pacific coast and from points on the Pacific coast to points on the Atlantic coast to American-built ships and permit foreign-built ships having an American register to engage in the trade between said points.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I desire to be heard briefly. First, I have been requested by the clerk of the senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] to present two telegrams which were sent to him, which I ask the Secretary to read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. In the absence of objection, the Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

GLOUCESTER, MASS., August 10, 1914.

Senator H. C. LODGE, Washington, D. C.:

Please use your best efforts to prevent the passage of the Saulsbury amendment and try to effect the reconsideration of the Jones amendment, as these measures will positively mean the killing of American shipbuilding.

E. L. ROWE & SON (INC.).

BOSTON, MASS., August 11, 1914.

Hon. HENRY CABOT LODGE, Washington, D. C.:

The Boston Insurance Co. and Old Colony Insurance Co. have to-day voted the following resolution: "We are opposed to the amendment which enables foreign-built ships to engage in the coastwise trade between one port in the United States and another port in the United States."

BOSTON INSURANCE CO.
OLD COLONY INSURANCE CO.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, during 4 years' service in the House of Representatives and 23 years' service in this body, I can not recall a single instance when I have not voted for every measure that has been presented here for the benefit of the great West, including the Pacific coast, as well as the Middle States. I should be glad on this occasion if I could bring my mind to the conclusion that the amendment which the able and courteous Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES] has presented to this body and which was agreed to as in Committee of the Whole was wise legislation; but, feeling that it is unwise legislation, I am going to express the hope that the Senate on sober reflection and after deliberation, looking at the matter in a broad national light, will see that this provision ought to be stricken from the bill.

I should like to draw the attention, Mr. President, of Senators from the cotton-growing States and Senators from the wheat-growing States to the circumstances that the amendment of the Senator from Washington, if it remains in the bill, will largely nullify the purpose of the emergency shipping bill which is to make immediately available for carrying our export commerce foreign-built ships of American register.

Foreign-built ships, if admitted to American register under the general terms of this bill, would naturally seek the coastwise trade, and no other, taking advantage of the security from war hazards, and the cotton-growing States of the South and the wheat-growing States of the West would be left entirely without ships of American registry to convey their products to foreign markets. If the Senators from the South and West wish to defeat absolutely the purpose of the emergency shipping bill they will support the amendment offered by the Senator from Washington.

In the past 10 or 20 years, by special acts and notably by the acquisition of Hawaii, scores of foreign-built vessels have been given American registry. Of all these vessels, so far as is now known, only one, the steamer China, is regularly engaged in the export and import trade of the United States. All the others that are still floating are engaged in our coastwise commerce.

This is an example and a warning of what will inevitably happen if foreign-built vessels, admitted to American registry under the terms of this bill, are allowed to engage in coastwise commerce.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New Hampshire yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. GALLINGER. Certainly.

Mr. JONES. Is the Senator stating of his own knowledge or is it a statement of some one else that scores of vessels which have been admitted to American registry are now engaged in the coastwise trade?

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I state it on what I, of course, believe to be accurate knowledge. I am not romancing in the least.

Mr. JONES. Well, Mr. President, I hope the Senator will not think that I was suggesting that he was romancing, but I have been in Congress since the coastwise laws were extended to Hawaii and am familiar with some of the special bills which have been passed, and I am satisfied that there have not been scores.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, the Senator can examine the record. He may be nearer right than I am, but there certainly have been a large number, and the steamer China is the only one of all the vessels which have been admitted to American registry that is engaged in the foreign commerce of the United States to-day.

They will enter that commerce because, not having to carry American officers and comply with American inspection requirements, they will have an important advantage over our real American vessels. They will also be immune from the dangers of over-seas commerce in time of war, and also from the excessive rates of insurance that will doubtless be exacted. It seems to me that the purpose of this bill, which is to provide American ships in an emergency for our export commerce, would be practically nullified by the amendment of the Senator from Washington.

There would then be no more American ships than there are now for the use of the farmers of the South or of the Mississippi Valley. When the Senators from the South and the Middle West recognize the danger of this amendment opening the coastwise trade to foreign-built ships they should vote against such an unsound and dangerous proposal.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, before the Senator sits down——

Mr. GALLINGER. I am not quite through.

Mr. STONE. I desire to ask the Senator a question when he has completed his remarks.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, it is contended that there are practically no ships to convey the lumber of the Pacific coast to the Atlantic coast. The Senator from Washington said that he knew of but two ships on that coast that can perform service of that kind.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, the Senator from Washington simply read a telegram in which that statement was made. The Senator from Washington does not know whether or not that is exactly correct, but he does know that the gentleman who made the statement is a very reliable man.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, in contradiction to that, a very reliable man from the Pacific coast has informed me that the gentleman who sent that telegram was not well informed. However, Mr. President, before taking that up, I want to say that it seems to me that the question of amending or striking down the coastwise laws of the United States is a subject that ought to be considered by itself and not considered on an emergency bill such as we now have before us.

I called attention the other day to the fact that when the repeal of the tolls-exemption clause of the Panama Canal act was before the Senate an amendment was offered along that line and was voted down by a vote of 67 to 12. I perfectly understand, Mr. President, that what the senior Senator from Missouri [Mr. STONE] said is absolutely correct. He said he voted against that amendment because of the fact that he did not want to complicate it with another question which was then before this body. If that is a sound proposition, and I think it is, I suggest that we ought not to complicate this other question, which is a serious and a great question, with an amendment such as we are now considering.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, I desire to ask the Senator from New Hampshire if he understands the so-called Jones amendment to permit without limitation the entrance of ships purchased under this bill into the coastwise trade?

Mr. GALLINGER. Absolutely.

Mr. STONE. I was under the impression that it granted permission to such ships to engage in the intercoastal trade, as differentiated from the coastwise trade; in other words——

Mr. GALLINGER. It is true that it permits them to engage in the trade between Pacific and Atlantic ports, but not between such ports as New York and Boston. Between all the ports on the Pacific coast and all the ports on the Atlantic coast, however, it does permit them to engage in the trade, so that it would take in all the territory from the South Atlantic to Eastport, Me., and Puget Sound, California, Hawaii, and Alaska, all of which come within the coastwise laws.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, if this bill is to have that effect, I am bound to say that it seems to me there is a good deal of force in what the Senator from New Hampshire is saying. I am not an advocate of the present system under which our coastwise trade is carried on, but the purpose I have in mind in supporting the pending measure is not to add to our merchant fleet that is engaged in coastwise business, but to add to the deep-sea or over-sea merchant marine.

I do not want, Mr. President, to enact here in a moment a law that may admit any number of vessels into the coastwise trade on a practical equality with those now engaged in that business, for if we do that, then it seems to me that the Senator from New Hampshire is stating very accurately what will occur, that these vessels will come under the American flag, temporarily at least, and enter into the coastwise business because of its profit and because of insurance and other considerations of that kind, and we will not be able to get the benefit of these vessels in carrying our cotton and foodstuffs abroad to foreign markets. That is the one thing that I have in mind at this time.

Mr. GALLINGER. That is the one thing which we were given to understand the Senate had in mind when we commenced the consideration of this bill.

Now, I will repeat the statement that of all the vessels which we have admitted to American registry by special act and all the vessels which came under American registry at the time we admitted Hawaii, only one of them entered the foreign trade. They found it more profitable to engage in the coastwise trade, and why shall not the vessels which it is hoped to acquire under the terms of this bill find that the magnificent trade between the Pacific and the Atlantic is more alluring to them and more profitable to them than the trade with foreign countries? It seems to me it is inevitable.

Mr. WEST. Mr. President——

Mr. GALLINGER. I yield to the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. WEST. Might not the very purpose of this legislation be defeated by this amendment?

Mr. GALLINGER. That is what I have tried to express. That is what I believe—that it will have a very strong tendency to defeat absolutely the purpose of the legislation that the administration and the committee that reported this bill have in view.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New Hampshire yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. GALLINGER. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. CLAPP. If the Senator will pardon an interruption, we have heard a great deal here about increasing our merchant marine. There is nothing in the pending bill that will add permanently to our merchant marine. It may temporarily, during the war abroad, add to the number of ships that will be registered and bear our flag; but in the long run, as a Nation, we shall gain nothing in the sense of our merchant marine under the pending bill.

I should like to ask the Senator from New Hampshire a question. I am advised that there is an abundance of ships already for our coastwise trade and our intercoastal trade. If that is true, then, of course, the President would hardly be warranted in exercising the authority which the so-called Jones amendment confers upon him; and I wanted to get the Senator's view as to whether he thought there would be any likelihood of a President—because we deal with a President and not the President, of course—abating the limitation as to the coastwise trade and allowing these other ships to come in so long as there were abundant ships for the coastwise trade and intercoastal trade? If not, then I see no serious harm in giving the President the authority in case there did come such an occasion to exercise it.

I am somewhat in doubt as to my view upon this particular phase of the bill, and I should like to get the Senator's view upon it.

Mr. GALLINGER. I am not enamored with the idea that we ought to pass over all the details of legislation and administration to the President of the United States. I think we would better closely guard what I conceive to be our responsibilities and our duties. I do not know but that there may be trouble in transporting the products of our farms and our factories in the northern part of this country to foreign markets during the pendency of this war; but I would hesitate to say that the President might investigate that matter and, if he thought we had not ships enough, he might put some foreign ships into our service. I feel very sure myself that, so far as this particular thing is concerned, we have so many ships that it will be a question not of a lack of ships but of a surplusage of ships to convey the lumber from Puget Sound to the North Atlantic ports.

There is not yet very much trade in Puget Sound lumber going to the North Atlantic ports. Of course, they expect to increase it, and we all hope they will. There is a great deal more reason why you men of the South, when you have a very large market in New England for your lumber, should ask that foreign ships should be put on the routes from Galveston and from New Orleans and from other southern ports to New York and Boston. There is very much greater reason for it, and I want you men of the South to consider the question whether you want to be handicapped by special legislation such as is provided in this amendment.

Mr. President, it was said on the authority of a man who telegraphed the learned Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES] that there are only two ships available to transport lumber from the Pacific coast to the Atlantic coast. A committee of gentlemen from Boston are now in the city. They are headed by the mayor of Boston, a gentleman who left the other House of Congress a short time ago to become mayor of that great city. Capt. John Crowley, who has been engaged in the shipbuilding industry for a great many years and who is the owner of ships that he wants to put into this trade, Mr. Harris Livermore, Mr. John J. Martin, Mr. J. W. Powell, and ex-Congressman Kelliher constitute the committee. Some of those men are large shipowners or have interests in American ships to a very large extent. They have submitted this list of ships that are available, and they say many of them are admirably adapted for the carriage of lumber. Some of them were built with that end in view.

The Luckenback Co. has 6 freight ships of 6,000 tons.

The American-Hawaiian Co. has 16 freight ships of 6,000 tons.

The Ward Line has 4 passenger and freight ships of 5,000 tons.

The American Line has 4 passenger and freight ships of 4,000 tons.

The Southern Pacific Co. has 13 freight ships of 4,000 tons and 4 passenger and freight ships of 4,000 tons.

The Red Star Line has 2 passenger and freight ships of 12,000 tons.

The Pacific Mail Steamship Co. has 4 passenger and freight ships of 7,000 tons.

The Spreckels Line has 3 passenger and freight ships of 5,000 tons.

The Pacific Coast Steamship Co. has 4 passenger and freight ships of 4,000 tons.

The Savannah Line has 10 passenger and freight ships of 3,500 tons.

The Porto Rico Line has 6 passenger and freight ships of 3,500 tons.

The Mallory and Clyde Lines have 10 passenger and freight ships of 3,500 tons.

The Panama Railroad Co. has 4 ships, 2 of them of 11,000 tons, carrying passengers and freight, and 2 of 4,000 tons, carrying passengers and freight.

The A. H. Bull Steamship Co. has 6 freight ships of 4,000 tons.

The Alaska Steamship Co. has 2 passenger and freight ships of 3,000 tons.

W. R. Grace has 1 passenger and freight ship of 7,000 tons and 3 freight ships of 9,000 tons.

The New England Gas & Coke Co. has 4 freight ships.

The Coastwise Steamship Co. has 4 freight ships of 7,000 tons.

The John S. Emery Co. has 2 freight ships of 7,000 tons.

The Boston & Virginia Transportation Co. has 4 freight ships of 4,000 tons.

Crowell & Thurlow have 2 freight ships of 7,000 tons.

The Union Sulphur Co. has 2 freight ships of 4,000 tons.

The Standard Oil Co. has 15 freight barges of 5,000 tons and 15 freight barges of 4,000 tons.

The Texas Oil Co. has 5 tank ships of 6,000 tons.

The Gulf Refining Co. has 4 tank ships of 6,000 tons.

The American Molasses Co. has 3 freight ships of 4,000 tons.

Making a total of 162 ships.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New Hampshire yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. GALLINGER. I do.

Mr. BORAH. I understand the information which the Senator is now giving to the Senate is furnished by the gentlemen whose names he mentioned a moment ago, from the city of Boston.

Mr. GALLINGER. Yes.

Mr. BORAH. I wish to ask, if the amendment of the Senator from Washington should prevail, what effect it would have upon the business in which they are engaged, and how they are interested in the matter?

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, they are interested, I take it, just as some of the rest of us are interested; they are not in favor, unless a real emergency exists, of seeing the coastwise laws of the United States broken down and foreign vessels admitted to that service. I take it that is their prime consideration, and it is a sound, sensible, and proper consideration.

In addition to those ships, there are vessels of foreign registry owned by citizens of the United States at the present time available for foreign trade of a total tonnage of 1,062,000 tons, while the tonnage of the American coastwise vessels is 771,000 tons, making a total of 1,833,000 tons that is available in our coastwise shipping and in shipping owned by citizens of the United States.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator another question?

Mr. GALLINGER. I yield.

Mr. BORAH. The argument was made here during the debate on the Panama tolls bill that this coastwise trade was a pure monopoly. In so far as we should let in other ships, that would break into that monopoly, would it not?

Mr. GALLINGER. Why, certainly; and if you turned all the foreign ships into that trade, the monopoly would be destroyed and there would not be any American ships left.

Mr. BORAH. The Senator has been appealing to the Members on the other side of the Chamber to vote against the Jones amendment, and yet he is appealing to those men who made very earnest arguments that this was a monopoly and that by reason of the fact that it was a monopoly there was one reason for repealing the tolls bill.

Mr. GALLINGER. Yes.

Mr. BORAH. It would seem to me that if we have a monopoly in our commerce that is so gigantic and so powerful as to necessitate the repeal of the tolls bill, the sooner we encroach upon that monopoly the better.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, we all know the Senator's views on monopolies, and he and I do not agree. It is a monopoly so far as concerns protecting our coastwise shipping from the invasion of foreign ships; but when Senators talk about a shipping combine in the coastwise trade it is pure fiction. It does not exist.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator for just a moment?

Mr. GALLINGER. Yes.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Is it not true that a number of the ships mentioned by the Senator—for instance, a number that are owned by the Southern Pacific Railroad Co.—could not go through the Panama Canal at all, and even if the Jones amendment should be adopted they would not be permitted to go through it?

Mr. GALLINGER. There are a very small number, if any. I think there may be a few ships.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New Hampshire yield to the Senator from Nevada?

Mr. GALLINGER. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I wish to ask the Senator from New Hampshire to state the total tonnage of the 162 ships which he says are available.

Mr. GALLINGER. The total tonnage is 771,000 tons.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Let me ask another question, if the Senator will permit me.

Mr. GALLINGER. Certainly.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Is it not true that quite a number of the lines the Senator has mentioned simply operate between local points on the Atlantic coast, and do not go south of a certain point?

Mr. GALLINGER. There is no reason why they should not. If the business justifies it, they will go there.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I am asking if that is not the fact. The Senator is speaking of them as lines of ships that will do this intercoastal business. Take the Alaska ships, to which the Senator has referred, that were shown here at one time to belong to interests that have been stifling Alaska: They only operate between Alaskan ports and a few ports down about Puget Sound and probably the Columbia River; that is all.

Mr. GALLINGER. That is very true. There are only two or three of those ships, though.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New Hampshire yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. GALLINGER. I yield to the Senator, of course.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I wanted to ask the Senator, for information, with reference to the large number of ships of which he has given a list, a question somewhat along the line of that which the Senator from Oregon has just asked. He has already suggested that probably nearly all of those ships are already engaged in regular runs from one port to another on the Atlantic Coast, and presumably they have all the business there that they can attend to. This list has been furnished the Senator from New Hampshire probably by these ship companies, who know more about their own business than anybody else does. I should like to ask the Senator if he has any information from that source or any other source that the owners will take any of these ships off the runs in which they are engaged and put them on the trade between the Atlantic and the Pacific coasts?

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I have just that kind of information.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I am very much interested in that, and if the Senator has any authoritative showing that we will be furnished with transportation from these ships, I should like to have it. In that connection I should like to know from the Senator where the ships are coming from that will take the places on the local runs of these ships that he says are going to be put into the Pacific trade.

Mr. GALLINGER. Some of these ships are coming from the docks of Boston, where they are tied up rotting at their anchors without having trade at the present time. Quite a number of the ships are coming from that particular place.

Mr. POINDEXTER. It is very dangerous to send rotting ships into the Pacific Northwest. It is very rough there at times, and it is a very dangerous coast. We have had a good many rotting and rotten ships out there that have come to grief.

Mr. GALLINGER. The Senator magnifies my observation. I did not mean they were rotting ships.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator just one more question? Then I will not disturb him further.

Mr. GALLINGER. Certainly.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. With all of the numerous steamship lines that the Senator referred to, will the Senator explain to the Senate why it is that when the United States itself has wanted to transport coal from Norfolk to its coaling station at Hawaii and its coaling station at Mare Island, on the Pacific coast, in nine cases out of ten it has had to employ British ships to carry coal over there instead of these American lines?

Mr. GALLINGER. I think in nine cases out of ten it did so because it got the service cheaper. That is my recollection. There is no doubt but that we can get foreign service cheaper, not only in shipping but in manufacturing and everything else, if we want to put ourselves in the hands of foreign Governments.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. And yet, as the Senator speaks of this coastal shipping as being a very profitable enterprise, we ought not to disturb these people, but ought to let them run just as they are running.

Mr. GALLINGER. I beg the Senator's pardon. I did not say it was profitable. I think in some instances it probably is and in other instances it is not. There are a great many idle ships at the present time in the coastal service that can be secured for this or any other service.

The junior Senator from Washington [Mr. POINDEXTER] asks me if I know anybody who will furnish ships. If the Senator will consult Capt. Crowley, he will find that he has ships that he will put into this service and guarantee that they will not be disturbed in going from Puget Sound to Boston. I have information which does not come wholly from shipowners, but from the business men of Boston and from the mayor of Boston, who has not any interest in shipping, to the effect that they believe there is an abundance of ships.

As I said the other day, Mr. President, if we had turned our attention in the first place to American ships and had undertaken to ascertain how many American ships are available for transporting abroad the cotton and the wheat and the corn from the farms of this country before we jumped to the conclusion that we had to have foreign ships, we would have been surprised at the number of American ships that would have been available for that service. It was thought otherwise, however; and I am supporting the original bill, with some fears that it may not work out as the Senator from New York thinks it will. Nevertheless, recognizing the emergency, and recognizing the fact that a man who opposes it is likely to be called unpatriotic, I give it my support; but I think it is utterly unwise to complicate that measure with a measure such as I am now considering. It is not, to my mind, good legislation.

As a man who has done the best he could to reestablish the American merchant marine, perhaps along unwise lines—I am not going to argue that now—I am quite willing that this entire matter shall be taken up and investigated calmly and carefully by a committee such as is provided for in the joint resolution introduced by the junior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WEEKS], in which, after reciting certain facts connected with our shipping, he says:

> That a nonpartisan joint committee, consisting of six Senators and six Representatives, be appointed by the presiding officers of the Senate and House of Representatives, who shall at once take this subject—> under consideration and report at the earliest day what additional action, if any, can be taken to carry out the purposes of this resolution.

That is, the whole shipping subject—

Mr. President, that is a wise proposition. There are differences of opinion on this question. Let us take it up calmly and carefully and judicially, if I may use that word, and reach a wise conclusion. Let us not, simply because there is an emergency measure here that appeals to Senators for their support and their votes, add to it a proposition to invade the laws of the United States that have stood on the statute books for more than 100 years, protecting the coastwise shipping, and break down, as this amendment will break down, that great system of domestic shipping in this country.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New Hampshire yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. GALLINGER. I yield; yes.

Mr. CUMMINS. There is one phase of this matter which the Senator from New Hampshire has not considered and which appears to me to be very important, and I should like to know the views of the Senator upon it.

We have put most of the products of the Northwest upon the free list, and in those products the Northwest finds a very sharp competitor in British Columbia. We have taken away the little protection which the coastwise ships had in their exemption from tolls at Panama, and the coastwise ships must compete upon even terms with the foreign ships. Does it not seem to be very probable that a great deal of the business of Oregon and Washington and the other Northwestern States will be transferred to British Columbia unless we do something to enable reasonable competition to exist in the carrying trade from these Northwestern States to our eastern coast? How can those States preserve their business at all when a British ship can carry products similar to their own from British Columbia to New York for $3 or $3.50 per ton less than they can be carried for in American ships from American ports?

That is the phase of the matter that bothers me more than any other, and I should like very much to hear the views of the Senator from New Hampshire upon it.

Mr. GALLINGER. In the first place, the products of the farms of the Middle West were not put on the free list certainly with my concurrence; neither were the reduced duties on the manufactures of New England, which I think are disastrously low, put there with my concurrence. Now, I do not know whether what the Senator suggests will work in that way or not. I should think it a matter of grave doubt that the products of the forests of Puget Sound would be transferred to Victoria or some other port and sent by Canadian waterways to the market. I should think that very questionable.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President——

Mr. GALLINGER. I yield to the Senator from Washington.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Right on that exact point, I do not think the suggestion of the Senator from Iowa was that the products of Washington would be transshipped to British Columbia and then carried on British Columbia vessels to the Atlantic ports; but it was that similar products of British Columbia—lumber, for instance, British Columbia being a great lumber-producing and lumber-exporting country—would be shipped from British Columbia more cheaply in Canadian or British bonts than lumber from the States of Washington, Oregon, or California could be shipped in American boats.

Mr. GALLINGER. That is exactly what we protectionists have been preaching all along the line, and this is not an exceptional instance. I presume British Columbia can furnish its lumber a little cheaper than Washington or Oregon can.

Mr. POINDEXTER. That may be so, but I do not want to be put in the position of asserting that to be the fact now. That is not the proposition I am making—that they can produce lumber cheaper. We will suppose that we produce it for the same cost. The proposition is that they can ship it more cheaply; that the expense of shipment in British Columbia boats being less, and other expenses being equal, Panama tolls being the same on all—we tried to prevent that, but we were outvoted—and the tariff being the same as to both, both having free admission, the difference in the cost of shipment alone will throw the business to British Columbia and take it away from the American Pacific States.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will ask the Senator if he does not think the manufactured products of Canada and the agricultural products of Canada, if you please, can be sent to Europe cheaper by the Allan Line, which sails out of Quebec, than by any American steamship line carrying our products?

Mr. POINDEXTER. I have no doubt that that is true, and the purpose of this bill is to relieve that situation to some extent.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I do not think we are going to equalize conditions between Canada and the United States, so far as either production or transportation is concerned, by the few lines in this bill.

In closing I simply want to say that some of the ships that are available in the list I have cited have been constructed with the end in view that they would be put on the Atlantic-Pacific route as soon as the canal was opened for business. There are such ships waiting to-day in New England, and they were built for that very purpose. There are also a great many other ships there, as I have suggested, ready to engage in the same trade.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Mr. President——

Mr. GALLINGER. I yield to the Senator from Delaware.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I understood the Senator to give a list of the ships flying the American flag that were available for present use through the canal, and also to make the statement that something upward of a million tons of shipping flying foreign flags was owned by Americans and could be brought in under this bill, or might be.

Mr. GALLINGER. Yes.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Can the Senator give us any information as to which those ships are?

Mr. GALLINGER. I think I can; perhaps not very definitely, but at least approximately. There is the Ward Line, Cuban, with 4 passenger and freight ships of 5,000 tons; the Standard Oil Co., English, with 20 freight ships of 10,000 tons; the Anglo-American Oil Co., German, with 20 freight ships of 10,000 tons; the United States Steel Corporation, with 20 freight ships of 6,000 tons; the United Fruit Co., English, with 30 passenger and freight ships of 4,000 tons; the International Mercantile Marine Co., with 40 passenger and freight ships of 10,000 tons, as well as the Morse Iron Works, which has one passenger and freight ship of 2,000 tons.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Can the Senator say whether or not the owners or representatives of the ships flying the American flag, of which the Senator first gave a list, are in accord on the policy respecting coastwise commerce and the exclusion of foreign-built from the Panama Canal trade?

Mr. GALLINGER. I do not know as to that. I only know they are owned by American citizens and flying a foreign flag. That is all I know.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, I have listened with pleasure and interest to the Senator from New Hampshire. I wish I could agree with him. I do agree with him in many things he said. I think this subject should be treated calmly and with deliberation; that we should not engage in hasty legislation which has not been thoroughly considered and digested. I think that it should be treated broadly; that the interest of every section of the Nation should be consulted; that its advantages should not be bestowed exclusively or even mainly on any particular section of the country.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. WHITE. I do.

Mr. BORAH. Does the Senator look upon our coastwise shipping trade as a monopoly?

Mr. WHITE. I will say that to the Senator from Idaho. Of course it is a monopoly.

Mr. BORAH. Why should we hesitate, then, to begin to shear that monopoly of some of its powers? What reason can be assigned for leaving this monopoly to stand untouched and unattacked, having been so influential as to be assigned as one of the reasons for the repeal of the free-tolls provision?

Mr. WHITE. The main reason for that is that we are not by this legislation undertaking to control that monopoly nor to abolish it. That is not the question before the Senate.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President——

Mr. BORAH. I beg the Senator's pardon. It is never too early to take hold of a monopoly. We can not proceed too quickly dealing with such things.

Mr. WHITE. I have always understood the Senator's position to be that we should undertake this adjustment very gently and that we must let it be done only by friendly hands. That has always been my understanding as to the Senator's position and the position of the party to which he belongs.

Mr. BORAH. I do not know of any hand more friendly to monopoly in this particular than the party to which the Senator belongs. I am perfectly willing to intrust it to the care of the Senator's party if it is a mere question of friendly hands.

Mr. WHITE. That may be true; but I am afraid the Senator's comprehension is somewhat narrow and that he does not clearly understand my position or that of my party.

Mr. GALLINGER. I think the Senator from Alabama will have to take the observation of the Senator from Idaho as a bit of humor when he says that the coastwise trade was powerful enough to repeal the exemption clause in the Panama Canal act. That is pure humor.

Mr. WHITE. I will say to the Senator from New Hampshire that I have not been here long enough to suppose that Senators treated anything in this Chamber otherwise than seriously; but from now on, of course with that admonition, I will consider remarks of the distinguished Senator from Idaho as at least carrying in them a strain of humor and to be dealt with accordingly.

Mr. BORAH. I hope the Senator from Alabama will not consider as humor everything the Senator from New Hampshire regards as humorous in connection with this matter.

Mr. GALLINGER. I am always serious.

Mr. WHITE. I think the Senator from New Hampshire is generally serious. In fact, I sometimes think he is too serious in his advocacy of measures that should not receive serious consideration, but I am sure that he is always moved by patriotic motives, and he is seeking to do the best he can with the lights before him.

Mr. President, the real object of this legislation is to supply means to relieve an immediate pressing necessity of transporting our products to other countries. The necessity having arisen on account of the wars in Europe. The existence of these wars making it dangerous for the ships of belligerents to engage in commerce on the seas. Our main reliance for transporting our products being the use of ships belonging to foreign nations. The legislation under consideration assumes that this danger to shipping will continue as long as hostilities last, and that by reason of this danger the owners of these foreign ships will sell them to our citizens at reduced prices, as they can not longer be profitably employed by them.

This legislation further assumes that on account of this disposition of the owners of these ships to sell them at reduced prices, that our citizens will be induced to purchase them, as they can obtain for them American registry and operate them under our flag, and thereby avoid dangers incident to their operation by present owners.

In order to accomplish the end in view, our legislation should be such as will encourage our citizens to make the investment. To do this, proper safeguards must be thrown around these ships and their cargoes. We will not only have to establish confidence in the owners of the ships themselves, but also in those furnishing the cargoes. For if those furnishing the cargoes have not confidence the ships will be idle. The legislation will not only have to insure the safety of the ships and their cargoes, but will have to induce confidence in the safety of both in their respective owners, as without the confidence the commerce will never move, however safe in fact it may be from seizure.

This legislation will be viewed with some suspicion by citizens of belligerent countries and by foreign prize courts. It will be regarded by them as having been enacted as a war measure; not ordinary, but extraordinary, legislation enacted to meet a war necessity.

The transfers of these ships themselves will be severely scrutinized, because they will be made in time of war and made to meet an immediate pressing emergency. To avoid the injurious effects that may be caused in these circumstances it devolves upon Congress to show by this legislation that it is not adopted as a ruse or as a mere temporary expedient, but that it is enacted in good faith to accomplish lawful purposes.

Mr. President, what assurance are we giving contemplated purchasers by this legislation that the capital invested by them will be protected, or what assurance are we giving those who are to furnish the cargoes that they will be protected? Nothing except that we will give the ships American registry and allow them to sail under our flag.

In the very face of this bill, sir, there is concealed the probability of foreign ownership of these vessels. It is possible under the provisions of this act for them to be foreign owned; that ownership is authorized by the provisions of the bill itself. The shares of stock in the American corporation may all be owned by foreigners. The provision that the president and managing directors of the corporation are to be Americans is not at all inconsistent with foreign ownership or foreign control.

We all know that the shareholders of corporations are the real owners of its property and they control its management and direction; we know that the president and directors are the mere creatures of the stockholders, that they only exist so long as the will of the shareholders may determine—that these officers have no will except the will of the shareholders. They may be removed and their services dispensed with whenever it serves the interest or convenience of the shareholders. Under this bill the shareholders may be either English, German, or French. When a ship thus owned is met on the high seas by a privateer of a belligerent nation, will it not probably be seized and carried with its cargo into a prize court of that belligerent? Will the effect of our registry and the flying of our flag protect the interests of the real owner, the shareholder, from it being condemned as a prize? The circumstance that the bill makes it possible for foreigners to be the real owners of these ships having our registry and carrying our flag will itself throw suspicion and distrust upon ships really owned by our citizens, and cause them to be taken and held by belligerents until it can be determined in whom the real ownership is vested.

Aside from the circumstances in which this legislation is enacted, and the foreign ownership it permits, the fact of transfer of ships from foreign to American registry will itself be severely scrutinized by foreign prize courts, because the transactions will be made under war emergencies.

I very much fear that many of the purchases made under this act will be treated as simulated and not real.

All of these circumstances which I mention, calculated to throw distrust and suspicion upon the ships purchased under this act and the cargoes carried by them, will be foreseen by contemplated purchasers and cause them to hesitate, if it will not prevent them from making the purchase.

If we do not succeed by this legislation in inducing the owners of capital to invest in these foreign-owned ships, then the legislation will be fruitless. It will not accomplish the objects intended by it.

Mr. President, it is suggested that the grain and wheat and cotton growers of the country are little concerned as to the ownership of these vessels, that what they want is the means of transporting their products, and that we are here primarily to serve them. I confess, Mr. President, that this suggestion, to some extent at least, influences me; yet, I fear that this transportation itself will not be obtained unless we induce owners of capital to invest in the enterprise.

Mr. President, the immediate question under consideration is the effect that the adoption of the amendment offered by the Senator from Washington will have in removing the suspicions that may be cast on this legislation and the purchase of ships under it, owing to the fact that such ships may be owned by foreigners.

I think the effect will be good. It will be reassuring to capitalists who contemplate investing in such ships, as well as to those who will furnish cargoes to be carried in them. I think the effect will be beneficial in that it will proclaim to the world that this legislation is not intended as a mere device or scheme by which foreign ships are authorized to obtain American registry and carry the American flag. By the adoption of the amendment the world will be advised that the ships purchased under this act will enter into sharp competition with the monopoly which this country has heretofore granted to the owners of ships engaged in our coastwise trade.

By the adoption of the amendment we will show to the world that we are really endeavoring to establish and maintain a merchant marine, otherwise we would not let it compete with this monopoly of our own creation, which the Senator from Idaho and others say is strangling the commerce of the country.

While this is not the time nor the occasion in which to strike down that monopoly, there is no reason why this legislation, so beneficial to the entire country, should be thwarted because it may have the effect to throttle it for the time being.

I think, Mr. President, the fact that we have allowed ships to be purchased under this act to enter into competition with this monopoly, which we ourselves have created, will go far before a prize court in convincing it that the legislation is enacted in good faith, and that we do not intend thereby to contervene the law of nations on the subject involved.

Mr. President, another thought occurs to me. The distinguished Senator from New Hampshire says that the coastwise trade is so inviting that the ships chartered by us to ply between this country and the Hawaiian Islands have departed from the purposes for which they were intended and have entered into our coastwise shipping commerce. If that is true, and I am sure it is, it goes to show that this coastwise shipping trade is exceedingly profitable; that the profits derived by this monopoly from the trade are very inviting. This itself may induce the ships to be purchased under this act to enter into our domestic commerce, where they would be comparatively free from seizure as prizes, and in this way give our domestic shippers the benefit of their competition. Besides, their withdrawal from the over-seas shipping trade may induce some of the ships now engaged in domestic shipping to leave their present employment and enter into that trade, and supply our present and future wants in that direction.

For these reasons, Mr. President, I am going to vote against the views of the distinguished Senator from New Hampshire, although somewhat unwillingly, and in accordance with the views of the Senator from Idaho, who has some monopolistic tendencies, as has been suggested by the Senator from New Hampshire. I hope the amendment under consideration will be adopted.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. The Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES] made a statement a little while ago that there were but two steamships in the trade on the Pacific coast. I have had handed to me within a short time by a gentleman in whom I have a great deal of faith——

Mr. JONES. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New Jersey yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I do.

Mr. JONES. I want to state to the Senator that he misunderstood that matter. I did not state that there were but two vessels engaged in the trade there. I did read a telegram the other day from a gentleman on the Pacific coast, I think, in which that statement occurred; but I did not state it myself as a fact, because I did not know.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Well, I have no controversy in the matter, but the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER] has introduced the names of a number of vessels engaged in that traffic. I have here a list of steamships in actual service on the Pacific coast belonging to the Pacific Coast Co. which mentions the Congress, the Governor, the President. Those are all steel ships. Their tonnage is given and by whom they were built. They all appear to be American made. There is a general description of their boilers, engines, and the like. Then the further names occur of the Queen, the Spokane, the Senator, two of them being steel and one iron; the City of Topeka, of wood; the Delhi, of wood; the Meteor, of steel; the Tampico, of steel; the Eureka, of steel. Their tonnage, the size of their boilers, the storage capacity of the holds, and all that, is given. There are also the Montara, of iron, and the Coos Bay, of wood; another is the City of Pueblo, of wood; the Umatilla, of iron; the City of Seattle, of iron—there are some 12 or 15. I desire to submit this list in conjunction with the list furnished by the Senator from New Hampshire, showing that there are vessels there which may be used for the carrying trade, and that there is no dire necessity of our giving further privileges to vessels on the other side by granting them American register. I ask that this list be printed in the RECORD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

The list referred to is as follows:

Steamships now in actual service on the Pacific coast belonging to the Pacific Coast Co.

CONGRESS.

Material, steel; description, twin screw steamer; when built, 1913; length, 440½ feet; beam, 53; depth, 29; gross tonnage, 7,085; net tonnage, ——; freight capacity, 3,881 tons; first-class passengers, 410; second-class passengers, 106; steerage passengers, 300.

Boilers: Built by New York Steamboat Co.; description, 10 single expansion Scotch marine; size, diameter 15 feet, length 11 feet 10 inches.

Engines: Built by New York Steamboat Co.; kind, 2 triple expansion; size, 29½ inches, 47 inches, and 76½ inches, stroke, 54 inches; indicated horsepower, 7,000 at 84 revolutions per minute.

Speed: Maximum, 17 knots; average, 16 knots.

GOVERNOR.

Material, steel; description, twin screw steamer; when built, 1907; length, 415 feet; beam, 48; depth, 20; gross tonnage, 5,250; net tonnage, 2,401; freight capacity, 2,802 tons; first-class passengers, 315; second-class passengers, 38; steerage passengers, 163.

Boilers: Built by New York Steamboat Co.; description, 8 single expansion Scotch marine; size, diameter 15 feet, length 11 feet 7½ inches.

Engines: Built by New York Steamboat Co.; kind, 2 triple expansion; size, 25½ inches, 40½ inches, and 70 inches; stroke, 48 inches; indicated horsepower, 5,398, at 87 revolutions per minute.

Speed: Maximum, 16.4 knots; average, 14.8 knots.

PRESIDENT.

Material, steel; description, steamer; when built, 1907; length, 415 feet; beam, 48; depth, 20; gross tonnage, 5,218; net tonnage, 2,393; freight capacity, 2,813 tons; first-class passengers, 314; second-class passengers, 38; steerage passengers, 151.

Boilers: Built by New York Steamboat Co.; description, ——; size, ——.

Engines: Built by New York Steamboat Co.; kind, 1 triple expansion; size, 34 inches, 56 inches, and 90 inches; stroke, 60 inches; indicated horsepower, 5,000, at 80 revolutions per minute.

Speed: Maximum, 16 knots; average, 15.5 knots.

QUEEN.

Mr. JONES. I want to ask the Senator if the gentleman who handed him that list stated that these ships have now nothing to do?

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. He did not.

Mr. JONES. No; certainly he did not. These ships are busy. They would not be available for this trade.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. They can be available for the coastwise trade, can they not?

Mr. JONES. They are engaged in the coastwise trade now.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Very well; would they not be available for transportation through the Panama Canal and so on up the Atlantic coast?

Mr. JONES. No; they would not.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Well, I am not enough of a seafaring man to contradict that statement.

Mr. WEST. Mr. President, I shall not detain the Senate long with any remarks I have to submit. The pending measure is in the Senate on account of the effect of what will be the greatest internecine struggle into which nations have ever entered. For the purpose of evolving a means for carrying the products of America to Europe this bill is here to-day, but there is an effort to load it down with amendments in order that it may be made intercoastal and discriminatory.

Let us see for a moment what would be the effect of this legislation. If we are going to enact it, let us open the port wide; let the Atlantic shipments as well as the Pacific shipments—I refer to intercoastal shipments—be open to the ships of the world, and let them come in. Then the South will be put upon an equality with the trade conditions existing in California and on this side; but under this proposition foreign ships can go to the western coast and there get a cargo and carry it to New York, on account of the discrimination shown, cheaper than it can be carried from New Orleans under present conditions, for the simple reason that foreign ships can not enter our coastwise trade.

As I have said, the pending measure was originally designed for the purpose, as I understand, of securing transportation of our products to Europe, yet it has now developed that it is for the purpose of insuring intercoastal transportation, and not for the purpose for which I thought it was intended.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, referring to the remarks just made by the Senator from Georgia [Mr. WEST], I wish to say that I thought this bill was brought in here for the relief of our people and to meet the emergency and situation that confront them, whether upon the Atlantic or the Pacific coast. I understood that this proposed legislation was to assist our people in getting their products to market; I understood that the people of the South were threatened with a condition under which and because of which they would not be able to market their cotton, and this bill was to relieve that condition. I understood that some of our wheat growers were threatened with a situation whereby they would not be able to market their wheat, which would bring disaster upon them, and that this bill was to relieve that situation. That is all right; and I want to help relieve those conditions in every way possible. I did not understand, however, that this legislation was confined to any particular section or to any particular kind of product, but that it was to meet a situation.

We have a situation on the Pacific coast exactly like the situation on the southern coast and upon the north central coast—even a worse situation, so far as that is concerned. I tried to describe that situation the other day when the Senate was considering the bill as in Committee of the Whole, and I do not think that I shall go over it now. I want to say, however, Mr. President, that we are not so situated that overnight representatives from our section and representatives of those who there need relief can come to the Senate and importune Senators in person and present to them what they say are the facts with reference to their condition. The people I have in mind are 3,000 miles away. We have to rely upon telegrams to be presented to Congress; and I am surprised that some of our friends get hold of a sentence in one particular telegram and represent that as presenting the whole situation. There are in the RECORD telegrams from chambers of commerce and boards of trade, not from those representing a special industry or a special interest, if you want to call it that, but from those who represent the people in those communities. They say that our business is paralyzed, that our shipping is paralyzed, that our industries are paralyzed; and in some of those telegrams they set out that much of this paralysis comes from the emergency which also threatens the cotton planter and the wheat raiser with disaster.

The situation suggested by the Senator from Iowa is a very serious one in our country, but that was not at all sufficient to have warranted me in offering this amendment as an emergency provision upon this bill, if other things had not come up. That, however, is an element to be considered.

The facts are that even with this legislation we shall be at a very great disadvantage with the people just across the line who compete with us in the very commodities which we produce. They will still be able to operate their ships much more cheaply than any ships which may come in under this provision will be operated. They will still have an advantage of from a dollar and a half to three dollars a ton upon the lumber transported from Vancouver to New York and upon the lumber transported from Seattle to New York, but that would not have warranted this amendment upon this emergency bill; I grant that.

My friend from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER] urges that this is an emergency bill. It is, and it is an emergency situation which confronts us. He seems to infer that the emergency does not extend beyond the transportation of the Atlantic coast.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. May I interrupt the Senator from Washington a moment?

Mr. JONES. Certainly.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. The Senator from Washington will remember that the testimony elicited by the Interoceanic Canals Committee when the tolls question was before that committee showed that the larger part of the Pacific coast commerce that went out to sea was carried on tramp vessels not only of Great Britain but of other foreign nations, and that a very small proportion of it was carried on the so-called American vessels. If those foreign vessels are driven from the sea—and they will be without any question of doubt——

Mr. JONES. Many of them are tied up now.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Many of them are tied up now. If that be true—and that is what our people are afraid of now—there will probably be no American coastwise vessels to carry the trade of the western coast to the Atlantic or to any other point for distribution.

Mr. JONES. That is true.

Mr. GALLINGER. Will the Senator pardon an interruption? The lumber that those vessels carry is to foreign ports and not Atlantic ports?

Mr. JONES. Yes; but——

Mr. GALLINGER. There is no trade there.

Mr. JONES. Our foreign market is practically destroyed by the emergency which exists right now.

Mr. GALLINGER. No trade has been developed on the Atlantic coast yet for that lumber.

Mr. JONES. There will be a trade developed for it.

Mr. GALLINGER. I want to say to the Senator that he ought not to put me in the attitude of contending for benefits to the Atlantic coast.

Mr. JONES. I did not say the Senator said that, but that it could be inferred from the Senator's arguments.

Mr. GALLINGER. The Atlantic coast has practically little direct interest in this matter. This emergency legislation, as it has been made to appear, is for the cotton-growing States and the wheat and corn growing States of the West. Unfortunately New Hampshire does not produce much cotton, not any wheat, and only a few ears of corn; and that is also largely true of other Atlantic States; so that the Senator ought not to say that any appeal that I have made is for the Atlantic coast.

Mr. JONES. I did not say it in that way; but I said it could be inferred from the Senator's remarks, and I think that it could be justly inferred from them. I simply reiterate what I said the other day about the Senator's position in regard to this matter. I know the Senator is patriotic and sincere in his views with reference to this matter, but I thought the argument that was presented to-day—and I do not have any fault to find with it—of course, in presenting an argument for a proposition of which one is in favor he tries to present it as strongly as possible, and yet it did seem to me that we could infer from the remarks of the Senator that this bill was designed for the special benefit of the Atlantic coast. The Senator especially appealed to southern Members and suggested that if this proposed legislation should be enacted the trade between New Orleans and New York would be upon a different basis than the trade between the Atlantic and the Pacific. Now that is true.

Mr. WEST. Entirely so——

Mr. JONES. That is, in my judgment, under the circumstances, an argument against this measure. I yield to the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. WEST. Mr. President, I say that is entirely true. You have a protected shipping along the different coasts, and here you propose to open up an intercoastal trade that is not protected. You allow foreign ships to come in and participate in the trade of the Pacific coast, and yet all the Atlantic coast must be restricted only to American ships.

Mr. JONES. That is true; I have admitted that; but here is the situation: The people of the Atlantic seaboard have their transportation facilities between Atlantic ports now. They are not interfered with at all, and the people of that section are going to have relief to enable them to get their products across the ocean, if this bill brings any relief at all, but we on the Pacific coast are in the situation where our ships are not available between the Atlantic and the Pacific ports. That is the situation. We are confronted with an emergency just exactly as you are confronted with an emergency with reference to getting your products across the Atlantic Ocean, and it is for the purpose of meeting that particular emergency that I am asking that this legislation should be put upon this bill.

Mr. WEST. Yes; but in meeting that emergency, why discriminate between Pacific ports and all the southern ports along the Atlantic coast?

Mr. JONES. I do not do so.

Mr. WEST. If you are going to repeal any part of the coastwise laws, why not repeal them all and let foreign ships engage in commerce on all coasts?

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, of course we recognize that that can not be done here. I agree with the Senator from New Hampshire that there is much in the suggestion that we ought not to try to undertake a general revision of our coastwise laws upon this bill; but if the Senator can not see that there is a decided difference between a line of steamers from an Atlantic port to a Pacific port, confined to one course, which can not go anywhere else except through the Panama Canal, involving a voyage of four or five thousand miles in length, absolutely and wholly overseas, if you please—if the Senator does not see that is different from a coastal trip from New Orleans to Galveston or from New Orleans to New York, of course I can not make it any plainer. It does seem to me that there is a very great difference.

As has already been suggested, one of the strong arguments presented here in connection with the repeal of the exemption clause of the Panama Canal act was that, while possibly under the technical terms of the law trade through the canal from one coast to the other is coastwise trade, yet, as a matter of fact, it is overseas. The Senator has not forgotten the powerful argument made by the senior Senator from New York [Mr. ROOT] along that line. That is the situation with us, at any rate.

Mr. WEST. The Senator does not understand my position. If these ships were allowed to participate in the trade along the whole Atlantic coast as well as on the Pacific coast, then we would have our shipping cheaper. As it is, by virtue of this amendment the intercoastal points will get their shipping cheaper.

Mr. JONES. If we could take up that whole question now, I would be willing to consider it and to thrash it out, but we can not do so. Because, however, we can not get all that the Senator thinks we ought possibly to have, I do not think it should appeal to him to cut us off from any relief at all.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, just one question, if the Senator will permit me.

Mr. JONES. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. GALLINGER. I suppose the Southern States produce a great deal more lumber than does the Puget Sound district, do they not?

Mr. JONES. Well, taking the States altogether, possibly so; yes.

Mr. GALLINGER. And that lumber is transported to foreign markets by foreign ships in times of peace. I suppose the same interruption has come to that part of the country, so far as transportation is concerned, as has come to the Pacific coast; and might they not quite as well come here and ask us to admit foreign ships to their trade with the Atlantic coast?

Mr. JONES. I do not think so.

Mr. GALLINGER. Well, why not?

Mr. JONES. Simply because there is a different situation. Instead of making a three or four thousand mile voyage in order to get from a home port to market, they have the markets up and down the coast, reached by short voyages, and this legislation will bring them relief, too.

Mr. GALLINGER. But a very large proportion of their lumber goes to foreign ports, and I apprehend that that traffic is disturbed quite as much as foreign shipping out of Pacific ports.

Mr. JONES. No; the Senator is mistaken about that. They can get into the home market. They have got the ships by which they can get into the home market. We can not even get a home market. Does not the Senator think we ought to have ships when we have lost our market entirely?

Mr. GALLINGER. That is what I have been arguing, that we will furnish you American ships, and there are plenty of them.

Mr. JONES. If you will furnish us plenty of them, of course we will not ask for anything else, because all we want is ships in order to enable us to reach our own markets, but we have not got them; you have not offered them to us; your people have not suggested that they would supply them to our lumber people and others who have been looking for ships and trying to get them. You may bring lists from people in Boston of ships which they have, but they are not going to take them out of the line of work in which they are now engaged and put them in some other work, and they do not propose to do so.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN and Mr. WALSH addressed the Chair.

Mr. JONES. I yield first to the Senator from Oregon, who, I think, first addressed the Chair.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, the Senator from New Hampshire seems to undertake to create some rivalry between the West and the South about the lumber trade. He seems to suggest to the Senate, at least I so understand him, that this provision is applicable only to the Pacific coast and to Pacific coast points. As a matter of fact, exactly the same privileges are granted to points on the Atlantic coast to the Pacific coast that are granted from points on the Pacific coast to the Atlantic coast; the law is general in its application; it not only benefits the lumber business, but it affects all the heavier commodities that go from the Atlantic ports to the West, such as steel. All of our structural steel must come around through the Panama Canal, and if you have not vessels on the Atlantic you will be placed in the same position that we are in the West. We are simply asking that for the particular commodities in our section we be placed on an equal footing at least with the East. I do not understand, and I am sure the Senator from Washington does not understand, that this amendment applies only to the West.

Mr. JONES. Not at all. Of course, it furnishes transportation between all the points on the west coast and the points on the Atlantic and between the points on the Atlantic and the points in the West. Of course, lumber is not the only product that would be transported. We raise 40,000,000 bushels of wheat in the State of Washington. Much of that we hope to ship around through the Panama Canal.

Mr. O'GORMAN. In a word, the Senator does not claim that a ship carrying a cargo from the Pacific to the Atlantic will return in ballast?

Mr. JONES. Not at all.

Mr. O'GORMAN. It will return with another cargo from the Atlantic to the Pacific. The advantages will be reciprocal.

Mr. JONES. Surely.

Mr. O'GORMAN. And will continue so long as in the judgment of the President there is need for this modification of the existing law.

Mr. JONES. That is correct; and I want to make a suggestion in regard to the provision which leaves it to the discretion of the President. I do not believe my Democratic friends are going to reject this provision because some great committee come down here from Boston, representing the shipping interests, and urge that this is a violation of the coastwise laws, and that they will be thrown out of business if the bill is passed, and all that sort of thing. The President of the United States can be depended upon to act wisely and judiciously; and if they can make a showing that there are abundant ships in the trade between the Atlantic and the Pacific ports, the President is not going to bring disaster upon the shipping industry by acting arbitrarily in the matter.

I feel that I can trust the President in this matter as well as in many others. Of course, like the Senator from New Hampshire, I think it would be better if Congress would legislate upon these matters, and not leave too much discretion to the President or impose too great a burden upon him. This is an emergency, however, and under the bill itself we are allowing the President discretion as to whether or not he will suspend other provisions of our navigation laws that have been in force for 100 years. I think, while tiding over this difficulty, we can safely leave this matter also to the discretion of the President.

Mr. O'GORMAN. Mr. President——

Mr. JONES. I yield to the Senator from New York.

Mr. O'GORMAN. I assume that at the proper time the Senator from Washington will have no objection to making a slight modification in his amendment by inserting the words "so far and" after the word "order," on the twelfth line, so that it will be within the President's discretion not only to indicate the time during which he will suspend this requirement of the law, but he will be permitted to indicate the extent to which the suspension shall go. He may be permitted perhaps to indicate the number of ships that will be able to take advantage of this exemption.

Mr. JONES. I would have no objection to that, and I will offer that amendment. That makes it conform very largely, then, to the language in the preceding paragraph.

Mr. O'GORMAN. Yes.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, the Senator from New Hampshire read some telegrams from some of the shipping people saying that if this legislation is passed they will go out of business. They give no reason. They suggest no reason. I do not know whether or not they think they can scare Congress into enacting legislation by such statements as that. They should have presented some reasons why they would be compelled to go out of business.

Mr. GALLINGER. The Senator is wrong, Mr. President. I presented two telegrams that were sent to the senior Senator from Massachusetts from two business concerns of Boston. They are not shipping concerns at all.

Mr. JONES. Business concerns, then; it is all the same; but there is absolutely no question as to who inspired those telegrams. We know how those things come about, especially when they are worded like those telegrams. We know how they come about and how they are suggested.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. JONES. Yes.

Mr. THOMAS. I wish merely to suggest that that is the reason which all monopolies give when legislation is aimed at them. They say they must go out of business if it is enacted. That is the common thing.

SEVERAL SENATORS. Vote!

Mr. JONES. Yes; I know some of my friends are anxious to vote, and I am, too.

Mr. THOMAS. I am awfully anxious.

Mr. JONES. With reference to this monopoly business, however, and with reference to the American-Hawaiian Steamship Co., which sent a telegram to me and to others the other day saying it would go out of business if this legislation was passed, I want to call the attention of Senators to an extract from a telegram which I received before I got that telegram, stating the position of this company that is so anxious to prevent the passage of this measure:

> The American-Hawaiian Line has only offered a carrying capacity of about 75,000,000 feet annually, and that has been under option to one eastern wholesale lumber concern.

In other words, this partial monopoly in the shipping business has entered into a monopolistic arrangement with another company by which that company handles every foot of lumber that the Hawaiian Line would transport.

Now, Mr. President, I shall not take the time of the Senate further.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, with regard to the list submitted to the Senate a short time ago by the distinguished Senator from the State of New Jersey showing the ownership of some 20 craft by the Pacific Steamship Co., the purpose being to indicate that there is an abundance of ships owned upon the Pacific coast that would be available for the transportation of goods from ports on that coast to ports upon the Atlantic, I wish to say that upon the investigation of the tolls bill by the Interoceanic Canals Committee it was disclosed that it would not be profitable to operate through the canal any steamship of less capacity than 5,000 tons, and in all of the computations that have been made it has been considered that no ships would pass through the canal commercially at less capacity.

I find that among the 20 ships in the list furnished by the Senator from New Jersey, in entire good faith, I am very sure, there are but 3 of a capacity greater than 5,000 tons, and 1 of them is an insignificant vessel of only 544 tons. Now, Mr. President, I submit that we ought not to be hurried away from this matter by representations of this character that come in at the eleventh hour, after this matter has been passed upon by the Senate as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will ask the Senator from Montana upon whose authority he states that it will not be profitable for a ship of less than 5,000 tons to go through the Panama Canal?

Mr. WALSH. That was the testimony given before the Canal Committee.

Mr. GALLINGER. The Senator knows that we are sending around Cape Horn sailing vessels of much less tonnage than that, carrying products from the East. They are profitable, and I think they would go through the canal and be still more profitable.

Mr. WALSH. Of course the Senator is aware that the testimony is overwhelming to the effect that sailing vessels can not go through the canal.

Mr. GALLINGER. I do not agree to that.

Mr. WALSH. That is the universal testimony. It is to the effect that to the west of the canal there is a region of calms that absolutely forbids the passage of sailing vessels.

Mr. GALLINGER. That may be so; but at any rate they go around the Horn, and they make profitable voyages—vessels of much less tonnage than 5,000 tons.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me for just a moment?

Mr. WALSH. Certainly.

Mr. JONES. I intended to refer to the list presented by the Senator from New Jersey, but I cut my remarks short because I knew that several Senators wanted a vote. I know some of the vessels named in that list. I have seen them, and I have been on some of them. They are wholly unfitted for trade of this character. They are engaged in trade from Puget Sound out to San Francisco, or from Puget Sound up to the interior points of Alaska by means of the inner passage. They are not ocean-going ships. I am speaking of those that I know of. I am not speaking about any others; only some three or four that I have seen. They are simply passenger ships carrying such freight as goes between local points. They would not be at all suitable for this trade.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Mr. President, I desire to say that I did, as my friend has said, present the list in entire good faith. It came to me from a gentleman whom I felt was well versed in this matter, and I submitted it for what it was worth. Since that time, most remarkably, another gentleman came to me, whose name I do not hesitate to use—Mr. William H. Raab, of New York City—who is quite interested in ships and shipping and the construction and repair of ships, and the like. I asked him the question, "Now, would these craft be of any avail along the coast and through the canal?" He said, "Why, yes; almost all of them would be capable of going through the canal and up the Atlantic coast and engaging there in trade and back again."

Now, I am not stating this on any knowledge of my own or with any desire to exult in contradiction of the Senator from Montana; but the fact is, at least, that there are craft there taking up the business and capable of doing the business. I can not believe that the need is so serious that we must pass a measure whereby whoever may be President may have the authority to grant an American register to a foreign-built vessel for the purpose of squeezing out these men engaged in the trade when there is no need and necessity for it.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, will the Senator submit to a question?

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Certainly.

Mr. JONES. I should like to know whether or not this gentleman told the Senator whether these vessels are idle now.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I did not ask that question. It was just within 5 or 10 minutes that I saw this gentleman and had this talk with him.

Mr. JONES. From my knowledge of the situation there I should say that these vessels are fully occupied now, and if you want to get them in this trade you will have to deprive some business of its means of transportation.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I am very gratified to know that fact; and I hope, in all reason, that this Government may soon build craft sufficient for the Pacific coast as well as the Atlantic coast and the whole ocean trade to carry our own merchandise. Then we can bid defiance to all these combines and alliances, and we will fly our flag to the glory of our Nation and to the welfare of the people thereof.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, whatever may be the merits of the so-called Jones amendment, to my mind it is entirely inappropriate on this bill. This bill is intended to facilitate the admission to American registry of vessels that were foreign built and are not now under American registry, and to do it for the purpose of facilitating our foreign trade. The principal agitation brought forward by the proponents of the bill is to satisfy the need of our wheat and cotton producers to export their produce. Of course, if vessels shall receive American registry under the provisions of the bill, it is our hope that they will be able to get return cargoes and supply Americans with things that they need from abroad also.

This amendment, however, has nothing whatever to do with our foreign trade; neither does it, as I understood the Senator from New Jersey to intimate, bring any foreign vessels under American registry. The amendment simply authorizes the President to suspend just as long as he has a mind to do so our navigation laws, which prevent foreign vessels from taking part in our coastwise trade.

That is a subject entirely unrelated to the emergency that is supposed to exist here, to get our goods into foreign countries and to bring their goods to us. This amendment proposes to confer upon the President power to admit all the foreign ships of the world to our coastwise trade, or at least that portion of our coastwise trade which is the trade between the Atlantic and the Pacific coasts.

Mr. O'GORMAN. Mr. President——

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I yield to the Senator from New York.

Mr. O'GORMAN. I am afraid the Senator from Connecticut is slightly in error as to the extent of the power conferred on the President. The Senator has stated that the amendment gives to the President power to allow all the foreign ships of the world to enter the intercoastal trade. The fact is, that by the amendment offered by the Senator from Washington discretionary power is confided to the President to permit so many of the foreign-built ships owned by American citizens or corporations as have been registered under the American flag to engage in the intercoastal trade.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I think the Senator is mistaken in his view; and in order that the matter may be decided by an impartial judge, I will read the amendment. I assume the amendment speaks for itself. If I have the correct print of it, it reads as follows:

> And the President is hereby authorized, whenever in his discretion the needs of domestic trade require, to suspend by order, so far and for such length of time as he may deem desirable, the provisions of law confining the trade from points on the Atlantic coast to points on the Pacific coast and from points on the Pacific coast to points on the Atlantic coast to American ships.

There are certain provisions of law that confine that trade at present to vessels of American registry.

Mr. O'GORMAN. Has the Senator read the whole of the amendment?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I have read all that I find printed here.

Mr. O'GORMAN. Then the Senator has the original amendment, which has been very materially modified, and I will indicate in what respects.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I wish the Senator would do so.

Mr. O'GORMAN. The amendment, as the Senator will find it in the last print of the bill, reads as follows:

> The President is hereby authorized, whenever in his judgment—

Not "discretion"—

> the needs of domestic trade require, to suspend by order, for such length of time as he may deem desirable, the provisions of law confining the trade from points on the Atlantic coast to points on the Pacific coast and from points on the Pacific coast to points on the Atlantic coast to American-built ships—> and permit foreign-built ships having an American register to engage in the trade between said points.

Now, then—

Mr. BRANDEGEE. That would, then, change one of the points I was making, because the ship would at least have to have an American register. The reason for opposing that amendment would be that there would be no justice to American ships now engaged in the coastwise trade in having pitted against them in the competition ships built abroad at half the price, when the owners of the ships that are now in the trade have paid American prices for their vessels. It would obviously discriminate against every vessel in the coastwise trade that has been built in this country and now has an American registry.

If the object of this legislation is to provide a means of communication between this and foreign countries, so that the vessels can get under a neutral flag and not be subject to the dangers of war, there is no reason for attempting, under that legislation, to modify our coastwise laws. There is no evidence here that there are not enough vessels in our coastwise trade at present owned by Americans to attend to all the business that may offer between the Atlantic and the Pacific coasts; and if there shall develop in the near future any necessity for furnishing any more vessels or passing any more legislation to accommodate any deficiency that may exist in the transportation between the Atlantic and the Pacific coasts, it can be easily taken up in a separate bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from New York [Mr. O'GORMAN] moves to amend the text of the part proposed by the Senator from New Hampshire to be stricken out in a way that the Secretary will state.

The SECRETARY. On line 3 of the amendment, before the word "for," the Senator from New York proposes to insert the words "so far and," so that, if amended, it will read:

> The President is hereby authorized, whenever in his judgment the needs of domestic trade require, to suspend by order, so far and for such length of time as he may deem desirable, etc.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER].

Mr. JONES. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. GALLINGER. I make the point of no quorum first.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Hollis	Overman	Smith, Md.
Brady	Hughes	Page	Smoot
Brandegee	James	Perkins	Stone
Bryan	Johnson	Pittman	Swanson
Chamberlain	Jones	Poindexter	Thomas
Clapp	Kern	Pomerene	Thompson
Clarke, Ark.	Lane	Ransdell	Thornton
Colt	Lee, Md.	Reed	Vardaman
Culberson	McCumber	Saulsbury	Walsh
Cummins	Martine, N. J.	Sheppard	West
Fall	Nelson	Shively	White
Gallinger	Newlands	Simmons	Williams
Gronna	O'Gorman	Smith, Ga.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Fifty-one Senators have answered to the roll call. There is a quorum present. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER], on which the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES] requests the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the junior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. OLIVER] to the junior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. CAMDEN], and vote "nay."

Mr. CULBERSON (when his name was called). Again announcing the transfer of my pair with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. DU PONT] to the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD], I vote "nay."

Mr. FALL (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. CHILTON], and I refrain from voting.

Mr. HOLLIS (when his name was called). I announce my pair with the junior Senator from Maine [Mr. BURLEIGH], and withhold my vote.

Mr. REED (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Michigan [Mr. SMITH], and in his absence I withhold my vote. If I were at liberty to vote, I would vote "nay."

Mr. SMITH of Georgia (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] and withhold my vote.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Vermont [Mr. DILLINGHAM]. In his absence I withhold my vote.

Mr. STONE (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. CLARK]. He is absent and I withhold my vote.

Mr. THOMAS (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the senior Senator from New York [Mr. ROOT] to the senior Senator from Nebraska [Mr HITCHCOCK] and vote "nay."

Mr. WALSH (when his name was called). I have a pair with the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. LIPPITT]. I transfer it to the senior Senator from Virginia [Mr. MARTIN] and vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. WILLIAMS (when his name was called). Transferring my pair with the senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE] to the junior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH], I vote "yea."

I was requested to announce the pair of the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN] with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. GOFF].

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. MYERS. Has the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. McLEAN] voted?

The VICE PRESIDENT. He has not.

Mr. MYERS. I have a pair with that Senator, and in his absence I withhold my vote.

Mr. JAMES (after having voted in the negative). I transfer the general pair I have with the junior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WEEKS] to the junior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. SHIELDS] and allow my vote to stand.

The result was announced—yeas 11, nays 38, as follows:

YEAS—11.

Brandegee	Gronna	Page	West
Colt	Johnson	Smoot	Williams
Gallinger	Martine, N. J.	Swanson

NAYS—38.

Ashurst	Clapp	James	Lewis
Borah	Clarke, Ark.	Jones	McCumber
Brady	Culberson	Kern	Nelson
Bryan	Cummins	Lane	Newlands
Chamberlain	Hughes	Lee, Md.	O'Gorman
Overman	Ransdell	Simmons	Vardaman
Perkins	Saulsbury	Sterling	Walsh
Pittman	Shafroth	Thomas	White
Poindexter	Sheppard	Thompson
Pomerene	Shively	Thornton

NOT VOTING—47.

Bankhead	Fletcher	Myers	Smith, Md.
Bristow	Goff	Norris	Smith, Mich.
Burleigh	Gore	Oliver	Smith, S. C.
Burton	Hitchcock	Owen	Stephenson
Camden	Hollis	Penrose	Stone
Catron	Kenyon	Reed	Sutherland
Chilton	La Follette	Robinson	Tillman
Clark, Wyo.	Lea, Tenn.	Root	Townsend
Crawford	Lippitt	Sherman	Warren
Dillingham	Lodge	Shields	Weeks
du Pont	McLean	Smith, Ariz.	Works
Fall	Martin, Va.	Smith, Ga.

So Mr. GALLINGER's amendment was rejected.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The section having been adopted, now I wish to offer an amendment to it. In section 3, on page 5, line 16, after the word "coast," I move to insert the words:

And from points on the Gulf coast to points on the Pacific or Atlantic coast, and from points on the Pacific or the Atlantic coast to points on the Gulf coast.

I wish to say this: If you are going to admit foreign-built ships into the coastwise trade from points upon the Pacific coast to points on the Atlantic coast for the purpose of enabling the lumber of the Northwest to be brought to New York and Boston and the ports of the Atlantic generally, then undoubtedly, in ordinary, common fairness, you ought to permit the yellow pine of Mississippi and of Alabama and of the west coast of Florida, coming out of Pensacola and Mobile and the Gulf ports, and that of Texas and Louisiana, coming out of New Orleans and Galveston, to have the same advantage of the cheaper rates brought about by the cheaper operation of foreign-built ships.

To take advantage of a great emergency measure of this sort in order to give an unfair advantage to the lumber of the Northwest as against the lumber of the South and the Southwest it seems to me is nothing less than discriminatory, to use a very mild term to express it.

As far as I am concerned personally I would be willing to see foreign-built ships, when purchased by American citizens, in all our coastwise trade, but I did not think that this emergency bill was a bill on which it was proper to undertake to make a revolutionary change in our present law. It would have delayed the passage of this emergency measure, however wise and right. But it is both bad and unwise to take advantage of a great emergency in order to seek special discriminatory benefits, and I was unwilling to take advantage of it, even for the purpose of changing the general law equally for all; but if the general law is to be changed for the benefit of the lumber of the State of Washington and the State of Oregon, then it ought to be changed for the benefit of the lumber of the States of Florida, Alabama, Mississippi, and Texas, and the same food that is fed to those who trade upon ships that go down to the sea from Portland and from Seattle ought to be dealt out to those who send the same and competing products out of the Gulf ports up to the Atlantic markets. There the two meet in competition in markets equally reached by all-way water routes.

I would have offered the amendment earlier, but I had no idea that as unequal a law or an amendment of as unequal operation as this would be adopted upon cool reconsideration by the Senate.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Mississippi if there is any lack of adequate shipping facilities at the present time for the lumber of the Gulf ports to the Atlantic ports?

Mr. WILLIAMS. No, none; and up the other way, in extreme northwestern ports, either, just as soon as the Panama Canal is ready to be operated. Of course, at the present we have a great advantage in the water carriage as long as your lumber is to be carried around the Horn, but the minute the Panama Canal is opened we are all upon an equal footing. You will have every advantage except what nature gives us in shorter distance. That ought not to be taken from us. There will be equal abundance of shipping for both. What you are trying to do is to get an unfair advantage—taking advantage of a great public emergency to procure special benefit for yourselves or for your lumber dealers.

Mr. POINDEXTER. The proposition of the Senator from Mississippi would be very hard to oppose or resist if it was true that the shipping conditions from the Gulf ports to other coast ports were the same as those from the Pacific coast to the Atlantic coast. But they are entirely different, and it makes a need for this relief.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The shipping condition——

Mr. POINDEXTER. If the Senator will allow me just a few moments, I have a great bundle of letters and telegrams on my desk here now which I have not introduced because I think other information to the same effect has been put into the RECORD. They go to show that wheat is choking the elevator and warehouse capacity, that orders for lumber are piling up where there are no shipping facilities by which the orders can be supplied from the Pacific coast, and in order to get shipping facilities——

Mr. WILLIAMS. As far as I know, the shipments of lumber from Portland and Seattle and the Northwest to New York and Boston all around the Horn have not amounted to much at any time. To cure that condition is not what this so-called Jones amendment does. This amendment was offered here in contemplation of the opening of the Panama Canal, when the shipping facilities will be exactly the same for both of us and when the opportunity for shipments will be precisely the same. Now——

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President——

Mr. WILLIAMS. If the Senator will pardon me one moment. However, I will yield to him now.

Mr. POINDEXTER. It will not be the same, because they will have to pay tolls in the canal. That is one difference. Another difference is this: Why did the Senator, with his usual ability, urge that coast shipping was controlled by a trust? The Senator said the great lines of shipping now plying between the Atlantic ports are controlled by trusts. There is nothing in the law which prevents that trust-controlled shipping, if it is controlled by a trust, from continuing to serve all the Atlantic ports and the ports between the Gulf and Atlantic ports.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I yielded to the Senator for a question.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Just a moment to finish the sentence. The law prohibits these ships, owned by the trust, from going through the Panama Canal. Consequently they can not be used in that way at all.

Mr. WILLIAMS. We would have to pay tolls, too, on all we would ship through the Panama Canal.

Mr. President, answering both points made by the Senator, though not quite in an interrogative form, I am not going further to thrash out the whole Panama tolls question again. This is my first proposition: The United States Government expended hundreds of millions of dollars to build a canal, and the people who will profit by it chiefly are the people of Washington and Oregon and California. They are the people who above every other people in the United States, at any rate, and perhaps in the whole world, will profit by the canal. It will give them ready and cheap access to Europe and our Atlantic coast, these constituting the richest and most valuable of all consumers of all products in the world.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Not any more than the people on the Atlantic coast.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The Senator must pardon me. I do not want a cross-fire debate while both are speaking at the same time. We have always had this ready and cheap access to Europe and to our own Atlantic coast. Then they came in here and with the same motive which now guides them in getting this Jones section upon this bill they desired to be exempted from tolls of a very moderate character that were required from everybody, that were required upon our products going to the Pacific coast as much as upon their products coming from the Pacific coast to the Atlantic and the Gulf. If it be true that the consumer is finally to pay the toll charges as he normally pays in the long run all other transit charges, then it affects us just as much as it does you to require tolls to be paid on coastwise ships passing through the Panama Canal. We will each buy from the other.

As to the trust, the Senator never heard me say that there was a coastwise shipping trust in the sense in which he is now using the word. I said that the coastwise shipping was a legalized monopoly, not that any one man or combination of men inside of the service controlled the whole service, because I do not believe they do. There is competition within the coastwise service, but the service itself is a legalized American monopoly. All foreigners are shut out of it entirely. So far as I am concerned, I would like to see that legalized monopoly destroyed; but I do not think this is the proper place to destroy it. I had tried, unsuccessfully, to destroy it once before, and did not think I could succeed now; but for the Senate to turn around and destroy the monopoly for the benefit of one set of shippers and producers in this country, and for one set of consumers in this country alone, leaving the remainder of them subject to the higher price brought about by the legalized monopoly is, in my opinion, unequal, discriminatory, and unjust.

I had no idea of applying for anything upon this bill that would give special privileges to the timber owners of Mississippi, who are sending their lumber all up the Atlantic coast and sending it to Chicago by rail.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Mississippi yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. WILLIAMS. In one moment. What is sauce fit for the goose is sauce fit for the gander; and if you are going to take advantage of this emergency bill for the purpose of helping to put profits into the pockets of the timber producers and shippers of Washington and Oregon, then it is but sounding a trumpet full of the voice of equality to say that you should do the same thing for those who ship lumber from the Gulf coast to the same ports. Now I yield to the Senator from North Dakota.

Mr. GRONNA. The Senator from Mississippi speaks of lumber. Is it not true that this provision will apply to grain or to the products of the farm as well as it will to lumber?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Oh, yes; the same thing would apply to your wheat; the same thing would apply to whatever you produce. Your wheat, paying high railroad rates, would have to meet on the Atlantic seaboard the North Pacific wheat carried to the same ports at cheap water rates, made yet cheaper by the Jones amendment.

Mr. GRONNA. Exactly.

Mr. WILLIAMS. And the same thing would apply to our cotton. We ship a vast proportion of the cotton crop of the South up to Fall River, Mass., up to Providence, R. I., up to all the ports that receive it for the cotton factories of New England. They use more of the raw material than we do ourselves; but I did not want to bring one product in by analogy with another, because it was easier to illustrate the injustice of the proposition by taking the one product, comparing it with itself, and thus confining the argument to that. You will, however, be giving an advantage to your producers of wheat over our producers of cotton if this Jones amendment be left unamended.

I am glad to see one thing. Every one of you upon both sides has admitted that it is a cost to both the American consumer and to the American producer to keep up this legalized coast shipping monopoly. It would be better for both the American producer and consumer, assuming that they divided the profits of the decrease of freightage, if the monopoly were abolished. But that is not the question here. The question here is which are you going to do, maintain it or abolish it? Either one you choose would be equal treatment of all. Take either horn of the dilemma—or, upon the other side, are you going to maintain it for some and abolish it for others? That is what you are attempting to do.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me for a question?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Yes.

Mr. NELSON. If the Gulf of Mexico is a part of the Atlantic Ocean, does not the term "Atlantic coast" include the Gulf of Mexico?

Mr. WILLIAMS. No, sir. The Gulf of Mexico is a part of the Atlantic Ocean in the sense that the waters of one flow into the other. All the oceans of this world are one, for that matter. The Pacific and the Atlantic Oceans are one and the same, in the sense that each flows into the other around the Horn and through the Straits of Magellan, in South America. But water places on the earth have their distinctive names. The term "Atlantic coast" no more means "Gulf coast" than it means "Pacific coast," and neither one of them means the other any more than either means the coast of the Red Sea.

It seems to me, Mr. President, that we ought to do one of three things: Either let the present law alone, so far as this emergency bill is concerned, or abolish it by means of an amendment of the emergency bill, or else treat everybody equally in connection with the extent to which you do abolish it.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. If I may interrupt the Senator a moment, I want to say that, so far as I understand the purport and phraseology of the Jones amendment, the term "Atlantic coast" includes the Gulf coast. If there is any doubt about that, so far as the Northwest is concerned, we would ask to have that made unmistakable.

Mr. WILLIAMS. That would not cure my quarrel, although the term "Atlantic coast" can not possibly include the Gulf coast unless the Gulf coast is mentioned. My quarrel is not, if the Senator will pardon me, that products can not be shipped from Gulf ports around through the Panama Canal to Portland and to Seattle, and that products can not be shipped around through the Panama Canal from Portland and Seattle to Mobile and New Orleans; but my quarrel is that when it comes to where we compete in the markets of the North Atlantic coast in selling lumber to the northern Atlantic consumer of lumber—who is the chief consumer of it, by the way—the Jones amendment, if left without further amendment, gives an advantage by law to your lumber over the lumber of my constituents.

The lumber men of Mississippi have never been specially friends of mine, because I voted as far back as 1893 to put lumber on the free list; and I voted to do so on the last tariff bill. I voted for that and, as far as practicable, have always voted against all special privilege granted by law; but I believe in being fair toward people, and not discriminating by law against them; and I therefore could not stand idly by here, so long as they are constituents of mine, and let this, in my opinion, unfair advantage be taken of them.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. If the Senator will allow me to interrupt him just a moment, I desire to say to him that as the law now is, the only competitor for the sale of lumber that the people in the South will now encounter will be the British Columbia lumber dealers. As a matter of fact, the testimony before the Interoceanic Canal Committee showed that the lumber from Victoria in foreign ships can be carried through the Panama Canal and landed in New York for about $3 a thousand less than it can possibly be shipped for from American ports.

Now, on this point I desire to say——

Mr. WILLIAMS. I did not yield for a speech.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Very well; I will take my own time.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I want to answer the last statement of the Senator from Oregon. The reason why that can be done, if it can be done—and I expect that, as usual in a case of this sort, the testimony was interested testimony, like the testimony before the Finance Committee when the tariff is up—but if it can be done, the reason why it can be done is because of the lower cost of operation of ships sailing from Vancouver as compared with ships sailing from Portland and Seattle.

Mr. LANE. And the lower cost of the ships.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The cost of the ships can be no lower. A ship built in Vancouver can not possibly cost any less than a ship built in Portland or in Seattle.

Mr. LANE. The ships are not built in either of those two places. They are built in Europe and for almost 30 per cent less.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Oh, yes; foreign ships. I want to come to that and refer to the equalization of that cost, because the Senator is mistaken. The only inequality now left is the inequality in the cost of operation. I want to demonstrate that fact to the Senator right now. The inequality in the cost of the building of a ship has nothing to do with the case any more than have "the flowers that bloom in the spring," nor has it had since the amendment to the Panama Canal act giving the right to Americans to purchase ships abroad and operate them in the deep-sea trade became law.

Quoting from an authority upon this question, the special privileges complained of which foreign ships have are the means—I want the attention of my friend from Oregon to this—"the special privileges and the special advantages which foreign ships have are the means by which foreign ships are enabled forcibly to hold the crews which operate them at the lower wage rates of foreign ports." "Under treaties and under the statutes of the United States this Government uses its police power at the request of the foreign shipowners to capture and return seamen who attempt to quit the service of their ships," and, I will add, they keep the sailor from getting his pay for the work already done in reaching our ports, which is one-half of the work that he contracted to do. That is what makes the wages of the sailors operating a foreign ship cheaper and lower than the wages of the sailors operating an American ship.

Suppose this case, for example: A Japanese ship comes to Portland, Oreg., with a Japanese crew, or an Italian ship comes to New Orleans, La., with an Italian crew from Naples. Under the law of nature the wage rate upon the high seas would be a competing rate, or a rate made by competition; but that is not the case here. Under the laws of nature the pay of a seaman would depend upon the pay of the port at which the ship touched as much as upon the rate of wages at the port whence it sailed. If that Japanese crew landed at Portland, or if that Italian crew landed at New Orleans, and they met an American ship there waiting to sail back across the ocean, the American crew and the crews of the foreign ships would meet, and they would ask one another: "How much are you getting to go to the same port where we are bound?" The American would say, $2 plus; the Italian would say, "I am getting $1 plus"; and the Japanese sailor would say, "I am getting three-fourths of a dollar plus," or whatever it might be. Then would follow the natural effect.

The foreign sailors would decline to sail in his ship unless the shipowner paid him the same rate that the Americans were receiving to go in a ship just like it from the same port in this country to the same foreign port. The La Follette bill will cure that after it becomes a law.

So far as the inequality in the building of ships is concerned, we cured that in the canal act. I had the honor myself to draw the first amendment here looking to that end—because we there provided that ships built abroad could be purchased by American citizens and put under the American flag, provided they had been five years in the service. Therefore, so far as equalizing the cost of building the ship is concerned, that has already been done; but we find it did not result in any good, because we had not equalized the cost of the operations. If you want to equalize the cost of the operation, so far as pay of sailormen goes, you can do it by passing the La Follette bill and making it a part of the law of this land.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Mississippi yield to the Senator from Delaware?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Yes.

Mr. SAULSBURY. As supporting the argument of the Senator from Mississippi, who is always so clear-headed in matters of this kind, I desire to call attention to a somewhat ancient document to which we seem not to pay very special attention. The sixth clause of the ninth section of Article I of the Constitution of the United States provides:

> No preference shall be given by any regulation of commerce or revenue to the ports of one State over those of another.

It seems to me that it might be pertinent to call the attention of the Senate to that provision in connection with the shipment of lumber from different sections. I voted for the Jones amendment, because I do not believe in extending the closed coastwise trade further than it now exists. I shall vote against the amendment of my friend the Senator from Mississippi, because I do not want to tear the coastwise trade as it now exists up by the roots. It may not seem logical to cast the two votes; but I only wanted to call attention to the support which the Constitution of the United States, which may render the Jones amendment unconstitutional, gives the argument of the Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. WILLIAMS. My friend's position on the Jones amendment, in view of that argument, I do not quite understand. I am glad the Senator has called my attention to the fact that this amendment standing alone—or standing with mine—if the law did not extend uniformly to every port might possibly be obnoxious to that clause of the Constitution which the Senator has read; but I can not see how my friend from Delaware, having that notion in his head, voted for the Jones amendment, because the Constitution ought to be the highest law of the land, not only to the courts, but to Senators.

Mr. SAULSBURY. May I take a moment to explain to the Senator?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Yes.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I did not want to do in this bill what I think it is very necessary to do, and that is to reform our navigation laws generally somewhat upon the lines of the Jones amendment.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I do not either, and therefore I voted against the Jones amendment, because I thought to take advantage of this emergency bill for the purpose of reforming our general navigation laws was to take advantage of a great crisis in the history of the American people. I can not yet understand how my friend from Delaware, with that idea in his head, voted affirmatively instead of negatively——

Mr. JONES. Mr. President——

Mr. WILLIAMS. Because he was, at least, voting to reform the navigation laws to the extent that the Jones amendment goes. If the Senator from Washington will pardon me one moment, I was engaged in trying to show to the Senator from Oregon [Mr. LANE] when I was interrupted that there was no lack of equality between American ships and foreign-built ships, except the cost of operation. Now, let me finish that and then I will yield to the Senator.

I have shown already that there is no inequality in the cost of the ship, because we can buy it abroad and put it under the American flag, and we can buy it built in the same port at which the foreign competing ship is built; we may, indeed, buy the competing ship itself.

There is another entire equality and not inequality in the cost of supplies, except as to such little advantages as we ourselves have in being the main producers of sailors' food products of every description. That advantage there is somewhat upon our side. A trans-Atlantic or trans-Pacific ship will and does buy its supplies in whichever of its terminal ports it can buy the quality it wants cheapest.

Now, one more thought——

Mr. McCUMBER rose.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I have not yet quite finished. It has been said that the wages of sailors are the "wages of the flag which floats over the ship." At present, by our own laws permitting the arrest and carrying back of the sailor to his ship, that is true; but if that law did not exist, then the wages of the sailor would be the wages of the highest-paid port from which he shipped plus the wages of the lowest-paid port divided by 2; in other words, he would come from the lowest-paid port with the lowest wage, and he would go back from the highest-paid port to the lowest-paid port with the highest wage—refusing to return unless he got it—and the two added together and divided by 2 would give his total wage.

I will say in frankness and fairness that there is one respect in which an American ship is operated at a greater expense than a foreign ship—one more only under the present laws—and that is that we require by law better and ampler provisions and greater air space for the sailors; but if the La Follette bill is passed, we will once more assert our jurisdiction over foreign shipping in our own ports, and a ship, whether or not it is foreign built and under a foreign flag or under our own, that leaves an American port, no matter how it came to it, must go back conforming to American standards as to cubic yards of air space and as to the food required by American law for a ship sailing from an American port, because all navigation of every description and all ships while in an American port and until they have gotten beyond the 3-league jurisdiction line are subject to American law if we but choose to make it so.

Now, so much answers the question which the Senator asked me. To sum it all up, the sole difference of cost between American ships and foreign ships to-day which gives an advantage to the foreign ships is the cost of operation. When a ship is purchased abroad and sails under the American flag in our deep-sea or coastwise trade, that inequality at once ceases to exist. Why? Because every ship built in America or built in Europe which flies the American flag is subject to exactly the same regulations as to atmospheric space and as to supplies and provisions. The fact that the ship was bought abroad cuts no figure in it, because we can buy them abroad. Portland and Seattle can buy them abroad, as well as British Columbia.

You can both buy at the Clyde; you can both buy in the Dutch shipyards; you can both buy in the German shipyards in times of peace. The minute that ship gets into the American trade under American registry the inequality of wages and other costs of operation ceases to exist, the inequality of cubic space for air purposes ceases to exist, the inequality of provisions furnished the sailor ceases to exist; so this point of the Senator from Oregon falls to the ground.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Mississippi yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. WILLIAMS. One word. If, to quote another man, "you permit the foreign sailor merely to release himself when he reaches an American port," the difference in cost of operation will cease.

Now I yield to the Senator.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President——

Mr. WILLIAMS. The Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES] wanted to interrupt me a few moments ago. I have finished that particular line of thought. I yield to him now.

Mr. JONES. I simply wanted to suggest that I think the Senator is a little bit unfair to us. I think probably he did not hear the argument on my amendment.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Oh, yes; I did.

Mr. JONES. I think if the Senator had heard all the argument——

Mr. WILLIAMS. Oh, I did not hear all of it—my heavens, no. There was too much of it.

Mr. JONES. If the Senator had heard all of it I do not think he would have charged us with insisting upon taking advantage of this opportunity for the special purpose of getting an advantage for our section, because I tried to show—I believe it anyhow, and I believe it sincerely—that there is an emergency on our coast and with reference to our industries just the same as there is an emergency on the Atlantic coast, and that this provision is warranted, with exactly the same parity of reasoning for our people and our industries as for the others.

I do not care to go into the matter again, because I tried to make it plain; but I do think the Senator is just a little bit unfair to charge that we are trying to take advantage of this emergency, because we are not.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, every intelligent man is affected by the natural consequences of his own acts, and the Senator from Washington is one of the most intelligent men I have ever known. Here was a bill the broad purpose of which was to enable us to get our foodstuffs and cotton stuffs to Europe and to the other markets of the world, whether across the Pacific to the east or down the Pacific to the western coast of South America or down the Atlantic to the eastern coast of South America or across the Atlantic to Europe. It was a bill solely introduced for purposes of foreign commerce, and the Senator from Washington has injected into it a coastwise proposition, the direct result of which, and the necessary consequence of which, would be a special benefit to his lumber constituents, and that is all.

I heard a part of his argument, and the main part of it was just that. That is what he contended all the way through—that unless this sort of provision was adopted, his lumber people could not get their lumber around to Boston and New York. They are not getting it around there now, and they can not until they get the opportunity to go through the Panama Canal. So I do say that advantage was taken of a foreign-commerce bill, designed to meet a great crisis and emergency, to put upon it a permanent, discriminating, unequal provision for the benefit of a particular set of consumers and producers in a particular section of the United States, to wit, the section of the Senator from Washington. I believe that if the Supreme Court would rule correctly upon it—unfortunately, however, there are rulings the other way, too—it would hold it obnoxious to the clause of the Constitution which says that no advantage shall ever be given to the ports of one State over the ports of another; but in the Porto Rico cases and the Philippine cases they held that the Constitution did not accompany the flag and I do not know how far they are going to carry that principle.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, will the Senator permit me to interrupt him?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Yes.

Mr. GALLINGER. I am interested in the Senator's argument. I called attention, during the few minutes I occupied, to the very point that it was a discrimination. Now, Mr. President, there is an enormous traffic over the Great Lakes, and a great saving could be made by letting Canadian vessels do that business. Would it be any more violent for us to——

Mr. WILLIAMS. Every argument used by the Senator from Washington as to the advantage of foreign-built ships or foreign ships as against American ships applies equally well as to Canadian ships that come out of the St. Lawrence in contrast with American ships that come out of the Great Lakes and go to the same port, whether American or foreign.

Mr. GALLINGER. Undoubtedly.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Absolutely.

Mr. GALLINGER. There is no difference in the world.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The argument is an argument against the present law; but instead of moving to abolish the present law, which would have been the logical consequence, he moved to abolish it in part only; that is, in so far as it affects and benefits the extreme northwestern part of this Republic.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me now?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Yes.

Mr. McCUMBER. I have tried three or four times to get the Senator to yield, but I have been cut in on by others.

Mr. WILLIAMS. By the way, I beg the Senator's pardon. I ought to have yielded to him some time ago, instead of to some other Senator, but the interruptions were so fast and furious I forgot that he had arisen first.

Mr. McCUMBER. I was about to suggest to the Senator practically what has been suggested in a mild form by the Senator from New Hampshire. I want to say first that I entirely agree with the Senator that we ought not to make a discrimination between any two ports. If we are going to have a law, it ought to apply to ships exactly the same whether they sail from Portland to New York or from Galveston to New York. There is nothing in the proposition that the coast cities are laboring under a disadvantage in passing through the canal, because while they may have the disadvantage of a longer haul and the 30 or 60 odd cents per ton that it will cost to get through the canal, at the same time they have a great advantage in the lumber and the manner of handling their lumber, in their immense trees, so that it costs less to produce a million feet of lumber there than it does down South. We can not equalize those conditions by making our freight rates different between different localities so as to make everything worth the same in the same market.

I want to make a suggestion to the Senator. Should he not, under the view he takes, modify his amendment so that it will read "the Gulf or Great Lake ports"? Now, our grain is tied up. It is tied up so that we can not handle it properly at the present time. My colleague and I have just been talking the matter over upon his suggestion that we ought to ask the Senator from Mississippi to modify his amendment so that we can vote for equality of treatment all along our coast.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I am perfectly willing to do that, and I think the Senator is perfectly correct in asking it. I ask that the amendment may be modified so as to read "and from points upon the Gulf coast or from the Great Lake ports to points upon the Pacific coast, and from points upon the Pacific coast to points upon the Gulf coast or the Great Lake ports."

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, in view of the fact that it is conceded by the distinguished Senator from Mississippi that this is a legalized monopoly and that we are dealing with it by piecemeal, will not the Senator offer an amendment repealing the law as an entirety?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I can not do that with justice to myself or to the present bill, for a very simple reason: I know that such an amendment will not be adopted; and I have hoped, from the sense of justice of Senators from all sections of the country, that if I carry the amendment only so far as I do now carry it, to wit, to make the breach proposed by the Senator from Washington apply to all of our coast instead of only to the Pacific coast, substantially, I may get the amendment to the amendment through.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President——

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

Mr. WILLIAMS. If the Senators will pardon me, when the canal bill was up I first worded my amendment so as to apply to coastwise and foreign trade both; and finding that I could not possibly get it through, I then confined it to deep-sea commerce; but there never was a day when I would not have been willing to abolish this or any other legalized monopoly. The greatest merchant-marine country in the world, Great Britain, will permit you or me to go there to-morrow with a ship that we have built anywhere in the world and enter the coastwise trade of Great Britain.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, there never has been an hour since the passage of the free-tolls bill that I would not vote to repeal this law, and I hope the Senator will offer an amendment to that effect. If he does, he will get a good deal of support over on this side.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I am always glad to get a few votes on that side; but I am a practical man, or try to be, and I know that I could not get that amendment adopted. Besides that, I do not think it is altogether fair to take advantage of a great crisis in order to try to change the permanent laws of the United States any further than is necessary to meet the emergency itself; nor would I have introduced an amendment just like the one I have introduced except for the fact that the Senator from Washington has introduced and has secured the passage of his amendment. So my sole object is to keep my people upon a footing of equality with his in so far as the navigation laws of the United States have anything to do with either one of them.

Mr. BORAH. The logic of it is that we ought to keep all the people upon an equality with each other.

Mr. WILLIAMS. That is very true.

Mr. BORAH. It is never too soon to get rid of that which is an injustice or a wrong; and in view of our present situation and our present condition of affairs I think the law ought to be repealed.

Mr. WILLIAMS. So do I, but I do not think we could stop here and discuss this thing two months. We want to get through this emergency legislation. We want to get it to the President just as soon as we can and get it signed and meet the present emergency. The Senator knows as well as I do that if we undertook to repeal the navigation laws of the United States we would be discussing the proposal two months. The interests involved are too great. The influence that they exercise is nearly omnipotent; indeed, hitherto has been omnipotent in both Houses of Congress. I want the emergency legislation to go through. I want immediately to meet the emergency. While I do not think this bill will meet it in full, and while I think the bill I introduced would, as this bill can not do any particular harm I am willing to vote for it. It can, and will moreover, do some good; and I want to get that good as quickly as I can.

If there has been any false step made in that respect, it was made by the Senator from Washington when he offered his amendment, and was made by the Senate when the Senate adopted his amendment. All I ask is that in so far as that is right its righteousness shall apply to us, and that in so far as it is wrong, if it is wrong for us, then it is wrong for him.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Yes.

Mr. JONES. I do not know whether I exactly caught the force of the Senator's amendment or not; but I will say to him that my idea of my amendment has been all the time that it will allow the suspension of the coastwise laws between all ports on the west coast of the United States, or the Pacific coast, and all points on the east coast of the United States, or what might be called the Gulf and the Atlantic coast. That is, I had in mind the idea that the Gulf ports were a part of the Atlantic coast.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The Senator did not so express it.

Mr. JONES. If that is the purpose of the Senator's amendment, I will vote for it.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Oh, that is not the sole nor full purpose of my amendment.

Mr. JONES. That is what I thought.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I do not want to deceive the Senator from Washington. It would accomplish that purpose amongst others.

Mr. JONES. I wanted the Senator to understand my position clearly and to know that I wished to put the Pacific coast on the same basis as all the Atlantic coast, including the Gulf coast.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Then, if the Senator's amendment is going upon the statute books unamended by my amendment, he ought to change the language of it so as to read "the western ports and the eastern ports and the southern ports of the United States," and then he would cover them all. That is not my sole object, however. I want to be frank with the Senator. My next object is this: If you are going to take advantage of this bill to land your lumber in New York and Boston at a lower price, I want my people's lumber landed there by the same provision of the same bill at the same relative decrease of cost.

Mr. President, I have spoken longer than I intended to speak. The Senators have noticed, however, I suppose, that it was because of interruptions. I have also spoken with less logical continuity than I would have liked to speak, and this, too, for the same reason.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President, I wish to say a few words regarding this amendment.

I voted for the so-called Jones amendment with great reluctance. I would have much preferred to have the whole subject matter given a thorough investigation by proper committees, and then to have their deliberate judgment as to legislation regarding it; but the State I represent is in keen sympathy with the entire Pacific coast, and feels that it has been the victim of discriminatory legislation under the recent act amendatory of the Panama Canal act. We practically decided by that legislation that the commerce between the Pacific coast and the Atlantic coast was oversea commerce. We deprived that commerce between the States, passing through the Panama Canal, of the general benefit which the entire coastwise and internal commerce of the United States had had, namely, relief from any burden imposed by the United States directly upon commerce by reason of expenditures made by the United States in the improvement of waterways. We have expended upon the waterways of the United States over half a billion dollars, not a dollar of which has been charged in any way upon the tonnage transported in domestic commerce. We made a similar expenditure upon the Panama Canal, with a view to tying together the commerce of the Atlantic and the Pacific coasts; and we imposed upon that domestic commerce the charge of $1.20 a ton in compensation for expenditures made by the United States on what was a domestic waterway.

Now, having started with that discrimination we felt it was only fair to relieve the Pacific coast of the burden of the present condition and to give it the advantage of these vessels purchased in foreign countries, admitted to American registry, giving the people of the Pacific coast the advantage of transportation between the coasts upon those vessels. We had commenced discrimination already. We have now sought to extend that discrimination, or rather to equalize it, by giving the Pacific coast this advantage.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, just a word.

SEVERAL SENATORS. Let us vote.

Mr. GALLINGER. Well, we will vote after a while.

Just a word, Mr. President. I regret exceedingly that the Senator from Washington has asserted that the shipping interests of Boston have been here trying to prevent the legislation in which he was interested. I stated half a dozen times that it was a committee of business men. Very likely some of them may be interested in shipping, but they are business men and were headed by the mayor of that great city.

Mr. President, they came here, as they had a right to come. They would have been here sooner, no doubt, had they not received what seemed to be assurances, based upon fact, that the coastwise laws would not be disturbed in this legislation. I had that assurance from gentlemen whose names I will not now mention, and I believed that I was safe in giving that assurance to my constituents and to the people of New England. Those men came here as soon as they could come, and they came having a right to come, and their motives and their purposes ought neither to be misconstrued nor misrepresented.

Mr. President, I said the other day that this was not a fair way to deal with the coastwise laws of the United States; that if the Congress wants to repeal those laws, let it do it directly and in a square and honest way, and let us have the fight out covering the entire question.

I remarked the other day that the amendment of the Senator from Washington was the camel's head that was entering the tent. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Mississippi puts a part of the body of the animal into the tent, and the suggestion of the Senator from Iowa puts the entire camel there, and the coastwise laws will be blotted out by piecemeal.

Mr. President, it is not to the credit of the Senate of the United States, it is not to the credit of the Congress of the United States, that this great question is not met fairly and squarely and considered upon its merits as an entirety.

I meant to refer then to the provision of the Constitution, but forgot it. We can not give a preference to one port of the United States as against another port. That is precisely what we have done in the amendment that has been agreed to. But let that go. I do not know that it will ever be decided in the courts of the United States, but I believe that if it is contested it will be found to be, in the judgment of the Supreme Court of the United States, a direct violation of that provision of the Constitution.

Mr. President, the Senator from Mississippi is consistent in the amendment he has offered. I can not vote for it, because I am against all these propositions, but there is just as much reason why the Gulf ports should not be included in this legislation, and there is just as much reason why the Great Lakes should not be included in this proposition, because, open the commerce of the Great Lakes, mighty as it is, to the ships of Canada and you will get transportation across those lakes much cheaper than you can get it to-day, if that is your purpose.

But, Mr. President, my effort was unavailing. The votes that my amendment received were fewer than I anticipated, but I always acknowledge defeat gracefully, and I am prepared now to vote against this bill, inasmuch as the amendment of the Senator from Washington has been attached to it.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, just a word. I did not intend in anything I said to convey the impression that I thought the business men or shipping men ought not to come down here to Washington, as they had a perfect right to do, or that they were here for an improper purpose. I do not think anything I said suggested anything of that sort. I am just as much in favor of gentlemen coming here and seeing us about this legislation as the Senator from New Hampshire. I think they have a right to come here, but I think I had a perfect right to direct attention to the fact that they were here pressing this matter.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, I had regarded this bill as an emergency measure. I am not unaware of the fact that it would be a benefit to the interior of the country to have it apply to the Great Lakes, but I have not seen fit to offer such an amendment as was suggested by my colleague. I find no fault with the Senator from Washington for offering his amendment, but I believe, Mr. President, that this bill should be passed as an emergency measure and not a measure that will take care of one locality as against another. No one will deny that the Jones amendment provides for privileges to the coast that it denies to the interior of the country.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I deny that.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, I believe I can demonstrate to the Senator that wheat and other products can be shipped from the Pacific coast to the Atlantic coast for perhaps one-third less than the cost of shipping our wheat from the interior.

The amendment of the Senator from Washington has no place upon this bill.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. May I interrupt the Senator?

Mr. GRONNA. I will be through in a moment.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I just want to ask the Senator a question, in this connection.

Mr. GRONNA. I will be through in a moment. I voted to repeal the Panama Canal tolls provision for the simple reason that I did not believe in discrimination. This bill was introduced as an emergency measure, for the purpose of taking care of our oversea commerce; the Senator from Washington has succeeded, with his usual skill and ability, to get into the bill an amendment that will give a preference to the commerce on the Pacific coast. I now yield to the Senator from Oregon.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. The Senator says that we are getting wheat shipped by water from the Pacific coast to the Atlantic coast for a third less than from the interior. I may say to the Senator that that would be true whether this law passes or not. It is a benefit which the God of nature has given us in making rates cheaper between coast points than interior points, and particularly so where the competition is railway competition.

Mr. GRONNA. The Senator from Oregon must know, and he does know, that by the bill as it was reported from the committee the Pacific coast will have the same advantage that the Atlantic coast has.

Mr. McCUMBER. If my colleague will yield to me, I should like to suggest to the Senator from Oregon that if he has that natural advantage certainly he ought not then to ask for special advantages to exaggerate that difficulty.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. We deny we are doing that and insist that we are only asking that the same privileges be given to our section of the country by the bill.

Mr. McCUMBER. All we are asking is that the Great Lake section be accorded the same privileges as the rest of the country.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I am not opposing that. I was just answering the suggestion made by the Senator's colleague.

Mr. GRONNA. I am merely making these observations for this reason: I have regarded this bill as purely an emergency measure, and I did not feel justified in offering an amendment that would give a special privilege to our section of the country, but when the Senators from the Pacific coast or from the Atlantic coast saw fit to burden this measure with amendments and with provisions that are discriminatory I believed that you would be willing to let it apply to the whole United States.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, I know how tired the Senate is, and I do not feel that it would be just to myself or to the Senate to make a speech, and I am not going to do it. I merely wish to make one or two observations in view of what the senior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] had to say. I tried to interject an observation while he was addressing the Senate, but he would not permit me to do it. The Senator waxes warm and talks loud whenever he addresses himself to the Pacific coast and to the Northwest. I do not know why he does it. I think he is reasonably friendly to the Members of the Senate from the Pacific Northwest, but whenever that subject is broached he seems to become eloquent and to grow angry and will not allow Senators from that section of the country to interrupt him. I have begun to think and our people have begun to think that the Senator is not friendly to the northwest section of the country.

The Senator opposed the construction of railroads in Alaska most eloquently, and now he opposes the Northwest and claims that Senators from the Northwest are asking something at the hands of the Senate that is sectional and unfair. None have been more devoted to the interests of the South than have those who come from my section of the country. We are always glad to assist the people of the South in anything that benefits them. As a matter of fact, when this bill was reported here it was argued at length and urged that the principal purpose of the bill was to do what? That it was to enable the South to get rid of its cotton crop. That was the argument which was made by our friends from the South. God knows there is not a man in the Senate who was more glad to render them assistance in that than I was, and no man will do more to assist them along that line than will I and my colleagues from the Northwest.

Not only was it localized by those who were insisting upon this emergency legislation, but it was practically based upon that proposition alone. Now, while there is legislation admitting foreign-built ships to American registry for the purpose of relieving the situation in the South, why not go a step further and admit these foreign-built ships to the coastwise trade when they have been admitted to American registry?

There is not a single provision in this bill that gives the Pacific coast any advantage over the Atlantic coast. As I said a while ago, while the lumber trade of the Northwest has been instanced by way of illustration only to show the hardships that have been imposed upon that industry in the Northwest, it is sought to be made to appear here that the lumber industry alone is the industry which is interested.

Mr. President, every vessel that goes through the Panama Canal from the Pacific coast ports laden with lumber will bring back some commodity from the Atlantic coast line in the form of structural steel or some commodity which can not go very well by rail.

I call the attention of the Senate to what I was addressing myself to when the Senator from Mississippi declined to permit me to interrupt him further. The Senator says that if the bill passes with the Jones amendment it will give the Pacific coast ports shipping lumber an advantage over the South coast ports. That is not true. As a matter of fact, the ships that are laden with lumber from British Columbia, from Vancouver, can unload lumber in New York cheaper than it is possible to unload lumber from American coastwise vessels from Puget Sound and Portland in the same Atlantic ports.

Not only that, Mr. President, but there is this, further, that I want to say: American coastwise vessels that go through the Panama Canal go through on exactly the same terms as the British ships which go from Vancouver. But aside from the fact that the British vessels can carry lumber around to the Atlantic coast cheaper, because of the cheaper construction of their vessels, as my colleague has stated, and because of the fact that they can operate them cheaper, they have this additional advantage and there is this handicap to American shipping: Rule 7 of the proclamation fixing charges upon vessels going through the Panama Canal has a provision charging the same rates for a deck load as is charged for the under-deck load. In other words, a lumber vessel loaded at Puget Sound for a port on the Atlantic coast pays an under-deck charge at the rate of $1.20 per ton, although two-thirds of her cargo is above deck. The American vessel laden at Portland, Oreg., pays $1.20 a ton for space under deck which is not occupied at all or which is practically unoccupied, whilst there is a charge for the upper-deck load of $1.20 per ton. That is practically two-thirds of the load of lumber. So taking a vessel with an under-deck capacity of 5,000 tons net registered tonnage, that vessel goes through the Panama Canal and pays at the rate of $1.20 per ton on 5,000 tons, and yet not a third of the 5,000 tons is under deck.

The lumber load is on the deck; and it would be compelled not only to pay on 5,000 tons under deck, but it pays about $1,600 for space above deck which is really not occupied by lumber. So the American ships loaded in Portland, Oreg., or on Puget Sound can not possibly compete with vessels loaded with lumber from southern ports which the Senator from Mississippi so eloquently enlarged upon.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President——

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I will not allow the Senator to interrupt me any more than he permitted me to interrupt him.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I told the Senator——

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I do not propose to be interrupted by the Senator at all.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Oregon has the floor and declines to yield.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. The Senator very discourteously declined to permit me to interrupt him, and I do not propose to be interrupted by the Senator.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I told the Senator——

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I do not propose to permit the Senator to interrupt me.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Oregon has the floor and can not be interrupted without his consent.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. That is all there is about it. There has not been a time when I have entered into any discussion with the Senator when he has not treated me with the same discourtesy. That is the reason why I suggested that the Senator seems to be unfriendly to my section of the country, because I had not been able to believe that he has an unfriendly feeling toward the Senators from that section.

So I say, Mr. President, it is impossible for the American coastwise vessel loading lumber at Seattle or Tacoma or Everett or Portland to compete with the lumber laden on a vessel from a southern port, for the reason, first, that the American vessel pays for going through the Panama Canal at the rate of $1.20 per ton, and, in addition to that, as I stated a while ago, it not only pays at the rate of $1.20 per ton for the load under deck, where it does not carry the load, but it pays the tonnage charge above deck, which places a handicap on a vessel of 5,000 tons of about $1,600 to $1,800. So the charges on the passage through the canal and the upper-deck charge make it impossible for a vessel loading with lumber on the northwest coast to compete with the Mississippi lumber.

But, Mr. President, so far as I am concerned, I was not opposed to the amendment of the Senator from Mississippi, because I assumed that when it spoke of the Atlantic coast points it meant the Gulf of Mexico, too. To us ignorant people from our section of the country we assumed that the Atlantic coast line extended as far south as the Gulf coast. So I am not opposed to that amendment.

I was simply led to make this observation, Mr. President, because I was not permitted to interrupt the Senator from Mississippi when he had the floor.

Mr. O'GORMAN. I ask unanimous consent——

Mr. WILLIAMS. I want to make a request of the Senator from New York. Let me interrupt him for a moment.

Mr. O'GORMAN. Yes.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I hold in my hand a couple of pages prepared by Andrew Furuseth upon the question of the difference of operation between American and foreign ships, and I want it appended as a part of my remarks.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

The matter referred to is as follows:

INTERNATIONAL SEAMEN'S UNION OF AMERICA,
February 12, 1914.

DEAR SIR: I have received some requests for a further explanation of part of my letter of January 31, wherein I made reference to "certain special privileges" granted by our Government to foreign shipowners, and which have resulted disastrously to the foreign-going merchant marine of our own country. Therefore I again take the liberty of addressing you on the subject.

The "special privileges" are the means by which, while in our ports, foreign ships are enabled to forcibly hold the crews secured at the lower-wage rates of foreign ports. Under treaties and statutes our Government uses its police powers, at the request of foreign shipowners, to capture and return seamen who attempt to quit the service of their ships and keep sailors from getting their pay for work already done. Illustration: Naples to New York; Nagasaki to San Francisco. Thus the wage rate of foreign ships is forcibly kept lower than that prevailing at American ports.

This marks the one advantage which foreign ships now hold over American ships in the foreign trade and which prevents the proper growth of our merchant marine. Other conditions have been equalized.

The building cost was equalized by a clause in the Panama Canal act permitting American registry to foreign-built ships for purposes of the foreign trade, except that the admitted vessels were not admitted to the coastwise trade.

The cost of supplies is equal to all. An American ship trading between New York and Antwerp, for instance, purchases her supplies in Antwerp, if the cost there is lower than in New York.

The remaining item, and the most important, is that of labor cost on the vessel itself, i. e., the wages of the crew. If conditions can be brought about whereby the wage cost of operation will be equalized, the development of our merchant marine and our sea power will be unhampered. This is cured by the La Follette bill.

This is within the power of our Government. The present situation is entirely artificial. The remedy is to set free the economic laws governing wages, economic laws which, in their application to seamen, are now obstructed by treaties and statute law.

There has been a very common misapprehension that wages of seamen depend upon the flag under which they work. Their wages depend upon the port in which they are hired and sign shipping articles, regardless of the nationality of the vessel, and the wages in that port depends upon the standards of living in the country where the port is located. In other words, the economic law governing wages of seamen is exactly the same as that governing wages of any other class of workers.

Imagine two ships, one flying the American flag, the other a foreign flag, moored at the same dock in New York. The crew of the American vessel has been hired in New York at American wages, that of the foreign ship at some low-wage port in the Mediterranean. The two crews come into contact, each discovering the wages and conditions of the other.

What is the natural result? Unless prevented by force, the crew of the foreign vessel would either get the same wages as paid on the American vessel or they would quit. The foreigner would then have to hire a new crew at the wages of the port, not as the result of any organized action by the men, but as the result of individual desire inherent in human nature

The foreign owner would have gained no advantage by his refusal to pay the higher wages to the crew he brought here. Under such conditions ordinary business sense would quickly induce him to pay his crew in accordance with American standards in advance of arrival in an American port as the only way to retain their services, and thus avoid the cost involved in delaying his vessel for a new crew.

In 1884 Congress enacted a law intended to enable American shipowners to hire their crews in foreign ports, where wages are lowest, and to hold these crews in American ports, where wages were higher. It was an attempt to force wages down to the foreign standard, but it failed to accomplish its purpose. The whole pressure of American life was against it.

The way to successfully equalize the wage cost of operation is to permit the men on all vessels in our ports to release themselves, instead of assisting shipowners to forcibly hold them. Equalization will then follow a natural course upward to the higher level in response to economic conditions. Equalization downward by artificial means is impossible, and results only in men quitting the sea.

Let Congress reassert and maintain domestic jurisdiction over all vessels in our ports, enact standards of safety and skill, etc., based upon American conceptions, equally applicable to all and kept under control of our own Government, thus depriving foreign vessels of any special privileges. The wage cost of operation will be equalized, and so remain, and there will be no need of subsidies to rebuild the American merchant marine.

Respectfully submitted.

ANDREW FURUSETH,
President International Seamen's Union.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Will the Senator from New York excuse me one moment longer? The Senator from Oregon [Mr. CHAMBERLAIN] seems to have misunderstood me. I never intended to refuse to permit the Senator from Oregon to interrupt me at all. I merely asked him to hold off until I got through with the thought I was then engaged upon. He thoroughly misinterpreted what I did.

Mr. O'GORMAN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that we proceed to vote on all the amendments and the bill not later than 6.45 this evening, and that in the meantime no Senator shall occupy more than five minutes in any remarks he may make.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Hollis	Overman	Stone
Borah	Hughes	Page	Swanson
Brady	James	Perkins	Thomas
Brandegee	Johnson	Pittman	Thompson
Bristow	Jones	Pomerene	Thornton
Bryan	Kern	Ransdell	Tillman
Chamberlain	Lane	Reed	Vardaman
Clapp	Lee, Md.	Shafroth	Walsh
Clarke, Ark.	Lewis	Sheppard	West
Colt	McCumber	Shively	White
Culberson	Martine, N. J.	Simmons	Williams
Cummins	Nelson	Smith, Md.
Gallinger	Newlands	Smoot
Gronna	O'Gorman	Sterling

The VICE PRESIDENT. Fifty-three Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present. The Senator from New York [Mr. O'GORMAN] submits a request for unanimous consent, which will be read by the Secretary.

The Secretary read as follows:

It is agreed by unanimous consent that at not later than 6.45 o'clock p. m. on this day, August 11, 1914, the Senate will proceed to vote upon any amendment that may be pending, any amendment that may be offered, and upon the bill H. R. 18202 through the remaining parliamentary stages to its final disposition; and that no Senator shall speak more than once or longer than five minutes upon the bill or any amendment offered thereto.

Mr. O'GORMAN. I desire to modify my request by placing a limit of two minutes instead of five minutes upon the time to be occupied in making speeches.

Mr. JAMES. Why not make the time for voting 6.30 p. m.?

Mr. O'GORMAN. If there be no objection, I will make it 6.30 p. m.

Mr. JAMES. I understand the Senator from Georgia [Mr. WEST] only desires to speak for a few moments.

Mr. WEST. I merely wish to make a brief statement. I do not desire to make an argument.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I wish to present an amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request for unanimous consent?

Mr. GALLINGER. What request for unanimous consent, the one as read?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the unanimous consent as now proposed to be modified.

The Secretary read as follows:

It is agreed by unanimous consent that, at not later than 6 o'clock and 30 minutes p. m. on this day, August 11, 1914, the Senate will proceed to vote upon any amendment that may be pending, any amendment that may be offered, and upon the bill H. R. 18202 through the remaining parliamentary stages to its final disposition, and that no Senator shall speak more than once nor longer than two minutes upon the bill or any amendment offered thereto.

Mr. O'GORMAN. In deference to the desires and convenience of one of my colleagues, I ask that the original hour for beginning voting, 6.45 p. m., be retained.

Mr. WEST. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the unanimous-consent agreement? The Senator from Georgia.

Mr. WEST. It is not my purpose, Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the unanimous-consent agreement?

Mr. WEST. I merely rose to address myself to the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question at hand is to determine whether or not the unanimous-consent agreement shall be entered into.

Mr. WEST. I thought that had already been done.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none; and the agreement is made.

Mr. WEST. Mr. President, it is not my purpose to enter upon any argument in this case. I have been impressed all along with the idea that this was a great emergency measure, and I have been anxious to support it because I think the country needs it; but I do think that the amendment put upon the bill on motion of the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES] is unjust, unfair, and discriminatory, and that it should not have been tacked onto this great emergency measure. It gives three States on the western coast the advantage over the States in the South, inasmuch as it gives them proportionately a cheaper rate.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry. Is there now an amendment pending to the bill?

The VICE PRESIDENT. There is.

Mr. SMOOT. I want to make a few remarks after that amendment is disposed of.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS]. [Putting the question.] The noes seem to have it.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I ask for a division, Mr. President.

The VICE PRESIDENT. All in favor of the amendment will rise. [A pause.] Those opposed will rise. [A pause.] The amendment is adopted.

Mr. GALLINGER. What is the vote, Mr. President?

The VICE PRESIDENT. For the information of the Senator from New Hampshire——

Mr. GALLINGER. And the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. And the Senate, the Chair will state that the ayes were 22 and the noes were 15.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I had intended to offer the same amendment to the bill which I offered last Saturday, but I will refrain from doing so at this time, because the Senate has virtually recorded its wishes in regard to the principle involved in the amendment.

Mr. President, just a word in explanation of the vote which I intend to cast for this bill. I am utterly opposed to section 3 of the bill. If I thought that section was going to remain in the bill, I should vote against it, but I believe it will go out in conference. For that reason I shall cast my vote for the bill.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. SMOOT. I do.

Mr. JONES. I shou'd like to ask the Senator from Utah what reason he has for thinking that that provision, which was adopted by a vote of the Senate, will go out of the bill in conference?

Mr. SMOOT. It is merely an impression that I have. No one has said a word to me as to whether it will go out of or remain in the bill, but I think that that impression will prove to be well founded when the conference report is made to this body

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Nevada will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to insert as a new section the following:

SEC. 6. The Secretary of the Navy is hereby authorized to purchase or to provide for the construction, either in the private shipyards of the United States or in the navy yards, or both, of 30 vessels suitable for use by the Navy either as auxiliary vessels, such as transports, fuel ships, dispatch boats, ammunition vessels, hospital ships, supply ships, and scouts, or for use on such commercial or mail lines as the Secretary of the Navy may now or hereafter be authorized by law to establish, not to cost in the aggregate to exceed $30,000,000; and the sum of $30,000,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to carry into effect the provisions of this section.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry. I understand that that is the same amendment which the Senator from Nevada offered when the bill was before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole?

Mr. NEWLANDS. It differs in some details.

Mr. SMOOT. I was going to say that if the amendment is the same, then, the right not having been reserved to offer it in the Senate, it would now be out of order.

Mr. GALLINGER. Oh, no.

Mr. NEWLANDS. The amendment has been changed in some particulars.

Mr. SMOOT. Then I shall not press the point of order.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President, I am aware that many Senators who are disposed to support this proposal as proper legislation are disinclined to do so as an amendment upon this bill, and I wish to say in that connection that this is probably the only opportunity that we shall have to write this measure into the statute books.

The Senate will recall that it has already passed a bill, called the Weeks bill, which provides for the utilization in commerce of certain ships belonging to the Navy, not only in commerce in South American ports but with European ports. We have the statement of the Secretary of the Navy that there are some 20 ships belonging to the Navy that can be thus utilized. This is simply supplemental to the legislation which the Senate has already enacted and which is now under consideration by the Naval Committee of the other House. It simply recognizes the fact that our fighting ships will not have in case of war the support of supply ships, and that our fighting ships would be useless in the ocean in case of war without the aid of supply ships. It proposes, therefore, as a matter of national defense, to start upon the program of adding to our Navy those auxiliary ships that are absolutely essential for the support of the fighting ships in case of war, meanwhile utilizing them during times of peace for commercial purposes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The time of the Senator has expired.

Mr. O'GORMAN. Mr. President, I desire to say a word respecting the amendment just proposed by the Senator from Nevada. The proposal has merit, but it should not be made a part of this particular emergency bill. The purpose of the proposal is to furnish an auxiliary navy. The bill should go to the Committee on Naval Affairs, receive suitable consideration there, and then come into this body as an independent measure. I do not think it should form a part of this remedial and emergency legislation which we are about to enact.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. President, I offer an amendment to section 3, which I should like to have the Secretary read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The pending amendment is the one offered by the Senator from Nevada [Mr. NEWLANDS], which has not yet been disposed of.

Mr. BRYAN. Very well.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I want in a word to express my objection to the amendment offered by the Senator from Nevada. The pending bill is designed to increase the merchant marine, and the Senator introduces an amendment for the purpose of increasing the Navy. The proposals are precisely the opposite in the ends aimed at and ought not to be coalesced.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, it seems to me, in view of the fact that this is an emergency measure, that the proposition of the Senator from Nevada ought not to prevail. In the event that we should become involved in war, we could do exactly as we did in the Spanish War; we have the right to go out and buy, and we have an unlimited market in which to buy transports. We had no difficulty whatever in obtaining them in 1898. When the Spanish-American War was over, the consensus of opinion of the Navy Department and of other departments of the Government was that we did not need the vessels which had been purchased, and therefore they were offered for sale and brought only 25 cents on the dollar. The chances are that that experience will be repeated.

We know that we are in need of revenue now; we are considering the proposition of raising more revenue; we are contemplating putting new revenue laws upon the statute books, and is it possible that we want to add twenty-five or thirty million dollars to the debt that already burdens us, when we know that the imports to the United States must be less, and that therefore the revenue to be derived from the duties on imports will be less? It seems to me that now is not the time to legislate with respect to this matter. If we want a measure of this kind, if it is the deliberate opinion of the Senate that there should be such legislation, it ought to be upon a bill of permanent nature and not upon an emergency measure.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The time of the Senator has expired.

Mr. BRISTOW. Mr. President, this bill as it has been amended, in my opinion, is a bad bill. We ought to have passed it as an emergency bill without amendments revising the shipping laws of the United States. It is certainly surprising to hear Senators refer to this as an emergency measure and at the same time advocate revising the shipping laws of the United States, with very little consideration, under the assumption that we need to do so as an emergency measure.

The amendment which the Senator from Nevada [Mr. NEWLANDS] has offered will be the most sensible provision that the bill will contain, in case the amendment is adopted. It would be of more use to the American people than all the rest of the provisions of the bill together. If it shall be incorporated into the bill, it will to a considerable extent alleviate the evil the bill contains as it is now formulated. I only hope that it will be adopted, and I intend to do everything I can to bring that about.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, does the Senator believe that it will encourage the merchant marine if we have Government-owned rival lines plying between the same ports that privately owned vessels serve? Does the Senator think we can ever build up a merchant marine by pursuing such a course as that?

Mr. BRISTOW. We are now undertaking to revise our shipping laws in order to get a merchant marine that will carry our products abroad, and amendments have been attached to this bill that will destroy the coastwise shipping that we now have, so that the coastwise commerce of the United States will be in just as bad a condition as the over-seas trade is to-day. Under the guise of an emergency we are destroying all of the shipping we have got by bringing the foreigner to trade in our home ports; and now it is proposed to let the Government build ships so that there may be better facilities for caring for our coastwise trade.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The time of the Senator has expired.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, it is perfectly evident that emergencies, like hard cases, are very apt to make bad law. Whatever may be the emergency or merits of the pending legislation, whether it will fill the bill and provide what is necessary in the emergency, remains to be seen; but there is a disposition always at the end of a session, when some bill gets a showing of public sentiment behind it, to use that bill as a float or a life preserver to which to attach measures that might be hopeless in themselves, and to get them through in that way.

It seems to me that it does not require much judgment to perceive that if the country ought to appropriate $30,000,000 to the Navy, or to anything else, it ought to do so after some inspection and consideration, and that it ought not to be done here under the two-minute rule on this bill at this time in the evening. If $30,000,000 are to be appropriated for the Navy, the general board ought to consider the proposition and say to what vessels it shall be applied. Right along we have been voting down in connection with other bills amendments to increase the Navy along certain lines on the ground that it was against the interests of economy, and that we did not have the money to enter into any such venture.

I can not see that this will be wise legislation, and I hope the amendment will not prevail. The Senator from Nevada has already introduced the same provision in the form of a bill which has been referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs, where it belongs. If there is any merit in it, it will be discovered by the committee and by the department, and can then be acted upon as other similar measures are and ought to be.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, I do not think this bill materially changes or affects our navigation laws except in so far as the third section is concerned. I was and am still opposed to that section, and if I had not been paired I would have voted against it to-day.

The Senator from New York, in charge of the measure, says that he appreciates the very great merit in the proposition submitted by the Senator from Nevada, but he thinks it ought not to go upon this bill. Why, Mr. President, this is the very bill of all others that it ought to go upon. It does not concern the merchant marine except in a very casual way. It is to provide certain classes of ships for the Navy as a part of the Naval Establishment. The use of those ships in commercial lines is temporary, and as soon as the temporary emergency passes they cease to be operated for commercial purposes. The very object of this bill, the one supreme purpose had in mind in the introduction and I should think in the passage of this bill is to secure facilities for transporting the cotton and other agricultural products of the country and the manufactured products of the country to foreign ports, now so much congested by reason of the lack of those facilities.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The time of the Senator from Missouri has expired. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Nevada. [Putting the question.] By the sound the noes seem to have it.

Mr. BRISTOW. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN (when his name was called). I transfer my general pair with the junior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. OLIVER] to the junior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. CAMDEN] and will vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. CULBERSON (when his name was called). I transfer my general pair with the senior Senator from Delaware [Mr. DU PONT] to the senior Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD] and will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. FALL (when his name was called). I have a pair with the senior Senator from West Virginia [Mr. CHILTON] and therefore withhold my vote. If I were at liberty to vote, I should vote "yea."

Mr. HOLLIS (when his name was called). I announce my pair with the junior Senator from Maine [Mr. BURLEIGH] and withhold my vote.

Mr. JAMES (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the junior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WEEKS] to the junior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. SHIELDS] and will vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. REED (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from Michigan [Mr. SMITH] and therefore withhold my vote. If I were at liberty to vote, I should vote "yea."

Mr. SMITH of Georgia (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr.

LODGE] to the senior Senator from Virginia [Mr. MARTIN] and will vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. SMITH of Maryland (when his name was called). Again announcing my pair, in the absence of the Senator with whom I am paired, I withhold my vote.

Mr. STONE (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Wyoming [Mr. CLARK]. In his absence I withhold my vote.

Mr. THOMAS (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the senior Senator from New York [Mr. ROOT] to the senior Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK] and will vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. TILLMAN (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the junior Senator from West Virginia [Mr. GOFF] to my colleague [Mr. SMITH] and will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. WALSH (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. LIPPITT]. In his absence I refrain from voting.

Mr. WILLIAMS (when his name was called). I have a pair with the senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE]. Being unable to procure a transfer of that pair, of course I must withhold my vote. If he were present and I were at liberty to vote, I should vote "nay."

The roll call having been concluded, the result was announced—yeas 20, nays 30, as follows:

YEAS—20.

Ashurst	Clarke, Ark.	Jones	Overman
Borah	Colt	Lane	Pittman
Brady	Culberson	Lewis	Poindexter
Bristow	Cummins	Martine, N. J.	Thompson

Fall	Martin, Va.	Smith, Md.
Fletcher	Myers	Smith, Mich.

So Mr. NEWLANDS's amendment was rejected.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I offer an amendment to follow the amendment agreed to, that was offered by the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS].

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. At the end of section 3 it is proposed to insert the following:

Provided, That foreign-built vessels engaging in such coastwise trade shall be subject to all the laws, regulations, and rules of the United States Government pertaining to vessels of the United States in every respect as though such foreign-built vessels were vessels of the United States.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, that amendment is so just and so reasonable that I do not propose to debate it. I hope it will be agreed to.

Mr. O'GORMAN and Mr. WILLIAMS addressed the Chair.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from New York.

Mr. O'GORMAN. Mr. President, under the bill as it now stands, every one of these foreign-built vessels will be subject to every feature of the American law except where the President, by authority of this measure, suspends the law.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I was about to say just what the Senator from New York has said; that so far as everything except the present emergency is concerned these foreign-built ships, after they once enter the service, are subject to the rules and regulations of the service, and they are only exempt in so far as the provisions of this bill exempt them by the order of the President.

Mr. O'GORMAN. Mr. President, I call the attention of the Vice President to the fact that the hour has arrived when we should proceed, under the unanimous-consent agreement, to take a final vote.

Mr. GALLINGER. Oh, no; I think we are to vote on the amendments. I do not think the Senator can cut off amendments in that way. I want a vote on my amendment. I am not going to debate it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from New Hampshire.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk, and ask that it may be stated.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the amendment.

The SECRETARY. As a substitute for section 3 as amended it is proposed to insert:

SEC. 3. The President is hereby authorized, whenever in his judgment the needs of domestic trade require, to suspend by order, so far and for such length of time as he may deem desirable, the provisions of law confining the coastwise trade to American-built ships, and permit foreign-built ships having an American register to engage in the coastwise trade.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. President, is debate out of order at this time?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair thinks not. The Chair thinks, however, that it is confined to two minutes on the part of each Senator.

Mr. BRYAN. The amendment adopted, offered by the Senator from Mississippi, in regard to the Gulf ports and the ports of the Great Lakes, it seems to me, justifies the amendment which I offer, and which in effect authorizes the President to suspend the shipping laws as they affect domestic vessels.

I can illustrate the situation as it exists under section 3 as it now stands by referring to two cities in my own State. The city of Tampa is a Gulf port. The city of Key West is an Atlantic port. Foreign-built vessels manned by foreign crews could go out of Tampa under this bill, and they could not go out of the city of Key West, only a few miles away.

In order that the matter may be equitable and just as between the ports, I hope the amendment will be adopted.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I just want to say that under the terms of my amendment the Senator is mistaken, as the amendment was subsequently modified.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Florida.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. CUMMINS. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I should like to have the terms of the unanimous-consent agreement read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read it.

The Secretary read as follows:

It is agreed by unanimous consent that at not later than 6.45 o'clock p. m. on this day, August 11, 1914, the Senate will proceed to vote upon any amendment that may be pending, any amendment that may be offered, and upon the bill H. R. 18202, through the remaining parliamentary stages to its final disposition; and that no Senator shall speak more than once or longer than two minutes upon the bill or any amendment offered thereto.

Mr. GALLINGER. Let the amendment be stated.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the amendment.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to insert, after the word "title" in line 9, page 3, the following:

Provided, That no foreign-built ship hereafter purchased by an American corporation shall be admitted to United States registry unless a majority of the stock of such corporation is owned and held by citizens of the United States.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I do not intend to repeat the argument that I have made more than once in regard to this subject. I believe we are committing a grave mistake when we allow, in the condition which now confronts us abroad, foreign ships to be nominally transferred to an American corporation merely to secure whatever protection there may be in the American flag. I think it is an invitation for fraud, and I must believe that it will be regarded as an unfriendly thing by the nations that may be interested in the subject.

I do not intend to ask for a roll call, but I will ask for a vote upon my amendment, and a division. I ask for a division.

The VICE PRESIDENT. All in favor of the amendment will rise. [A pause.] All opposed will rise. [A pause.] The ayes are 23, the noes are 21. The amendment is agreed to.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, is it in order to ask for the yeas and nays?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair rules that it is not.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I was on my feet preparatory to making that request when the Chair announced the result.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Yes; but the Senator did not address the Chair.

Mr. JAMES. The vote itself having disclosed the lack of a quorum, it is the duty of the Chair to direct a call of the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. No; it is not the duty of the Chair to direct a call of the Senate.

Mr. SIMMONS. I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. CUMMINS. I call for the regular order.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I move to reconsider the vote.

Mr. SIMMONS. I insist that when a Senator is on his feet to call for the yeas and nays, and the Chair is speaking before he can possibly address the Chair, it is not right to deny a request for the yeas and nays.

Mr. BORAH. How could the Chair know what the intention of the Senator was? He did not address the Chair.

Mr. SIMMONS. I addressed the Chair as quickly as I could after the count was made. I could not prevent the count being made. A request had been made for a division. I had to let the Chair finish the count, and I could not ask for the yeas and nays until the count was made.

Mr. SMOOT. I call for the regular order.

Mr. JAMES. Mr. President, a point of order. The point of order I desire to make to the Chair is that when a count of the Senate discloses the lack of a quorum the Senate can not proceed further until the presence of a quorum is ascertained, and that can only be done by a call of the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The present occupant of the chair has decided that the only reason for a division is in order to satisfy the mind of the Chair as to whether the motion is carried or lost; that it is not even incumbent on the Chair to announce what is shown by the division. It is only for the purpose of satisfying the Chair as to the vote. There is a remedy when a Senator or Senators desire the yeas and nays—to request the yeas and nays.

Mr. JAMES. Mr. President, of course I do not care to appeal from the decision of the Chair, but heretofore I have always observed, although I have not been in the Senate very long, that when a count of this body disclosed the lack of a quorum the roll has always been called.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It has not been done since the present occupant of the Chair has been here. If it had been, we would be about two days behind time on the present bill now.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Mississippi will state it.

Mr. WILLIAMS. How is a Senator to know whether or not he wants the yeas and nays until after he has been informed by the Chair what the vote upon the division was?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair is unable to tell the Senator from Mississippi whether he wants the yeas and nays or not except to tell him that he has a right to call for them if he wants them.

Mr. WILLIAMS. There is not any use in calling for the yeas and nays when the vote is on a Senator's side. He does not know whether he wants them or not until the vote is entered.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I call for the regular order.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I move to reconsider the vote which was taken on this amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion to reconsider. [Putting the question.] The ayes seem to have it.

Mr. CUMMINS. I call for a division.

Mr. BRISTOW. I call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN (when his name was called). Transferring my pair as heretofore, I vote "nay."

Mr. CULBERSON (when his name was called). Transferring my pair as before announced, I vote "yea."

Mr. FALL (when his name was called). Being informed that the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. CHILTON], with whom I am paired, would vote as I do, I vote "yea."

Mr. HOLLIS (when his name was called). I announce my pair with the junior Senator from Maine [Mr. BURLEIGH] and withhold my vote.

Mr. JAMES (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WEEKS] to the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. SHIELDS] and vote "yea."

Mr. REED (when his name was called). I have a pair with the Senator from Michigan [Mr. SMITH]. I am unable to obtain a transfer, and I withhold my vote.

I will take this occasion to announce that my colleague [Mr. STONE] has been called from the Chamber by a matter of importance, and that he is paired with the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. CLARK].

Mr. SMITH of Georgia (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] to the senior Senator from Virginia [Mr. MARTIN] and vote "yea."

Mr. SMITH of Maryland (when his name was called). Again announcing my pair, I withhold my vote.

Mr. THOMAS (when his name was called). I make the same transfer as on the previous roll call and vote "yea."

Mr. WALSH (when his name was called). In view of the absence of my pair, as heretofore announced, I withhold my vote.

Mr. WILLIAMS (when his name was called). Transferring my pair with the senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE] to the junior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH], I vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. WALSH. I find an opportunity to transfer my pair with the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. LIPPITT] to the Senator from Georgia [Mr. WEST]. I vote "nay."

The result was announced—yeas 26, nays 25, as follows:

So the motion to reconsider was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question recurs upon the amendment proposed by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS].

Mr. CUMMINS. Upon that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN (when his name was called). Transferring my pair as heretofore, I vote "yea."

Mr. CULBERSON (when his name was called). Again announcing my pair and its transfer, I vote "nay."

Mr. HOLLIS (when his name was called). I again announce my pair, and withhold my vote.

Mr. JAMES (when his name was called). Making the same transfer as on the former roll call, I vote "nay."

Mr. REED (when his name was called). I renew the announcement I made on the last vote.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia (when his name was called). Reannouncing the transfer of my pair as before, I vote "nay."

Mr. SMITH of Maryland (when his name was called). I again announce my pair with the Senator from Vermont [Mr. DILLINGHAM], and withhold my vote.

Mr. THOMAS (when his name was called). I make the same transfer as hitherto, and vote "nay."

Mr. WALSH (when his name was called). I again transfer my pair with the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. LIPPITT] to the Senator from Georgia [Mr. WEST] and vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. WILLIAMS (when his name was called). Making the same announcement of my pair and the same transfer as on the last roll call, I vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I wish to announce that the senior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN] is paired with the junior Senator from West Virginia [Mr. GOFF].

The result was announced—yeas 26, nays 25, as follows:

YEAS—26.

Ashurst	Cummins	Martine, N. J.	Saulsbury
Borah	Gallinger	Newlands	Smoot

Goff	Norris	Smith, S. C.

So Mr. CUMMINS's amendment was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on concurring in the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole.

The amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is, Shall the bill pass?

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, before the final vote is taken, I was requested by the junior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WEEKS] to state that if the bill had been in its original form he would have voted for it, but he would have voted against it amended by the Jones amendment.

I was also requested to state that the senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] would have voted against the amendments and would have also voted against the bill.

The junior Senator from Maine [Mr. BURLEIGH] would have voted against the amendments, but I am not informed whether he would have voted against the bill in its present form.

The bill was passed.

RECESS.

Mr. KERN. I move that the Senate take a recess until 11 o'clock to-morrow.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 7 o'clock and 15 minutes p. m.) the Senate took a recess until to-morrow, Wednesday, August 12, 1914, at 11 o'clock a. m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, August 11, 1914.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Eternal God, our heavenly Father, enter Thou into our souls with all Thy quickening power and bring us closer to Thee and to one another. "Behold how good and how pleasant it is for brethren to dwell together in unity! It is like the precious ointment upon the head that ran down upon the beard, even Aaron's beard, that went down to the skirts of his garments; as the dew of Hermon, and as the dew that descended upon the mountains of Zion; for there the Lord commanded the blessing, even life forever more." The heart of the Nation pouring itself out in sympathy and prayer for the great sorrow of our President and his family typifies the higher, nobler in our being; the horrors of war enacted in scenes of carnage illustrates how easy it is to forget Thee and the nobler within us. Hasten the day, we beseech Thee, when all men can unite from their heart of hearts and say, "Our Father which art in heaven, hallowed be Thy name, Thy kingdom come, Thy will be done in earth as it is in heaven." Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of Saturday, August 8, 1914, was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Carr, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed bill of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 1693. An act to provide for the purchase of a site and the erection of a public building thereon at Claremont, in the State of New Hampshire.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed with amendments the bill (H. R. 1657) providing for second homestead and desert-land service, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested.

The message also announced that the President had, on August 8, 1914, approved and signed the following bill:

S. 23. An act for the relief of Clara Dougherty, Ernest Kubel, and Josephine Taylor, owners of lot No. 13, and of Mary Meder, owner of the south 17.10 feet front by the full depth thereof of lot No. 14, all of said property in square No. 724, in Washington, D. C., with regard to assessment and payment for damages on account of change of grade due to the construction of Union Station, in said District.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

The SPEAKER announced his signature to enrolled bill of the following title:

S. 5313. An act to regulate the taking or catching of sponges in the waters of the Gulf of Mexico and the Straits of Florida outside of State jurisdiction; the landing, delivering, curing, selling, or possession of the same; providing means of enforcement of the same; and for other purposes.

ENROLLED JOINT RESOLUTION PRESENTED TO THE PRESIDENT FOR HIS APPROVAL.

Mr. ASHBROOK, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that this day they had presented to the President of the United States for his approval the following House joint resolution:

H. J. Res. 288. Joint resolution to amend an act entitled "An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent children of soldiers and sailors of said war," approved May 2, 1914.

SENATE BILL REFERRED.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, Senate bill of the following title was taken from the Speaker's table and referred to its appropriate committee, as indicated below:

S. 1693. An act to provide for the purchase of a site and the erection of a public building thereon at Claremont, in the State of New Hampshire; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

CLAIMS ARISING UNDER THE NAVY DEPARTMENT.

Mr. POU. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 14685) to satisfy certain claims against the Government arising under the Navy Department, with a Senate amendment thereto, and to concur in the Senate amendment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina asks unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 14685) in reference to claims arising under the Navy Department, with a Senate amendment thereto, and concur in the Senate amendment. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object.

Mr. POU. Mr. Speaker, I would like to say to the gentleman from Illinois that the Senate added just one amendment, and I desire to have that concurred in.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I would like to see the amendment in print before I agree to that. Let the bill remain on the Speaker's table and have it printed with the Senate amendment.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the bill remaining on the Speaker's table and having the bill printed with the Senate amendment?

There was no objection.

FREDERICK J. ERNST.

Mr. POU. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 4405) for the relief of Frederick J. Ernst, with a Senate amendment thereto, disagree to the Senate amendment, and ask for a conference.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina asks unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 4405) for the relief of Frederick J. Ernst, with a Senate amendment thereto, disagree to the Senate amendment and ask for a conference. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER appointed the following conferees: Mr. POU, Mr. MOTT, and Mr. STEPHENS of Mississippi.

LOGAN DAY.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD an address delivered by my colleague [Mr. HILL] at Murphysboro, Ill., on Logan Day.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD an address delivered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HILL] at Murphysboro, Ill., on Logan Day. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

POSTAL AND CIVIL-SERVICE LAWS.

The SPEAKER. The unfinished business is the bill (H. R. 17042) to amend the postal and civil-service laws, and for other purposes, and the vote will be first taken on the Cullop amendment.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 81, nays 162, answered "present" 6, not voting 183, as follows:

On this vote:

Mr. HARRISON (for the Cullop amendment) with Mr. DOREMUS (against the Cullop amendment).

Mr. GUERNSEY. Mr. Speaker, I find that I am paired with my colleague, Mr. MCGILLICUDDY. I answered "no" and would like to withdraw my vote and answer "present."

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Mr. Speaker, did the gentleman from Texas, Mr. STEPHENS, vote?

The SPEAKER. He did not; he is not here.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. In that case I desire to withdraw my vote. I voted "no," but I wish to be recorded as "present."

Mr. SHERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I desire to be recorded as present.

The SPEAKER. Was the gentleman in the Hall of the House when his name should have been called?

Mr. SHERWOOD. I was not in the Hall when my name was called. I have just come in.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman can not vote.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time.

Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH. Mr. Speaker, I move to recommit the bill with instructions which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan moves to recommit the bill with instructions which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

MR SAMUEL W. SMITH moves to recommit the bill H. R. 17042 to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, with instructions to report the same back forthwith with the following amendment:

Strike out, after the word "General," on page 4, line 5, the following language, to wit:

"And it shall be the duty of the Postmaster General to require all applicants for assistant postmasters in first and second class post offices, including those now in office who were carried into the service by Executive orders heretofore made, to take a competitive civil-service examination within 90 days, or as soon thereafter as practicable after the passage of this act, under the civil-service law, rules, and regulations, and the Postmaster General shall, under such law, rules, and regulations, appoint all assistant postmasters and all laws, rules, and regulations in conflict with this act are hereby repealed."

Mr. LEVY. Mr. Speaker, I desire to offer an amendment.

Mr. MOON. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the motion to recommit.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee moves the previous question on the motion to recommit.

Mr. LEVY. Will the gentleman withhold that motion one moment? I have a motion to strike out the enacting clause.

Mr. MOON. I do not want the enacting clause stricken out.

The SPEAKER. The question is on ordering the previous question.

The question was taken, and the Speaker announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. MURDOCK. Division, Mr. Speaker.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 163, noes 15.

Accordingly the previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion to recommit.

Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH. On that question, Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays.

Mr. LEVY. A parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. LEVY. Can I move to strike out the enacting clause?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman can not, after the previous question is ordered.

Mr. MURDOCK. The gentleman from New York himself voted for the previous question.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 112, nays 131, answered "present" 5, not voting 184, as follows:

So the motion to recommit was rejected.

The Clerk announced the following additional pairs:

Until further notice:

Mr. DOREMUS with Mr. PAIGE of Massachusetts.

Mr. GODWIN of North Carolina with Mr. SLEMP.

Mr. CARLIN with Mr. SMITH of Idaho.

Mr. SMALL with Mr. HAUGEN.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the bill.

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. Speaker, the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kansas demands the yeas and nays. Those in favor of ordering the yeas and nays will rise and stand until counted. [After counting.] Twenty-one gentlemen have risen, not a sufficient number, and the yeas and nays are refused.

The question was taken, and the bill was passed.

On motion of Mr. MOON, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following requests for leave of absence:

Mr. BROUSSARD requests leave of absence for one week, on account of official business.

WASHINGTON, D. C., August 9, 1911.

Hon. CHAMP CLARK,
Speaker House of Representatives.

DEAR SIR: I ask leave of absence for two weeks, on account of sickness in family.

Very truly,

HENRY T. RAINEY.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. DONOVAN. Mr. Speaker, I object to the first one, in reference to Mr. BROUSSARD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the second request? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the bill which was just passed.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. LEVY, Mr. HAMILL, Mr. REILLY of Wisconsin, Mr. WALSH, Mr. SMALL, Mr. SELDOMRIDGE, Mr. CARY, Mr. CURRY, and Mr. J. M. C. SMITH made the same request.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I object.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker, I present the following resolution from the Committee on Rules.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolution.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Was objection made to my request?

The SPEAKER. No; not to the request of the gentleman; the rest were shut out.

Mr. LEVY. How about my request?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York is included in the bunch. The Clerk will report the privileged resolution from the Committee on Rules.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 536 (H. Rept. 1081).

Resolved, That immediately upon the adoption of this resolution the House shall resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration in the order named of the following bills, to wit:

1. H. R. 16673. To provide for the development of water power and the use of public lands in relation thereto, and for other purposes. The first reading of the bill shall be dispensed with, and there shall not be exceeding four hours of general debate, to be equally divided between those who favor and those who oppose the same, one half of such time to be controlled by the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. FERRIS] and the other half by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT]. At the conclusion of such general debate the bill shall be considered in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union and shall be read for amendment under the five-minute rule. After the bill shall have been perfected in the Committee of the Whole the same shall be reported to the House with such recommendations as the committee may make.

2. H. R. 14233. To provide for the leasing of coal lands in the Territory of Alaska, and for other purposes. The first reading of the bill shall be dispensed with, and there shall be not exceeding six hours of general debate on the bill, to be equally divided between those who favor and those who oppose the same, one half of such time to be controlled by the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. FERRIS] and the other half by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT]. At the conclusion of such general debate the bill shall be read for amendment under the five-minute rule. After the bill shall have been perfected in the Committee of the Whole the same shall be reported to the House with such recommendations as the committee may make.

3. H. R. 16136. To authorize exploration for and disposition of coal, oil, gas, potassium, or sodium. The first reading of the bill shall be dispensed with, and there shall not be exceeding four hours of general debate, to be equally divided between those who favor and those who oppose the same, one half of such time to be controlled by the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. FERRIS] and the other half by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT]. At the conclusion of such general debate the bill shall be considered in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union and shall be read for amendment under the five-minute rule. After the bill shall have been perfected in the Committee of the Whole the same shall be reported to the House with such recommendations as the committee may make.

4. H. R. 12741. To provide for and encourage the prospecting, mining, and treatment of radium-bearing ores in lands belonging to the United States, for the purpose of securing an adequate supply of radium for Government and other hospitals in the United States, and for other purposes. The first reading of the bill shall be dispensed with, and there shall not be exceeding four hours of general debate, to be equally divided between those who favor and those who oppose the same, one half of such time to be controlled by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOSTER] and the other half by the gentleman from Utah [Mr. HOWELL]. At the conclusion of such general debate the bill shall be considered for amendment under the five-minute rule. After the bill shall have been perfected in the Committee of the Whole the same shall be reported to the House with such recommendations as the committee may make.

5. S. 4628. Extending the period of payment under reclamation projects, and for other purposes. The first reading of the bill shall be dispensed with, and there shall be not exceeding two hours of general debate—to be divided equally between those who favor and those who oppose the bill, one half of such time to be controlled by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SMITH] and the other half by the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. KINKAID]. At the conclusion of such general debate the bill shall be considered in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union and shall be read for amendment under the five-minute rule. After the bill shall have been perfected in the Committee of the Whole the same shall be reported to the House with such recommendation as the committee may make.

At the conclusion of the consideration of each bill above specified in the Committee of the Whole, the committee shall rise and report the same to the House, whereupon the previous question shall be considered as ordered upon each bill and amendments thereto to final passage, without intervening motion, except one motion to recommit on each of said bills.

The order of business provided by this resolution shall be the continuing order of business of the House until concluded, except that it shall not interfere with Calendar Wednesday, unanimous-consent, or District days, and business in order on Fridays, nor with the consideration of appropriation bills, nor with the consideration of conference reports on bills, nor the sending of bills to conference. All debate shall be confined to the subject matter of the bill then under consideration, and all Members speaking upon any of said bills shall have the right to revise and extend their remarks in the RECORD, and all Members shall have the right to print remarks on any of said bills during not exceeding five legislative days.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker, I would like to inquire of the gentleman from Kansas if he desires any time.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Yes; we will want some time on this side for the consideration of the rule.

Mr. FOSTER. How much time does the gentleman want?

Mr. CAMPBELL. I note there has been some change made in the rule. For instance, one of the bills mentioned is not recorded as having been considered by the committee. That is H. R. 16136.

Mr. FOSTER. That is the bill for the leasing on lands for minerals?

Mr. MANN. The phosphate bill.

Mr. FOSTER. Coal and phosphate lands. What does the gentleman say about it?

Mr. CAMPBELL. I say that bill in the original rule——

Mr. FOSTER. The original—let me explain this to the gentleman from Kansas, that in writing this rule, which I did myself, I made a mistake, as the gentleman will recall, at the meeting of the Committee on Rules. Instead of getting the bill that was intended to put in there—it was a bill it was not supposed that we were getting, and that bill provided for the codification and revising the mineral laws of the United States and it was not intended so, and when we met this resolution was so changed to conform with what was intended. The gentleman will recall it has been quite a while since this rule was reported.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I do not recall that instance now.

Mr. FOSTER. I will say to the gentleman, that was a mistake of my own, and when it was found out it was corrected by writing this new rule, in which we included the bill which was intended at that time.

Mr. MANN. Was that action taken by the Committee on Rules or by my colleague?

Mr. FOSTER. No; by the Committee on Rules. No; I would not presume to take liberties of that kind.

Mr. MANN. Has my colleague taken any liberties with this rule?

Mr. FOSTER. Not without the consent of the Committee on Rules.

Mr. MANN. As ordered reported from the Committee on Rules?

Mr. FOSTER. I will state to the gentleman frankly that there was a provision here that the House should take a recess at 5 o'clock or 5.30 until 8 o'clock, and that general debate should extend not later than 11 o'clock, but, in the opinion of the Committee on Rules, all we were able to see, including the gentleman from Kansas and the gentleman from Pennsylvania, it was thought better that that part should be marked off the resolution, and the report is made accordingly. There was no objection by anyone.

Mr. MANN. May I ask my colleague a question in reference to the provisions of this rule?

Mr. FOSTER. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. Would it be convenient to give the numbers of the bills and the order in which they are to be considered now?

Mr. FOSTER. The rule——

Mr. MANN. Well, I know the rule does——

Mr. FOSTER. I think I can.

Mr. MANN. As the rule never has been printed it was not possible to follow all of this. It was not possible to follow the numbers as the Clerk was reading.

Mr. FOSTER. I will state to the gentleman this, that the first bill to be considered is the bill to provide for the development of water power and the use of public lands in relation thereto. That is H. R. 16673. The next bill to be considered is H. R. 14233, a bill to provide for the leasing of coal lands in the Territory of Alaska, and for other purposes; and the third is the bill (H. R. 16136) to authorize exploration for and disposition of coal, phosphate, oil, gas, potassium, or sodium. The next is the bill (H. R. 12741) to provide for and encourage the prospecting, mining, and treatment of radium-bearing ores in lands belonging to the United States, and so forth. And the fifth bill, which was in the rule, and which I expect to move to strike out, was the bill which was passed here a short time ago, providing for the extension of payments on irrigation projects.

Mr. MANN. Then the rule as first reported does not contain the Senate bill 4373, which was in the original resolution?

Mr. FOSTER. No, sir; it does not, I will state to my colleague. That was a mistake in the resolution as introduced.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. FOSTER. I will.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I would like to ask the gentleman whether or not the Committee on Rules considered including in this rule the bill that provides for the enlarged homestead, the 640-acre grazing homestead bill, a bill of considerable importance to the West and the country generally, and unanimously reported from the Committee on the Public Lands?

Mr. FOSTER. I do not remember that we did.

Mr. MURDOCK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FOSTER. I will.

Mr. MURDOCK. Some time in June the newspapers carried the story that the Committee on Rules would have a meeting on July 1 to consider the Hobson amendment in regard to prohibition and suffrage. Then along about July 1 it was announced, unofficially, I think, that the Committee on Rules had postponed that meeting until August 1. Now, has the Committee on Rules had any meeting since?

Mr. FOSTER. They have not.

Mr. MURDOCK. There has been no meeting of the Committee on Rules in the last month?

Mr. FOSTER. Not to my knowledge.

Mr. MURDOCK. Can the gentleman say whether there is anything contemplated in that line?

Mr. FOSTER. I can not say.

Mr. MURDOCK. I want to say that the excuse given for the postponement to July 1 was that the gentleman from Texas [Mr. HENRY] was not here. He is back now.

Mr. FOSTER. I realize that.

Mr. WEBB. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. FOSTER. I yield to the gentleman from North Carolina.

Mr. WEBB. Last unanimous-consent day, yesterday a week ago, was set aside on account of emergency measures, and there are a number of important bills on the Unanimous Consent Calendar. An effort was made by the gentleman from Illinois to get unanimous consent to take up the Unanimous Consent Calendar after the passage of this Post Office bill which we have just passed to-day. Now, I want to ask the gentleman if there will be any disposition on the part of those who are supporting these four or five bills mentioned in the rule to agree to let us have next Monday and Tuesday, if necessary, to take up unanimous-consent measures?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. If the gentleman will allow me, I will state that I would object to at this time setting apart any day in the future for consideration of bills on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent. When the rule is adopted I will be glad to ask unanimous consent for consideration of the Unanimous Consent Calendar, if the gentleman will yield for that purpose. And when Tuesday comes, if there is no emergency measure before the House, I would be glad to do it then; but I do not think it would be wise to set apart a day in advance.

Mr. WEBB. I did not care to have any hard-and-fast agreement now; but I wanted to let the House know there are a good many bills that ought to be considered.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I think the Unanimous Consent Calendar serves more Members than any other calendar; and I think it is perfectly justifiable that an opportunity for its consideration should be given.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Will that include any suspensions, where we can get consideration even though one man may object?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I would not have objection to including suspensions. I do not know whether the House will want to do that or not.

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. Will the gentleman from Illinois please tell how many bills are included in this rule?

Mr. FOSTER. There are four bills.

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. And what do they cover?

Mr. FOSTER. They cover matters pertaining to the leasing of coal lands in Alaska and in the Western States, and water power, and the mining of radium-bearing ores——

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. All conservation bills?

Mr. FOSTER. All conservation bills.

Mr. ROGERS. I did not understand as the rule was being read whether it was the purpose to confine general debate to the bills themselves or whether it might take a wide range?

Mr. FOSTER. The general debate is to be confined to the bills themselves.

Mr. ROGERS. In all cases?

Mr. FOSTER. In all cases.

Mr. COLLIER. How much general debate will there be altogether on those four bills?

Mr. FOSTER. I think about 18 hours altogether.

Mr. BRYAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FOSTER. Yes.

Mr. BRYAN. I would like to ask the gentleman if there is any intention to include in this rule or any other rule the consideration of the seamen's bill, S. 132, which was reported over here from the Senate about a year ago or something over a year ago?

Mr. FOSTER. I will say to the gentleman frankly it was not so intended in this rule. I could not answer for the future. I understand, in regard to the seamen's bill, that they have been endeavoring as best they could—those who have it in charge—to get a bill that will be satisfactory to all parties. I hope that they may be able to get to it.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman allow me?

Mr. FOSTER. Yes.

Mr. ALEXANDER. If the gentleman from Washington [Mr. BRYAN] would get in touch with the work of his committee he would know that the committee has now about come to an agreement among all the parties interested on a common ground, and I already had the promise of the Speaker to recognize me to move to suspend the rules, following the consideration of the Unanimous Consent Calendar, and pass this bill.

Mr. BRYAN. I am acquainted with the work of the committee and know that we are probably about to make an agreement. I noticed that the gentleman announced the other day, at the last meeting of the committee, that he was about to make an agreement. Of course, I did not know that the Speaker consented to recognize anybody, and I was trying to find out what the plans are.

Mr. ALEXANDER. The Speaker has consented to recognize me. If we have the help of the gentleman from Washington and those having a peculiar interest in the legislation I think we shall have no trouble in passing the bill.

Mr. BRYAN. I have a peculiar interest in the bill, and my interest in the seamen's end of the proposition is not the least of my interest in the bill.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Mr. Speaker, I would like to have about 15 minutes on the discussion of the rule.

Mr. FOSTER. How much of the hour is remaining, Mr. Speaker? May I inquire how much of the hour has been consumed?

The SPEAKER. Thirty-five minutes.

Mr. FOSTER. Has 35 minutes been consumed?

The SPEAKER. Thirty-five minutes have been consumed, and 25 minutes are left.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I would like to have 15 minutes on the rule.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Before the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOSTER] yields time I will ask the gentleman if he will not permit an amendment of the rule providing that this rule shall not interfere with the consideration of revenue bills or bills affecting the bonded indebtedness of the United States if it should be necessary to bring in bills of that kind?

Mr. FOSTER. I will state to the gentleman from Alabama that I had intended to offer an amendment to the rule providing, after the words "appropriation bills," an amendment to the effect that it should not interfere with the consideration of revenue bills. I want to strike out also that part of the rule referring to the consideration of the Senate bill that has already been agreed to. Can I offer these amendments, Mr. Speaker, before I yield time for debate? If so, Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment before this debate begins now.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOSTER] offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

After the words "appropriation bills," add the following: "or bills relating to the revenue and the bonded debt of the United States."

Mr. FOSTER. Does the gentleman want to vote on this now?

Mr. CAMPBELL. I think it should come later.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a vote.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I suggest that the amendment be acted upon at the conclusion of the debate on the rule.

Mr. FOSTER. Then there is another amendment, providing for the consideration of Senate bill 4628. I would like to ask unanimous consent, if it is in order, that that be stricken out.

Mr. CAMPBELL. That is the bill that has already been considered by the House?

Mr. FOSTER. Yes; that is the bill that has already been considered by the House.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I have no objection to that being taken out of the rule.

Mr. FOSTER. Then, Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the portion of the rule relating to Senate bill 4628 be stricken out.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOSTER] asks unanimous consent that the portion of the rule relating to Senate bill 4628 be stricken out of the rule. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MANN. The rule provides that the time on one side on the three bills coming from the Committee on the Public Lands shall be controlled by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT]. Mr. LENROOT is at present detained from the House on account of the illness of his daughter. Now, if the rule should be adopted without change, would it be proper for the Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House in each case to recognize the next minority man on the committee, who would be Mr. FRENCH, of Idaho?

The SPEAKER. Undoubtedly the Chair will recognize the second man on the minority side of the committee.

Mr. MANN. With that statement of the Chair, I think that is sufficient.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado rose.

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Colorado rise?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. I would like to ask a question of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOSTER]. Both of the gentlemen designated by the rule to have charge of the debate are in favor of the bills. I want to ask the gentleman whether or not those who are opposed to the bills will be given opportunity to present their objections?

Mr. FOSTER. I beg to state, Mr. Speaker, that the rule provides that the time shall be under the control of those gentlemen, but equally divided between those opposing and those in favor of the bill; so I judge that the men in control will be fair in that respect. How much time remains, Mr. Speaker?

The SPEAKER. You have half an hour left.

Mr. CAMPBELL. We want 20 minutes on this side.

Mr. FOSTER. Suppose we divide up and give you 15 minutes?

Mr. CAMPBELL. Oh, we are adopting a rule here now that relates to four very important matters. You can get your time extended, if necessary.

Mr. FOSTER. We would have only 10 minutes left. I yield to the gentleman 15 minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL] is recognized for 15 minutes.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask that at the end of the time the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the resolution.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that at the end of the hour the previous question be considered as ordered.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I shall object to that.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kansas objects. The gentleman is recognized for 15 minutes.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Mr. Speaker, this rule undoubtedly challenges the attention of the House to the fact that we are again doing business by special rule. Most of the important legislation of this Congress has been by special rule. It was said, when we were "reforming" the rules of the House a few years ago, that automatically from that time on the business of the House would come up and be transacted, and no man would have to take his hat in his hand and bow on the doormat of the Speaker or of any committee of the House. Evidently the conditions have only been changed, so that it is now necessary to go to the Committee on Rules to secure time or opportunity for considering the business of the House.

Why this rule should be called up at this time it is difficult to understand. There may have been some reason for it at the time it was considered by the Committee on Rules, some two months ago, but to-day the call of the calendar would enable the House to consider every one of these bills as reached on the calendar. The rule itself provides that the general debate shall be upon the bills themselves. In view of the fact that Congress will probably remain in session for some weeks yet, a more liberal rule, enabling Members on this side to call attention to the delinquencies on the part of the majority, would have served a good purpose. But we have a special rule which provides for the consideration of legislation that should be considered on the call of the calendar. It shows Democratic incompetency.

I now yield five minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] and reserve the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, my colleague [Mr. FOSTER] introduced on June 9, 1914, House resolution 536, and has now reported that resolution from the Committee on Rules with a substitute, changing its provisions. The Committee on Rules acted on this resolution a month or two months ago. There has been no opportunity for anyone in the House to know what the Committee on Rules was going to report. They delay their report until the very last moment, and then bring a report before the House and ask consideration for it at once, and provide in the rule that immediately after the adoption of the rule the House shall proceed to the consideration of the bills.

One of the bills named in the substitute rule was not named in the original resolution. The order in which the bills are to be considered is changed in the substitute from the order in the original resolution. No one in the House, outside of the holy and mighty Committee on Rules, could know what was coming up this afternoon after this rule was adopted. That is Democratic efficiency and legislation. I hold in my hand a copy of the calendars of the House. It takes 11 pages to print the titles of the bills which are on the calendar of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union. There are six pages of bills on the House Calendar and six pages on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent, not to mention those on the Private Calendar. One might come here and study the rules and practice of the House from the beginning of the Government until to-day, and know all about the rules providing for the consideration of business. He would find that those rules provide for a calendar for the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, a House Calendar, a Private Calendar, a Calendar for Unanimous Consent. The rules also provide for a call of committees, for Calendar Wednesday, for a day to be devoted to the Private Calendar, and days to be devoted to the Calendar for Unanimous Consent. Then our Democratic majority dump in here at the very last moment, without the knowledge of anyone outside of the Committee on Rules, an omnibus rule for the consideration of bills in violation of the ordinary rules of the House. I dare say that no one in the House, outside of the Committee on the Public Lands, has read the bill that is first to come up. We had a dam bill here the other day which was fully considered, numerously amended, entirely changed in its provisions after good consideration; but it is proposed now immediately to bring into the House for consideration another dam bill from the Committee on the Public Lands, a bill that Members of the House have not considered, and that no one could tell was coming up this afternoon unless he was in the confidence of the Committee on Rules. That is the method we now have.

The old method was far preferable. Men could know something about the bills that might be considered; but now if you can manage to get a line on the Committee on Rules, or if you can get to be a member of the Committee on Rules, like my colleague from Illinois [Mr. FOSTER] who reports this rule, and if you can get a bill reported from your committee, you can get it considered in this way. I appreciate the modesty of my colleague. In his first rule which he introduced he proposed to take a bill off the Speaker's table—I do not know whether it was on the Speaker's table or not, but I think not—which never had been printed in the form in which it was proposed to be considered. He proposed to have the House take up that bill and consider it without even having the printed bill before any Member of the House. Well, the other members of the Committee on Rules thought that was going too strong, so they compromised with my colleague by letting him put one other bill from his committee into the rule.

I give fair warning to the House that if we are going to be run by the Committee on Rules, without any notice of what shall come up, without any attention being paid to the rules of the House, you must have quorums here to pass the bills. [Applause on the Republican side.] There are many Members in this House interested in bills on the calendars. They can not get bills considered which are on the Union Calendar, which are on the House Calendar, which are on the Unanimous Consent Calendar; but the Committee on Rules, without any notice, can bring any matter before the House. It is the most arbitrary, conscienceless proceeding that I have ever witnessed in this House, in my service in the House, and I am surprised that my colleague, who is very fair in the House, should have been caught reporting this rule, a rule that the chairman of the Committee on Rules found was so strong that he would not report it, that the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT] found so radical that he would not report it, and had to make my poor colleague [Mr. FOSTER] report it, because he had one of the bills named in the rule.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker, I am somewhat surprised at my colleague. It has been generally supposed in this House that he was the one Member among the 435 Members of the House who knew something about everything that goes on here. These bills have been on the calendar for a long time, and my colleague just found it out this morning.

Mr. MANN. Oh, I beg the gentleman's pardon. I have been over the bills. The gentleman need not get worried about that.

Mr. FOSTER. He says now that not one Member of the House has read these bills or knows anything about them except the members of the Committee on the Public Lands. I saw my colleague sit here for four long years and vote for every rule that came into the House from the Committee on Rules when his party was in power, and I never heard him raise his voice, no difference how strong those rules were. But now when this rule is liberal, permitting all the amendments that are possible under the five-minute rule, there is complaint. How will you ever satisfy some Members?

Has he become the leader of the Progressives of the House of Representatives on the question of rules and the liberality of the rules? Why, Mr. Speaker, there was a time in this House when there were some Progressives who took an active part when the Republicans were in the majority, but I never before heard my colleague accused of being so progressive that he could not stand a liberal rule like this. He is the one Member in all this House whom I would not have expected to be taken by surprise. There may be other Members who do not watch legislation as carefully as he does, and they might be taken by surprise; but now he gets up on this floor and pretends to be surprised that these important bills are coming up and feeling so bad for all the other Members of the House who did not know anything about them. It is really pitiful to hear him wail this morning on the question of the gag rule that is contained here, when it allows all possible debate. Why, they used to bring in a rule on that side of the House giving us 20 minutes' debate, or possibly none at all, and we were compelled to vote on a proposition without any amendment. I am very fond of my colleague, and I know he does good service in this House at times. I know that when he stops to reflect and consider about what is taking place here now, he will probably feel that that speech of his was made in a Pickwickian sense, and he will probably apologize to the House for making such a speech. [Laughter.]

Mr. CAMPBELL. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] two minutes in which to make his apology.

Mr. MANN. The trouble with my colleague [Mr. FOSTER] on the other side of the House is that he deals in imagination. There have been more rules brought in to this Congress from the Committee on Rules, I think, than there were during the 14 years of my service in this House previous to the Sixty-second Congress; and there have been more bills considered under special rules, I think, in this Congress than during the 14 years of my service prior to a Democratic House. The Committee on Rules in the old days very seldom interfered with the procedure under the regular rules of the House. It was not necessary. It is not necessary now. There are ways of doing business under the ordinary rules of the House, and we never appealed to the Committee on Rules for permission to transact the business of the House which the ordinary rules ought to provide for and do provide for, with any sort of efficient management on the side of the House that has the majority. I did not always vote for the rules, even in the old days, but they very seldom provided for the order of business in the consideration of bills.

But whenever anything comes up here now, when gentlemen on the other side of the House do something that is violative of all principles and justice and parliamentary law, they say, "We are following what the Republicans did in the old days." If that were true, it would be no excuse; but the trouble is that it is not true. The Republicans never had such vicious methods as the Committee on Rules has now adopted. The Committee on Rules meets some morning at a quarter to 12 o'clock and authorizes the reporting out of a rule covering half a dozen or more bills, and then the committee disbands and says that it can not be brought together, because they are afraid—afraid of taking up something. Then my colleague reports a rule and changes it without authority from the Committee on Rules. The rule reported here this morning is not the rule that was ordered reported by the Committee on Rules, and they have not had any meeting since.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. Yes.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker, I was perfectly frank in stating that to the gentleman, and the gentleman might leave the impression that I have been dishonest with the House and had deceived it, and I have not done that, and the gentleman knows it.

Mr. MANN. I know that my colleague reported a rule, not as the Committee on Rules ordered it reported, changed it without authority, and why? I am not blaming him for striking out a bad provision in the rule, but this was done because the Committee on Rules is afraid to have a meeting. That is the reason.

Mr. FOSTER. I will state to the gentleman that it has been a long time since I noticed the rule, and after reading it this morning I went to gentlemen on that side of the House and consulted them about it.

Mr. MANN. Oh, yes; and that would have been authority, I suppose, to make a motion. The gentleman had no authority from the Committee on Rules.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker, I could not rest under the charge that I have changed a rule after it has been reported from the committee without the consent of the members, and I brand as false any statement of that kind—that I have done it without the authority of the Committee on Rules. I have been honest and fair, and I will not stand under the imputation that I have changed a rule after it has been reported by the Committee on Rules without authority from that committee. I am surprised that my colleague should state that. I frankly stated the situation to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL] and the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLY] before the House met; went and talked to them about it, and as many members as I could find on this side, and they all willingly agreed to it. There was not an objection. That is all there is to it.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FOSTER. Yes.

Mr. MANN. My statement was made upon the strength of the statement of my colleague, who himself stated what I said.

Mr. FOSTER. The gentleman asked me and I supposed that he had received the information from the gentlemen on that side of the House, when he asked about this change in the rule, and I frankly stated what had taken place. I do not know whether he did it or not, but that was my impression at the time, but I want to say to the gentleman from Illinois that I endeavor to stand as honorably, and I believe that I am as honorable, as he with reference to matters coming before the House.

Mr. NORTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FOSTER. No; not now.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman declines to yield.

Mr. FOSTER Mr. Speaker, I will ask the gentleman from Kansas to use some of his time.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Is it the intention of the gentleman from Illinois to close in one speech?

Mr. FOSTER. Yes.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Then, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL].

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, this House, under the management of our friends on the other side, having dawdled along and wasted its time for months, the Committee on Rules about two months ago concluded that if certain important measures were to be considered it would perhaps be necessary to have them considered by a special rule, it having been demonstrated that under the management of our friends on the other side that is about the only way in which legislation can be considered in this House. The committee met, I think, about two months ago to-day. They had under consideration what was known as the conservation bills, first and foremost among which is a bill for the conservation of the area in the West which may be cultivated and on which homes may be established. The committee as the result of its meeting made a report. It has never been entirely clear to any of us just what that report proposed, because it has not been printed, though two months have elapsed, but in any event the most important of all of the conservation bills, the bill which would give an opportunity for new homes in the West, which would give an opportunity for addition to the cultivated area of the country, is overlooked and forgotten. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOSTER] says that, as he recalls it, it was not even considered by the committee. It certainly was in the minds of the members of the committee, because their attention had been called to it.

There was also before the committee at that time—or there had been called to the attention of the committee—two very important propositions to give the people of this country an opportunity, if they saw fit, to amend the Constitution of the United States—one in the matter of the prohibition of the manufacture and sale of liquor and one preventing any State from in any way discriminating against women in the granting of the franchise. The committee was urged to pass on those important matters, but did not see fit to do so, although my understanding is that a number of the members of the committee were ready and willing and anxious to have those two matters reported and brought out. I think it was two months ago yesterday that the committee made this report, the exact character of which I, for one, have been in ignorance of up to a few moments ago, when the rule was read—not the original rule reported from the committee, as the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] has stated, but quite a different rule—a rule accompanied by a number of important amendments offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOSTER], who offered the rule.

Naturally it would occur to us, if it were necessary to amend this rule, passed two months ago, for the adoption of which at that time there was no doubt good reason, if it were necessary to so radically amend this rule, why has the Committee on Rules not met and amended it? Why, the Committee on Rules has not desired to meet. The Committee on Rules has been dodging those who are anxious to have a constitutional amendment relating to the liquor traffic presented to us for consideration. Those good women who are anxious to have the people of the country given an opportunity to pass on the question of franchise have been importuning the committee at all times. We were told at the time of this meeting, on June 10, that there would be another meeting on August 1. The 1st of August came. This rule needed amendment. There were other matters that needed consideration by the Committee on Rules, but no meeting of the Committee on Rules was held then and no meeting has been held up to this time, although the Progressive and the Republican member on that committee have been ready at all times to meet with that committee and report out the legislation that the people demand shall be considered. The majority of the Committee on Rules has therefore been in this position before the House. It launches upon us at any time, without previous notice, an amended rule with regard to the consideration of four or five very important matters and refuses to meet for the purpose of considering matters that the people of the country are anxious to have passed upon. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. FOSTER. How much time have I remaining?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has nine minutes left.

Mr. FOSTER. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT].

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, there is always something amusing to me in the discussion that a special rule brought into the House of Representatives evokes. Ever since I have been a Member of the House, beginning in the Fifty-ninth Congress, the bringing in of a special rule from the Committee on Rules has been made the occasion of political discussion, and intelligent, sensible men who exercise prudence and good judgment about everything else seem absolutely to lose their heads when the matter of a special rule brought in as authorized under the general rules of the House is presented for consideration and adoption if a majority of the House wishes to adopt it. Now, that has not been confined to one side of the Chamber. I listened with a good deal of interest to the speech of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN]—I always listen to the gentleman from Illinois with great interest. The gentleman makes a good speech, but I have heard a great many much better speeches made on this side of the House along the same lines a few years ago than was made by the gentleman from Illinois a few moments ago. Now, what is this proposition? In the first place, the legislation that is provided to be considered is nonpartisan in character. The three platforms, if I remember correctly, declare for legislation for the conservation of the natural resources of the country. We are enabling you, as well as ourselves, if we adopt this rule, to carry out the platform pledges made to the people. I do not understand that there is any party division upon the bills which the rule provides shall be brought before the House, but if there were a political division upon the bills, or a division in any respect, then this rule does not prevent amendment to every paragraph of them. Gentlemen say that they did not so frequently, when the Republican Party was in control of the House, bring in special rules. I do not remember whether it was with as much frequency as has been the case since the Democrats have been in control, but this I do remember, that when the Committee on Rules of a Republican House brought in a rule it was always one to remember. It never permitted amendments. I seldom saw in the years when the Republicans were in control of this House a time when they brought in a special rule that permitted an amendment to even be offered in the House. This does nothing of the kind. The last bill which we considered under a rule was not in its essential elements a political proposition, though there was a phase of it which was made political, but every opportunity was given to amend that bill. It has been the custom since the Democrats have been in control of the House in bringing in special rules to permit every amendment that might be offered under the general rules of the House.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. FOSTER. I yield the gentleman two minutes more.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. And why should this be complained of? The gentleman says the Committee on Rules presents a program of legislation when that legislation might be brought here under the general rules of the House upon the call of committees. Perhaps so. This rule was agreed to, as has been stated, two months ago. No one was taken by surprise by this rule. Everyone, I think, understood that this rule had been agreed to and that it would be presented when the opportunity was afforded; but it does not lie in the mouth of the gentleman from Illinois, the leader of the minority, to complain of the rule in fixing the order of business upon these bills which are nonpartisan in character because just a few weeks ago the gentleman permitted, by unanimous consent, without objection being made, the dam bill to be fixed as the order of business, when it could have come up under the call of committees. Mr. Speaker, this rule is presented in the interest of orderly procedure, to the end that the committees of this House may have an opportunity to respond to the demand of the people of this country—a demand which has been insistent and crying for many years, a response to which was pledged in every party platform in the campaign of 1912. This rule simply affords an opportunity to carry out that pledge and respond to that demand. [Applause.]

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the amendments and rule to final passage.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois moves the previous question on the rule and amendments to final passage.

The question was taken; and the Speaker announced the noes seemed to have it.

On a division (demanded by Mr. FOSTER), there were—ayes 44, noes 38.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. Evidently there is no quorum present. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify absentees, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 166, nays 72, answered "present" 3, not voting 191, as follows:

So the previous question was ordered.

The Clerk announced the following additional pairs:

Until further notice:

Mr. CONNOLLY of Iowa with Mr. CRAMTON.

Mr. HULL with Mr. NELSON.

Mr. MCCOY with Mr. SMITH of Minnesota.

Mr. PALMER with Mr. PROUTY.

Mr. ROTHERMEL with Mr. RUPLEY.

Mr. CASEY with Mr. MCGUIRE of Oklahoma.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

The SPEAKER. A quorum is present. The Doorkeeper will open the doors. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the resolution.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution as amended.

The resolution as amended was agreed to.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, did the Speaker announce that the rule had been agreed to?

The SPEAKER. Yes.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that for the remainder of this afternoon the Unanimous Consent Calendar may be in order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] asks unanimous consent that for the remainder of the afternoon the Unanimous Consent Calendar shall be in order. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I think that, in all courtesy and propriety, the House ought to adjourn on account of the burial of the wife of the President, and I shall not consent to anything that I can object to.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman has brought this question on the floor of the House—a thing which I did not intend to do. But I will state to the gentleman from Illinois that, so far as I am concerned and so far as this House is concerned, no man in the United States, or set of men, is more anxious to show regret at the death of the wife of the President, or more desirous of doing what is proper under the circumstances. But I wish to say to the House that one of the secretaries to the President on last Saturday stated to me over the telephone that the President of the United States did not desire that the funeral services in his own family should interfere with the business of either of the Houses of Congress, and preferred that the Houses remain in session. Under those circumstances I think it is proper and the right thing to do—for the House to continue in session.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I do.

Mr. MANN. Does not the gentleman think that it would be proper for the House and for the Members of the House, out of regard for their own feelings on the occasion, to express their sentiments without relying upon or asking the President to intimate whether he thinks the House should join with him in mourning or to express his opinion? It is for the House to determine.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I do not think the gentleman from Illinois should have brought this question on the floor at all. The membership of this House has expressed its feeling in this matter. We adjourned the other day out of respect for the Nation's loss, and we adjourned over yesterday, the day of the funeral. The President of the United States has his views in reference to his own family matters, and I desire to respect them.

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Unanimous Consent Calendar may be in order for the balance of the afternoon.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] asks unanimous consent that the Unanimous Consent Calendar shall be in order for the remainder of the afternoon. Is there objection?

Mr. J. I. NOLAN. Mr. Speaker, I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California objects.

SPEAKER PRO TEMPORE FOR TO-MORROW.

The SPEAKER. The Chair announces that the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. ADAMSON] will preside as Speaker pro tempore to-morrow.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. CLARK of Florida, indefinitely, on account of illness in his family.

To Mr. PALMER, for one week, on account of sickness.

WATER POWER ON THE PUBLIC DOMAIN.

The SPEAKER. The House automatically resolves itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union under the rule just adopted, with the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] in the chair.

Thereupon the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 16673, with Mr. FITZGERALD in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 16673, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read the title of the bill, as follows:

A bill (H. R. 16673) to provide for the development of water power and the use of public lands in relation thereto, and for other purposes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. FERRIS] is recognized for two hours.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, section 1 of the pending bill authorizes the Secretary of the Interior to lease the reserved and unreserved Government lands of the United States, national parks excepted, for a term of not exceeding 50 years for the purpose of water-power development.

(a) The provision on page 2, from line 9 to 15, inclusive, requires the chief officer of the department who has jurisdiction over any of the reserve lands who finds that such lease for water-power and hydroelectric development will not injure or destroy or be inconsistent with the purposes for which the reservation was created. This is thought to be necessary to avoid conflict.

(b) The second provision of section 1, occurring on page 2 and within lines 16 to 20, inclusive, authorizes the Secretary of the Interior to grant preference to applications for lease by States, counties, and municipalities when the applications are made for municipal uses and purposes. This is thought to be justice, for where a State, county, or municipality elects to develop hydroelectric power for their own use it is thought to be the highest use and in the interest of the public that they do not have to compete with some selfish corporation which might be able to marshal securities and become a more apt bidder therefor.

(c) The further provision in section 11, page 2, beginning in line 20 and including the remainder of the section, authorizes the Secretary of the Interior to issue temporary permits which authorize the occupation of the land for water-power development for a period not exceeding one year to enable the applicant to secure necessary engineering data, determine the feasibility of the project, and to finance the same; further, authorizing the extension of the one-year period when, in the discretion of the Secretary, unusual weather conditions or other conditions beyond the control of the applicant occur and make the same advisable. The advisability of this is apparent, due to the fact that much of this development has to be carried on on borrowed money. It requires time and engineering investigation to develop whether or not a project is feasible, whether or not the product can be disposed of, whether or not the money can be secured to develop it, whether or not water rights are in conflict, and, if so, time is required to purchase them. It is thought that such a provision and such authority vested in the Secretary is in the public interest and will bring about development of water-power resources; will not unduly tie up the property and cold storage it, so to speak, but will allow honest investors an opportunity to take the necessary preliminary steps looking to a final development of the property.

SECTION 2.

Section 2 provides that the lease shall contain a provision for the diligent, orderly, and reasonable development and continuous operation, subject to market conditions. Section 2 also enables the Secretary of the Interior, when he thinks it advisable, to put a provision in the lease denying to the operator or lessee the right to contract for the disposition of more than 50 per cent of the total output to any one consumer. It is thought to be of the highest importance that the lease, which is the original contract between the Government and the applicant, should bear all these provisions, which are almost sure to become more and more important during the life of the lease. It will also be observed that section 2 provides that the Secretary of the Interior may limit the amount of electrical energy that may be sold to any one person. It is thought wise to give him this power, but it was not thought the part of wisdom to make it mandatory. In some instances such a provision would be very helpful to ward off and break down monopoly where it exists, but where no monopoly exists it might be oppressive and unnecessary.

SECTION 3.

Section 3 provides that where hydroelectric power is generated in two or more States the regulation and control of service and of charges for service to consumers and of the issuance of stock and bonds by the lessee is conferred upon the Secretary of the Interior or committed to such body as may be provided for by Federal statute. This is thought extremely advisable; otherwise, where electricity is generated in more than one State and State control is ineffective and inoperative, then and in that event it is thought to be the part of wisdom to confer upon the Secretary of the Interior power to regulate the same. It was also thought important to have the legislation indicate that the time might come when Congress in its wisdom might elect to confer this power either upon the Interstate Commerce Commission or some other Federal water power commission that Congress might create. Then, and in that event, the power of the Secretary of the Interior would cease, and such power step in and take control as Congress might provide.

The provision occurring on page 4, beginning at the end of line 4, is an antimonopoly provision, which authorizes combinations in the interest of efficient service, but expressly prohibits combinations, agreements, arrangements, or understandings, expressed or implied, to limit the output of electrical energy, to restrain trade with foreign nations or between two or more States or within any one State, or to fix, maintain, or increase prices for electrical energy or service. It will be observed that it is an extremely difficult task to properly regulate monopoly in connection with water power, for numerous instances can be cited where to allow combinations and union of effort and enterprise is found to be strictly in the interest of the public; but, of course, the general rule is otherwise, and it was the thought of the committee in dealing with this intricate question that the widest latitude should be given to the Secretary of the Interior, and that by experience and personal contact with the subject he could handle the matter more intelligently without too many fetters and restraints.

SECTION 4.

Section 4 provides that without the written consent of the Secretary of the Interior the lessee or power development company shall not sell or deliver power to a distributing company, except in case of an emergency, and then only for a period not exceeding 30 days. It further provides that the lease shall not be assignable or transferable without the written consent of the Secretary of the Interior.

The provision occurring on page 4, section 4, line 17, expressly provides that the lessee shall be allowed to execute mortgages or trust deeds on the property for the purpose of financing the project. It expressly provides, however, that in the event of such transfer, whether voluntary or involuntary, it shall be subject to all the conditions of approval under which such rights were held as contained in the prior lease and in the act. This provision is thought to be imperative, due to the fact that much, if not quite all, of the development of hydroelectric energy must of necessity be done on borrowed capital, and it was not the wish of the committee to pass an act that would prevent financiers from financing the projects. It was the earnest wish of the committee and the proponents of this bill that the bill be made workable; that the bill be made attractive to capital, so that early and speedy development would occur, thereby reducing the cost of power to all who use it, and that the results intended would flow from the highest use of the natural resources bequeathed to us by nature.

SECTION 5.

Section 5 provides for the retaking of the property at the end of the lease and indicates just how the property is to be retaken. In a word, it provides that all nonperishable property, which is sure to increase in value rather than decrease, such as lands, water rights, rights of way, and good will, the actual cost shall be paid therefor. The section further provides that all other property, such as structures, machinery, etc., that are apt to depreciate rather than increase in value, it is thought to be in the interest of the public to provide that the fair value shall be paid therefor, so that in retaking the property the public will not be forced to pay more than the property is actually worth. Your committee feels sure that section 5 lays down the correct rule for a retaking of the property.

The section contains a provision on page 5, line 21, which expressly provides that the reasonable value referred to shall not include or be affected by the value of the franchise or good will or profits to be earned on pending contracts or any other intangible element. It was the thought of the committee that this was clearly in the interest of the public. It was thought that it was but common justice that when we lease the property of the Government for a term of years the lessee should not be permitted to heap up the unearned increment, the good will, and other intangible elements that naturally go along with a business of this sort. It is the thought that the only thing that distinguishes a lease from a grant in perpetuity is the ability of the Federal Government to retake it. Therefore, it is the thought of your committee that this recapture provision of this bill or any other bill is of the highest importance and one that should be looked into carefully.

SECTION 6.

Section 6 lays down the three specific things that the Federal Government can do at the expiration of any lease made under this act. First, the Federal Government may retake it and operate it itself; second, it may renew the lease to the original lessee upon such terms and conditions and for such term as may be authorized under the then existing applicable laws; third, the Secretary of the Interior, upon the expiration of the lease, may lease the property of the original lessee to a new lessee upon such new conditions, new terms, and for such new periods of time as the applicable laws of that date authorize, providing that the new lessee shall pay for the property according to the rule laid down in section 5 of this act. It is the thought that section 6 makes it sufficiently clear that at the expiration of the term the Federal Government will have a free hand to do what it desires to do with the property. It is thought that anything short of this would be giving away more than the public or Congress would intend to do. This section 6 merely magnifies the necessity of an appropriate recapture provision; for example, if the Federal Government elected to lease the property to a new lessee, one of the first controversies that would arise would be, Can I secure possession of the property, and what is the rate I must pay for the property of the preceding lessee? If the method of recapture was simple, easy, plain, and well understood and on equitable grounds, so that the lessee would not have to pay for watered stock and inflated values, then and in that event prospective lessees for the property would be numerous, the rights would be valuable to the Government, and good results would flow in every direction.

But, on the other hand, if the method of recapture was onerous, complex, and difficult of understanding the rights of the Government would be of little or no value, applicants for the property would be few and hesitating, and the disaster that would come to the public by reason of such a provision would be that the original lessee would continue to hold the property and in all probability refuse to submit to new conditions, and while the Congress would have intended to issue a lease, would have in fact and in reality issued a grant in perpetuity, a thing that this Congress does not desire and a thing that the American people will not in silence permit to be done.

SECTION 7.

This section contemplates the arising of a condition which would warrant the lessee in contracting for the supply of electrical energy beyond the term of his lease. In that event the section authorizes the Secretary of the Interior, if he deems it for the public interest, to give his approval of the execution of such contracts, and in the event such approval is given the Government of the United States or the original lessee's successor is required to fulfill the term of the contract which extends beyond the life of the original lease. There will be a difference of opinion about the advisability of this section. It was the thought of your committee, however, that instances might arise where it would be highly necessary and important that the original lessee have more or less freedom in bidding for contracts in order to meet competition, and in some cases it might be necessary to go beyond the life of the lease. It is thought that the necessity for this is brought about by the fact that much of the water power potentiality is already in the hands of private persons, who of course can contract for service for terms indefinite in character. To not give the Government lessees under this act a fair opportunity to compete with the already entrenched water-power companies might be a burden and handicap on our Government lessees greater than we should inflict and might serve as an aid to power companies already entrenched, who would delight to longer be without competition and without additional development of electricity. I repeat, there will be a difference of opinion about this section, but the more the committee thought about it and the more we studied the situation the more we were convinced that to give the Secretary this power was sure to result in good, and the committee was unanimously of the opinion that it should be done.

SECTION 8.

Section 8 authorizes the Secretary of the Interior to enter into contracts with the lessee and to specify in the lease such charge of rental for all power developed by the lessee for any purpose, as may be deemed appropriate in each individual case. The section further provides that the proceeds from such hydroelectric development shall be paid into the reclamation fund, and after it has been used by the fund for one term and returned to the reclamation fund, one-half of the moneys so returned shall be turned over to the States to be appropriated by the State legislature for the benefit of the public schools and other educational institutions or for public improvement, or for both, as the legislature may elect.

Under the reclamation act of 1902 all proceeds from the sale of Government lands go into the reclamation fund, and inasmuch as the development of the water power on nonnavigable streams on the public lands of the United States, it would seem that the returns should likewise go into the reclamation fund. Under the terms of the reclamation act the moneys so used for reclamation purposes in each instance become a lien upon the land and are later returned to the fund for disposition as Congress may provide. Hence, it is thought that until water power reaches a higher state of development and until more of the arid lands of the West have been irrigated, it would seem advisable to use the proceeds for the further irrigation and development of the West and treat it as a fund derived from the sale of the public lands.

The provision commencing in line 19, page 7, provides that where water power is generated by municipalities for municipal purposes only that such leases shall be executed by the Secretary of the Interior without rental or charge. It also provides that for development of not in excess of 25-horsepower, leases may be issued to individuals or associations for mining or domestic uses without charge. It will be observed that this is a relaxation of the act where States, counties, or municipalities elect to construct, own, and operate their own light or power plant. It will be observed that the use is restricted for municipal purposes only and without profit.

It will further be observed that the small projects of less than 25 horsepower are used by individual settlers for pumping water and other domestic uses and that it was thought that it was not advisable for the Government to try to collect revenue therefrom. Many such minor plants are now in operation, and it was the thought of your committee that they should not be molested and that additional enterprises small in character would be advisable and without objection.

SECTION 9.

Section 9 is thought to be a provision which will insure regulation of hydroelectric power development within a State where the State has refused or failed for any cause to provide for a public utilities commission which would have power to regulate rates, service, issuance of stock and bonds, and so forth, and until such time as the State creates such a commission the Secretary of the Interior would have power to regulate it. This is thought to be no invasion of State rights or no trampling upon the laws of the States, for if for any reason the regulation of an intrastate project by the Secretary of the Interior is offensive to them the matter could readily be obviated by the enactment of a law providing for a public utilities commission, and surely no one would advocate that where the State did not regulate that the Federal Government should likewise be precluded from regulation.

SECTION 10.

Section 10 authorizes the Secretary of the Interior to allow lands that have been heretofore reserved for water-power purposes to be used for other and additional purposes, subject always to the superior right of the Government or its assignees to develop hydroelectric power thereon. It will be observed that many water-power sites have been withdrawn over the country under the Pickett Act of June 25, 1910. In some instances large areas were withdrawn, portions of which in all probability will not be necessary. It was therefore thought the part of wisdom to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to allow these lands to be used for other purposes, always reserving to the Federal Government the right of overflow and always subordinate to the superior use of hydroelectric development, and for this reason the section was incorporated. The provision in section 10, in line 4, page 9, provides that where locations, entries, or selections are filed or have been allowed the land shall proceed to patent, subject to a limitation to be inserted in the patent which shall preserve to the Federal Government all rights for power purposes.

SECTION 11.

Section 11 authorizes the Secretary of the Interior to examine books and accounts of lessees, and to require them to submit statements, representations, or reports, including information as to cost of water rights, lands, easements, and other property acquired, production, use, distribution, and sale of energy, all of which statements, representations, or reports so required shall be upon oath and upon such blanks as the Secretary of the Interior may require. It provides further that any person making any false statement, representation, or report under oath shall be subject to punishment as for perjury. It was the thought of your committee that as the Government was parting with this property for a long term of years that it ought to reserve to itself the right to know just what its lessees were doing with the property in each and every case, and it is thought that section 11 as written in the bill will accomplish that.

SECTION 12.

This section provides that whenever the terms of the lease are broken the lease may be canceled by a court of competent jurisdiction. There will be some difference of opinion as to whether the Secretary ought to have this summary power as distinguished from having it tried in a court, but the committee, after carefully considering it, was of the opinion that the lessee would have to incur such a large expense it was most too great a hazard to allow the lease to be canceled by the Secretary of the Interior. It was thought more advisable to have it adjudicated in a court of competent jurisdiction, and to do otherwise, it was thought, would frighten away development and be disastrous to the highest development of water power.

SECTION 13.

Section 13 authorizes the Secretary of the Interior to make such rules and regulations as are necessary to carry out the provisions of this act. This gives the Secretary full power to make appropriate rules and regulations applicable to the circumstances in each project. It was thought that market conditions and other conditions will make the several projects widely differ, and it was thought best to give the Secretary of the Interior full power to make rules and regulations applicable to each individual case. It is apparently impossible and inadvisable to try to write into the statutes harsh general provisions which would be necessary in some instances and wholly inoperative and unworkable in others. The testimony of all the experts before the committee was to the effect that the greatest latitude should be given to the Secretary, so he can properly proceed in the widely differing cases.

SECTION 14.

Section 14 is a section disclaiming any intention on the part of the Federal Government to interfere with vested rights or the State laws with reference to water rights or the appropriate distribution of water used for irrigation or municipal purposes. It is thought that water-power development ordinarily will not in any way interfere with the rights of the States, but this disclaimer has put any doubts to rest that may have arisen in the premises.

SECTION 15.

Section 15 repeals acts in conflict with the legislation under consideration and excepts certain acts of Congress which it is not desired to repeal.

The proviso on page 11, beginning with line 3, shall not be construed as revoking or as affecting any permits or valid existing rights of way heretofore given or granted pursuant to law, but at the option of the permittee any permit heretofore given for the development, generation, transmission, or utilization of hydroelectric power may be surrendered and the permittee given a lease for the same premises under the provisions of this act.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I desire to make the point that a quorum is not present.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Washington makes the point that there is not a quorum present. The Chair will count. [After counting.] Sixty-five gentlemen are present—not a quorum.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. FERRIS] moves that the committee do now rise. The question is on agreeing to that motion.

The question was taken, and the Chairman announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. FERRIS. A division, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Oklahoma demands a division.

The committee proceeded to divide.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, I demand tellers.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Oklahoma demands tellers.

Tellers were ordered, and the Chairman appointed Mr. FERRIS and Mr. JOHNSON of Washington to act as tellers.

The committee divided: and the tellers reported—ayes 5, noes 49.

The CHAIRMAN. The motion is rejected. A quorum is not present. The Clerk will call the roll.

The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. FITZGERALD, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee finding itself without a quorum, he had directed the roll to be called, whereupon 213 Members answered to their names, and he reported the names of the absentees to be printed in the Journal and RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The committee will resume its session.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 16673) to provide for the development of water power and the use of public lands in relation thereto, and for other purposes, with Mr. FITZGERALD in the chair.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, there are certain salient provisions that I think every adequate water-power bill should contain. I shall try to enumerate them:

First. No legislation, Executive order, or departmental ruling should permit the patenting or the title in fee to pass out of the Federal Government under any conditions. The fee title should be reserved in perpetuity to the United States.

Second. The dam sites should be leased for a period of time not longer than 50 years, without any entangling alliances or phrases difficult to understand, on which the courts might quibble or debate as to the relative rights of the Federal Government and the lessee after the term has expired.

Third. The recapture provision should provide that all nonperishable property, such as land, water rights, dam sites, good will, and so forth, should go back to the Federal Government at actual cost, and that all perishable property in connection with the plant should come back to the Federal Government at the end of the lease at its fair value. In both cases the interest of the public is conserved and made certain.

Fourth. Strong, clear, well-understood provisions should be inserted in the lease contract for the revocation of the permit for a violation of the conditions thereof.

Fifth. Provisions should be inserted in the lease requiring diligence and prompt construction of the plant so that the property may not be held for speculative purposes.

Sixth. A royalty or rental for the use of dam sites and the property of the Federal Government should be required in all cases except for municipalities, at least sufficient to cover the cost of administration.

Seventh. The Federal Government should at all times maintain its paramountcy and full control.

Eighth. Annual reports should be exacted from the power companies, so that the public might at all times know of their acts and doings.

Ninth. The Federal Government should reserve to itself full power to fix rates for service, capitalization, bond issues, etc., in interstate projects and where there is no public utilities commission for this purpose in intrastate projects.

Tenth. Each lease, permit or consent of Congress should contain a provision that upon proof that any such permittees, lessees, or grantees have conspired to prevent the development of water power or to limit the output of already constructed plants the lease should be revocable in a court of competent jurisdiction.

ESTIMATED POTENTIAL HORSEPOWER IN THE UNITED STATES.

The estimates for the developed and undeveloped potential horsepower of the United States range from 20,000,000 to 200,000,000 horsepower. A more conservative estimate ranges from 28,000,000 to 35,000,000 horsepower. Only 6,000,000 horsepower have been developed and are now in use. Estimated products for 1905 produced by hydroelectric power $17,000,000,000, or seven times the total receipts of the railroads of the country.

LOCATION OF HYDROELECTRIC ENERGY BY GROUPS OF STATES.

North Atlantic group of States, 2,200,000 horsepower, or 7.9 per cent of the aggregate.

South Atlantic group of States, 2,300,000 horsepower, or 8.2 per cent of the aggregate.

North Central group of States, 1,700,000 horsepower, or 6 per cent of the aggregate.

South Central group of States, 1,500,000 horsepower, or 5.3 per cent of the aggregate.

Western group of States, 20,400,000 horsepower, or 72.6 per cent of the aggregate.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Do those figures represent developed or undeveloped water power?

Mr. FERRIS. Both. It is the estimated potentiality.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. They represent water power in sight?

Mr. FERRIS. Yes; and of that amount 72.6 per cent is in the Western States.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. When the gentleman says Western States, what Western States does he mean—the 11 Western States?

Mr. FERRIS. The public-land States. Of course, some of the land or dam sites are in private ownership. I have not confined it to any certain number of States, but it is the western group of States. It is, of course, but an estimate, but it was carefully made by Mr. Merrill, of the department. His exact statement can be found in the House Public Lands Committee hearings at page 381. I will insert it here for the information of the House:

Various estimates have been made of the amount of developed and undeveloped water power in the United States, as you have heard in this hearing. The total has been variously stated by different estimators from 20,000,000 to 200,000,000 horsepower. Of course the 20,000,000 estimate was made by men who are very conservative, and the 200,000,000 by men who are very optimistic. My own judgment will agree closely with the figures given to you by Mr. Stillwell. He stated about 35,000,000. The figures which I had prepared for submission in this hearing total 28,000,000. Whether the total is that or some other figure depends upon whether you consider the power that could be developed at the present time in the present state of the industry, or whether you consider some problematical amount at some distant future under conditions that do not obtain at the present time.

The CHAIRMAN. Mr. Stillwell is an engineer of pretty wide experience?

Mr. MERRILL. Mr. Stillwell is, and I would say, parenthetically, that I would subscribe to 99 per cent of what he said.

The CHAIRMAN. He made a very good impression upon me.

Mr. MERRILL. Yes; he is an able engineer and has had a large experience.

The distribution which I have prepared upon the basis of 28,000,000 horsepower is approximately as follows:

The North Atlantic States, 2,200,000 horsepower, or 7.9 per cent of the total.

The South Atlantic States, 2,300,000 horsepower, or 8.2 per cent.

The North Central States, 1,700,000 horsepower, or 6 per cent.

The South Central States, 1,500,000 horsepower, or 5.3 per cent.

The Western States, 20,400,000 horsepower, or 72.6 per cent.

Whatever we may take as a total, whether it be the 28,000,000 or whether it be 200,000,000, the distribution will be closely in those percentages.

Mr. KENT. That includes the navigable waterways?

Mr. MERRILL. Yes.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Who made those estimates?

Mr. FERRIS. They were developed in the hearings, and they were made by the department's representative, who has given great attention to these water-power matters and who has charge of that service in the department.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. The figures are not the result of a governmental official investigation, are they?

Mr. FERRIS. We have the figures from Mr. Merrill, of the Agricultural Department. So the figures are from the Government, and they are corroborated by the best engineers that can be had.

HISTORICAL DATA IN CONNECTION WITH WATER POWER.

The first hydroelectric plant established in the world, generating a single-phase current of 3,000 voltage, was at Ames, Colo., in 1890, but 24 years ago. The first act of Congress dealing with rights of way for hydroelectric energy was passed May 14, 1896, and the second act was on May 11, 1898; the third act was on February 15, 1901, and it is under this latter act that most of the development has taken place. It is commonly known as the revocable-permit act.

DIFFICULTY WITH EXISTING LAW AND NECESSITY FOR NEW LEGISLATION.

The first regulations on this subject were issued July 8, 1901, and were in fact but a mere notation on the record that the land had been segregated for water-power use. These first crude regulations soon ripened into good, careful, and painstaking ones, until to-day they have reached a marked degree of perfection, but the insecurity of the tenure, to wit, subject to be revoked at any moment by an executive officer without notice, has served as a scarecrow to capital, and it has been a stumblingblock in the administration of the law. Under the inadequate and inefficient laws relating to construction and development of water power, our great and unusual potentiality is not being conserved, but has been wasted and exploited. If these resources are to be developed, laws must be passed that are reasonably certain and definite, and such as will cause capital to undertake the task. They must, likewise, of course, work hand in hand with conditions that will fully protect the public interest.

TWO KINDS OF WATER POWER.

First, water power developed on the navigable streams of the country, more or less interlinked with navigation.

Second, water power developed on the nonnavigable streams where the Federal Government owns the dam site or the public lands over which the rights of way must traverse. The Adamson bill had to do with the former; this bill has to do with the latter.

WATER POWER A PUBLIC UTILITY.

There was a time when water-power development was considered a local, private enterprise in which only the local community was interested and only the local community had to do with its regulation. This theory has long since been exploded, and it is now generally admitted to be a public utility by all who have had occasion to study the subject.

Water power was once considered a private snap, but it is now one of the greatest modern agencies used in the development of this country. It will be interesting to the House to know that the total output of products manufactured by water power in this country in a single year amounted to $17,000,000,000. It will again be interesting to know that this is seven times more than the combined receipts of all the railroads of this country.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. When the gentleman states that sum as the aggregate does he mean the net, or everything?

Mr. FERRIS. I mean the value of the product manufactured from hydroelectric power. I am fortunate in this instance to have at my command the statement of Mr. Louis B. Stillwell, of New York City, who is and has been for years one of the leading engineers on water power in the United States. He is and has been the leading man for Mr. Westinghouse, who has blazed the way. I will print his exact statement as it was made before the House Public Lands Committee:

Referring to the question asked Mr. Townly as to the productive power of horsepower under average conditions, I have no statistics here later than 1905, but I have some for that year, and according to these statistics, which were compiled from the industrial census taken in that year, for each horsepower used in the United States a product worth $1,150 resulted. The wages paid averaged $248 per horsepower. The figures were used by Mr. Putnam and myself in some work prepared for the first congress of the governors held here at the White House under Mr. Roosevelt. In that year the manufacturing of products amounted to $1,152 for each horsepower installed, and the yearly wages of the men amounted to $248 per horsepower. The value of the product manufactured was nearly $17,000,000,000—seven times the total receipts of all the railroads.

So, it is evident at a glance from these figures that throughout the country in general the ratio of value of product per horsepower utilized in various States is surprising, and it is perfectly evident that no benefit can come to the public from the result of placing any tax on the development of water power. Even a slight acceleration of the rate of development of water power would be of great benefit to the people.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Manufacturing plants and everything else.

Mr. FERRIS. Yes; it amounts to $17,000,000,000, or seven times the total receipts of all the railroads in the country.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. How much of that is in the 72 per cent out west?

Mr. FERRIS. I assume that it is in proportion, although I can only furnish the gentleman the statement above given.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Do you think 72 per cent of the manufactures resulting from water power or anything else are in the Western States?

Mr. FERRIS. I do not think so; but if the gentleman will pardon me, I believe that if an adequate, efficient, modern, up-to-date, careful, painstaking water-power policy is adopted, the gentleman's State and the West generally will borrow from the East much of its manufacturing, and I believe it will make the gentleman's State and the gentleman's counties and the gentleman's cities thrive like a weed in a fallow soil. I think there is no doubt about it. Cheap power is such a potent factor in the development of a new country that the good that will or could flow from it can scarcely be realized.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. If this bill is intended to control the 72 per cent of water power which is in the 11 far Western States, is it not advisable that at least 100 Members of the House attend the discussion of the bill all the way through, inasmuch as the public domain belongs to all the people and now costs the people more than it is probably worth to them?

Mr. FERRIS. I agree with my friend heartily about the importance of this legislation. I do not agree that it costs them more than it is worth. I fear the argument of the gentleman would lead us to a "blessed be nothing" theory that would have but few followers. I want to present the views of the committee, and I shall try to represent them fairly.

I want them to go into the RECORD, so that at least the views of the committee may be fairly well before the House. I know how difficult it is for the Members to stay here, so I hope the gentleman will allow me to conclude, because my remarks will go into the RECORD, and those who are interested in the subject will study them. Of course, those who are not interested will not do so. It is also true that Members have duties more than they can carry and it is difficult for them to sit here through general debates. It is no discourtesy to me at all. I often absent myself with committee work and other duties when I am not conversant with matters being considered. I rather take the small attendance as a compliment to the committee. It shows their full trust in the Public Lands Committee.

Of course, it is true that while this is a dry subject it is so important to the entire country it ought to command their attention. It is the largest question before the American people to-day. I am happy the House is willing to trust us with so important a matter.

Mr. BRYAN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. FERRIS. Yes.

Mr. BRYAN. In the gentleman's estimate of $17,000,000,000 as the total output of water power does he include the traffic, or the power that is used in moving cars and moving different forms of traffic over the country, or does he include simply manufacturing?

Mr. FERRIS. I assume that it includes all of the product sold, whether it be for carrying, lighting, manufacturing, or whatnot. Those figures came from Mr. Westinghouse's top-notch engineer, and even those figures were compiled back in 1905, for the conference of governors that was held at the White House in that year. Those figures were compiled by the best talent and the best engineers of the country at that time. I have no doubt if the figures were now compiled they would be greatly in excess of $17,000,000,000. I have not the items, but I assume that estimate includes every product that comes from the use of hydroelectric power. I have supplied the statement in toto so the House can analyze it. It was made in the presence of a horde of engineers, financiers, and department officers, and was concurred in by them. It is the largest unsolved question to-day.

I hope I display not too much egotism in asking Members interested in water power to consult the hearings held before our committee. I believe they contain almost the last word, at least so far as the development of water power has gone. We had before us the best engineers of this country. We had before us Hon. Franklin K. Lane, a student and a patriot on this subject. We had likewise before us ex-Secretary Fisher, who is a well-known authority on the subject. Also ex-Forester Gifford Pinchot, who is and has been thinking faster than the time in which he lives. He has been quite a pathfinder on this most interesting subject; Dr. George Otis Smith, head of the Geological Survey, a thorough-going, patriotic man; and Mr. Merrill, a brilliant student of the subject, from the Agricultural Department. I think it is not too much to say the hearings had before us, taken altogether is, considering the present state of power development, the last word on the subject. If those interested in the subject will read from page 381 to page 385 of the hearings they will be amazed at the concentration of capital in water power that has already taken place.

It is as near frenzied finance as can be described. No one would believe such concentration could take place in so short a time. I repeat, water-power development began in 1890, just 24 years ago. It is fairly in its swaddling clothes.

CONCENTRATION OF CAPITAL IN ELECTRIC DEVELOPMENT.

The Public Lands Committee hearings, on pages 381 to 385, disclose that abnormal, unusual, and almost inexplicable concentration has been going on in the water power of this country. It discloses that 90 per cent of the developed water power is now in the hands of 27 holding companies and 24 operating companies, so interlinked and intertwined with interlocked directorates that it is impossible to separate their interests or to fathom their power. The total amount of securities held by these 27 companies is $275,000,000. The names of these companies and much information about them appears from pages 656 to 671, inclusive. I do not call attention to this abnormal concentration of capital to startle or amaze, but it is a question worthy of comment, and worthy of intelligent thought. It shows that although this Congress may have slumbered in taking steps to provide for the development of water power, that capital and the water-power monopoly has not slept, but has been active, vigilant, and effective in gaining control thereof.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FERRIS. Yes; gladly.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Does that apply to the public domain?

Mr. FERRIS. It applies to all—the public domain and the dam sites held in private.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Anything in the public domain can be revoked by order.

Mr. FERRIS. Yes; but it is likewise true that much of it has already gone into private ownership. It left us while we were still unaware. Some of the best dam sites were frittered away before anyone knew of their great value. It is our duty to save what is left.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Yes; and numerous projects have failed.

Mr. FERRIS. Yes; that is true; some from overcapitalization and some have not been able to get capital at all. It is not the duty of this House to become fanatical in any legislation that we may enact. It is also quite true that we should not let the present monopoly go on and charge exorbitant rates while our Government dam sites are withdrawn, unused, undeveloped, and in idleness. For myself I want to develop them. Much has been said that those who felt interested in the public interests were cold-storage advocates, but it is not the truth. They are the real developers, the real progressives, for to let these sites be given away in perpetuity would but give the water-power monopoly a chance to hold for speculation and to head off competition while they practice extortion on the public.

There is a solution to this problem. It can be solved. It must be solved. These assets must be used, must be developed, but they must not be given away to the few to the exclusion of the many.

Mr. LEVY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FERRIS. Yes; willingly.

Mr. LEVY. I want to ask the gentleman if he has investigated the fact of whether we can secure any capital to build under the 50-year proviso?

Mr. FERRIS. We had numerous bankers and engineers before us who presented their views.

Mr. LEVY. Is it not the old feudal English system of leasing?

Mr. FERRIS. No; this is in keeping with the water-power development policy of most of the enlightened countries of the world. No country in the world wants to give away its water power without price or without regulation. I feel sure the gentleman does not desire to do so either.

Mr. LEVY. Is it fair, then, that at the end of 50 years you shall take this property and make no return?

Mr. FERRIS. Oh, the gentleman is mistaken; we pay them for it.

Mr. LEVY. But that is no protection.

Mr. FERRIS. Oh, yes; at the expiration of the term the Government may do three distinct things as provided in section 6 of the bill: First, the Government may take it, or, second, lease it to another party; third, it may be re-leased to the original lessee, and in either event the actual cost to be paid for the nonperishable property and the fair value for the perishable property. This is fair; this is clear; this is justice; this will not retard development; this will not give or fritter the property away.

Mr. LEVY. Would it not be fair to leave it to arbitration?

Mr. FERRIS. There are those gentlemen who advocate that, but we leave it to the courts. The court determines what shall be a fair value. Surely the gentleman will not shrink from the courts. They are the final arbiters for all of us.

Mr. LEVY. Do you leave it to the courts?

Mr. FERRIS. We do. In the case of a dispute they go into the court and the court adjudicates what the rights of the parties are. It is, of course, quite true that this bill does not contain all of the provisions that the water-power people want. I think this House would have torn to pieces and thrown out of the window a bill which permitted the water-power people to put in all of the provisions they wanted. Some of them wanted it in perpetuity and wanted it without cost. Is there any member of any political party here who would give away a natural resource in this country that can produce $17,000,000 in a single year? Is there anyone here who thinks the water power should be given away without cost, without regulation, and without return to the rest of us? I think not. Surely there can be but one opinion on that.

It may not be out of place to show how nonpolitical this water-power question really is. It is not a question for my side of the House to solve, it is not a question for the Republican side of the House to solve, or for the Progressive Party to solve, but it is a question for all of the people to solve. I shall now strive to show you why I make that statement.

THE THREE GREAT POLITICAL PARTIES ALL DECLARE FOR CONSERVATION.

The Democratic platform says:

We believe in the conservation and the development, for the use of all the people, of the natural resources of the country * * *. Such additional legislation as may be necessary to prevent their being wasted or absorbed by special or privileged interests should be enacted and the policy of their conservation should be rigidly adhered to * * *.

The Republican platform says:

We rejoice in the success of the distinctive Republican policy of the conservation of our natural resources, for their use by the people without waste and without monopoly. We pledge ourselves to a continuance of that policy.

The Progressive platform says:

We heartily favor the policy of conservation * * *. The natural resources of the Nation must be promptly developed and generously used to supply the people's needs, but we can not safely allow them to be wasted, exploited, monopolized, or controlled against the general good * * *. Natural resources whose conservation is necessary for the national welfare should be owned or controlled by the Nation.

On this question of conservation I think I owe it to the Progressive Party to say that the Progressive platform has the best platform of the three political parties.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I must insist on the presence of a quorum, in view of the importance of this question, and I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

Mr. BRYAN. Oh, I make the point of order that that is dilatory. The gentleman just made it a while ago. We do not want to filibuster on this bill that is worth so much to us out in the West. This is no time to filibuster.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Washington makes the point of order that there is no quorum present. The Chair will count.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington (during the counting). Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the point of no quorum.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Washington withdraws the point of no quorum.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, water power produced from falling water is, to my mind, our greatest natural resource. Unlike coal, oil, gas, wood, and other fuels, it is not consumed by use. It is a subject not too small for our best minds to deal with. It is a subject sufficiently intricate to demand our best attention. Constitutional lawyers and theorists have in the past differed about it and upon it, but the people of the country have been interested in only three things: First, good service; second, what should be paid for that service; and third, what is to be done with the money derived from that service. Up to this time no adequate, well-defined water-power policy has been brought forward and installed. A great and pressing demand for a solution has been present in the country for the last decade. It has been postponed already too long; this Congress should act.

To me, as I scan the growth of electrical energy and the various and multiplying uses of the product, no question coming before Congress has so much reason to expect that our attention will be riveted upon it. The stability of water power and the perpetuity of its blessings and beneficent influences can now be but partially fathomed or understood; we can but await in amazement for it to outstrip our expectations and fondest hopes. Every line that is incorporated in this bill should be analyzed, scanned, and understood by every Member of this House. What we do here is not for a single year, but for a term of 50 years. It is thought necessary to scan carefully the appropriation bills which are but for a single year. This legislation should be scanned 50 times as closely as an annual appropriation bill, due to the tenure of the law. If we make a mistake in an annual appropriation bill it is a mistake for a single year, but if we make a mistake in our water-power policy it is a mistake for 50 years. Hence, though our constituents might through generosity condone our error on an appropriation for a single year, it will require 50 times that generosity to excuse us for an error we make in our water-power policy, which extends for 50 years. The subject is of high importance; the necessity for action is great; further delays are so harmful that I urge with such earnestness as I have at my command that Congress now take up this task and deal with it carefully, painstakingly, effectively, and correctly. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend and revise my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Oklahoma asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. DONOVAN. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Oklahoma has the floor, and the gentleman from Connecticut can not take him off the floor to make a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. DONOVAN. But the gentleman made a motion to extend his remarks, and the rule provides for that—for five legislative days.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is not stating a parliamentary inquiry, and is not in order.

Mr. J. M. C. SMITH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman from Oklahoma yield?

Mr. FERRIS. Certainly.

Mr. J. M. C. SMITH. Mr. Chairman, I am very much interested in the value of the product that is manufactured by water power, and I would like to inquire whether the value of the product is represented by the material and the labor and by the energy created by the water?

Mr. FERRIS. That is true. The combination of those things the gentleman mentions creates the power.

Mr. J. M. C. SMITH. Can the gentleman tell how much of those seventeen billion dollars is represented by material and also how much is represented by labor that is used in connection with it?

Mr. FERRIS. I regret that I do not have those figures at my command, although I think they are in the hearings.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. FERRIS. Yes; with pleasure.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman has indicated by his discussion upon this subject that he has given it a good deal of consideration. Can he inform us how much force will probably be added to the present Government force that we have if this law is put into operation?

Mr. FERRIS. I am very happy the gentleman asked that, because I submit the House would certainly like to know in reference to that matter, and I want to state to the gentleman that in the Interior Department and in the Agriculture Department there is a well-organized, well-defined force that is now carrying forward this work, and they say they can carry it forward under this law without additional agents and additional expense. The gentleman will recall that there is now the act of 1901, known as the revocable permit act, under which these grants of water power came in. They tell us that no additional increase will be required and none is asked. This is not a scheme to create jobs. It is some necessary legislation that will enable the present force to open the West.

Mr. HAMLIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. FERRIS. Certainly.

Mr. HAMLIN. I am very much interested in the gentleman's statement on this question, and he, I think, has given a very clear, cogent statement, but I think that what gentlemen will be interested in knowing will be the cost to the consumer after the energy is developed. Is there anything in the bill that will safeguard the cost to the consumer after these permits are granted to these companies?

Mr. FERRIS. Yes; the Secretary of the Interior is given power to look after that. They are required to render an annual accounting of what they are doing with the power, and he has the right to revise and fix those rates.

Mr. HAMLIN. He has the right to fix the rates to be charged the consumer.

Mr. FERRIS. And in addition to that, the local utility commissions also.

Mr. HAMLIN. That is true.

Mr. FERRIS. So, if the gentleman will allow me further, the passage of this bill or some similar ones that will develop additional water power is sure to put new and additional powers in competition with the present entrenched water-power companies that will bring reduced rates on power to the consumers, the very thing the gentleman desires. As the matter now stands, a large part of the water power of the country is now held up by withdrawals awaiting the time when Congress shall step in and put some law on the statute books that will work out this proposition. The Agriculture Department and the Interior Department say the existing law is very ineffective and inadequate. Almost a dead standstill in development on Government dam sites is due to the revocable-permit law. The insecurity of tenure is the difficulty. Both the Agriculture Department and the Interior Department came before us and plead for a new law that would accomplish development, the thing desired everywhere. There is no difference of opinion about the necessity of legislation. Every one advocates it, and there is not as much real disagreement about it as might be expected. Of course, the power companies want all they can get. It is our duty to see to it that they do not get it all.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FERRIS. I yield with pleasure.

Mr. FOWLER. The gentleman has undoubtedly given a great deal of time and study to this measure, and I would like to know if he has arrived at any conclusion as to what per cent of the profits the Secretary may impose as a cost for this water power?

Mr. FERRIS. It is very proper the gentleman should ask me that question, and it is very proper for me to try to answer it. The gentleman knows that is quite a difficult question.

Mr. FOWLER. It is.

Mr. FERRIS. To lay down any fixed proposition, especially in dealing with these widely differing cases, is difficult. For example, small projects sufficient to pump water to irrigate a garden, and a project here that is to irrigate small inaccessible areas in the West and to light small towns and cities of the West, in such cases the charge should be nominal, or at best only enough to pay for administration. On the other hand, where a well-entrenched, profit-making concern, the rule as to rents, royalties, and so forth, would be altogether different. At the present state of development it is almost impossible to lay down a hard-and-fast rule. Secretary Lane, Secretary Fisher, and the engineers thought best to let the Secretary of the Interior have some latitude, so that on the little projects calling for 25 or 50 horsepower to irrigate a garden or field it should be on the basis of a nominal price in reference to royalty, and, on the other hand, when it was a great, strong, well-conceived, well-organized, money-making concern, why, we should deal with that justly, but in an entirely different way. Taking the views of these well-known authorities and others who appeared before us, it was considered by the committee wise for the present to leave it to the Secretary of the Interior to work out, until such time as Congress might have sufficient information before it to step in and fix a rate on which it could and would stand.

Mr. FOWLER. The gentleman's bill does not prevent Congress in the future from exercising that right?

Mr. FERRIS. Not at all. It invites it.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Would not the rate of interest that will have to be paid for capital to go in and develop the 72 per cent of the Nation's water power which lies in the far West have to be considered?

Mr. FERRIS. It is true, those things, the market conditions, and so forth, all have a great deal to do with the rate that should be charged. It is almost impossible to lay down a hard and fast rule as to what would be a just rate in all cases. I think it would be extremely unwise to attempt to write into the law a fixed and arbitrary rate. It would be unworkable and abortive of the ends desired. In some cases inferior, inaccessible areas of sage-brush land, which without water is totally worthless, by pumping water from wells by cheap power from hydroelectric energy these worthless tracts of land can be converted into fertile alfalfa fields, 10 acres of which will support a family. In this case no one would advocate that the chief aim of the law should be the rate or amount of rental that could be secured to the Government. It would be more of a question of how much of the cheap power could be utilized to produce foodstuff to feed the world. The question of rental during the present state of development of water power is not the paramount issue. I want the principle preserved inviolate of our right to do so, but the fixing of an exact rate in the law to govern in all cases is not, I think, the large question here at all.

Mr. FOWLER. In your opinion where there is 500 horsepower generated, and where there is a sale for the whole of it, what do you think ought to be a reasonable charge, or that the beneficiary of the franchise could afford to pay?

Mr. FERRIS. I am very glad indeed to give the gentleman my opinion, but I would not ask that my opinion govern; others will differ with me. What should be charged depends on market conditions, expense of operation, feasibility of the dam site, storage, and so many things my opinion would be worth but little. I think the royalty, the rental, or the charge should sooner or later be based upon the earning power of the concern.

Mr. FOWLER. I think so, too.

Mr. FERRIS. Let me say to the gentleman that with only 6,000,000 horsepower now in use, which is only a small per cent of the total potentiality of the horsepower in this country, it would seem appropriate to me that for the first few years the charge be light so that the greatest possible development would get into motion. At all times retaining our full right to charge, so that when we shall finally come to lay down an adequate policy, as we are certain soon to do, we can then deal with it in the last detail.

The time will soon come when the country will fully appreciate Secretary Lane, who has taken the lead in pressing this conservation program to action. His tireless and effective work will open the West. The previous administrations withdrew the West, awaiting its intelligent opening and development. Secretary Lane is taking up the work left for him to do in a clear-headed, masterly way.

I repeat both East and West will live to bless him for putting in motion that program of conservation which is more far-reaching for good than we can now fathom or understand.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I desire to make the point of no quorum.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry. Is it not a fact——

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I make the point of no quorum, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Washington makes the point that there is no quorum present.

Mr. BRYAN. I make the point that the motion is dilatory. It has come repeatedly from the gentleman.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair overrules the point of order made by the gentleman from Washington [Mr. BRYAN]. The Chair will count. [After counting.] Fifty-two Members are present, not a quorum.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The question was taken, and the Chair announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee and Mr. HAMLIN demanded a division.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 39, noes 8.

Mr. FERRIS. Tellers, Mr. Chairman.

Tellers were ordered, and Mr. FERRIS and Mr. JOHNSON of Washington took their places as tellers.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 16, noes 30.

So the committee refused to rise.

The CHAIRMAN. There is not a quorum present, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The roll was called, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

The committee rose; and Mr. SLAYDEN, having assumed the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. FITZGERALD, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee having under consideration the bill (H. R. 16673) to provide for the development of water power and the use of public lands in relation thereto, and for other purposes, and finding itself without a quorum, he had caused the roll to be called, whereupon 203 Members—a quorum—had answered to their names, and he presented therewith a list of the absentees.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union reports that that committee having had under consideration the bill H. R. 16673, and finding itself without a quorum, he had caused the roll to be called, whereupon 203 Members—a quorum—responded to their names. The names of the absentees will be entered on the Journal. The committee will resume its session.

The committee resumed its session.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. FERRIS] has used 55 minutes.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman from Idaho [Mr. FRENCH] use some of his time?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Idaho [Mr. FRENCH] is recognized for two hours.

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Chairman, I yield 40 minutes to the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wyoming is recognized for 40 minutes.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, in arising to announce my opposition to the form and many of the features of the so-called water-power bill I desire to emphasize the fact that I would greatly prefer, if my obligations to the people I represent permitted, to give my approval to the measure as presented by the Committee on the Public Lands. As gentlemen know, I served on that committee for many years, was for a time its chairman, and have the highest regard for and sustain the most friendly personal relations with the members of that committee without regard to party. I realize the careful consideration which the members of the committee have given to this matter and the earnestness of their desire to preserve the public interest in connection with the legislation; therefore my natural inclination is to give the benefit of the doubt to the provisions of a measure to which a majority of the committee has given its assent. I can not do so, however, in this case and perform my duty as I see it to my own constituents and to the people of the Western States generally, who are affected by the measure.

HOW WE LEGISLATE.

I think it may perhaps serve a useful purpose in this connection to call attention to the fact—at least to express the opinion—that Congress and its committees have adopted a policy or fallen into a habit, whichever it may be considered, in the consideration of legislative questions which is not conducive to good legislation, and which to a very considerable and dangerous extent handicaps committees and their members in the consideration and reporting of legislative propositions. I refer to the practice of having bills drafted in the executive departments and discussed and considered to a greater or less extent under the advice and guidance of administrative officers of the Government. That practice has grown tremendously in the last few years and has been particularly noticeable in this Congress. After more or less consultation, more often less than more, with Members interested in legislation or responsible for its enactment, the department draws a bill. It naturally reflects very largely the view of department officials. When the time comes for consideration of the measure in the committee, the hearings are attended, generally on invitation, by departmental heads, bureau chiefs, and clerks, and their views are heard at length; oftentimes at such length that the committee more or less wearies of its hearings by the time the departmental view is fully stated, and pressure for time and desire to complete consideration frequently prevents the hearing of others. During the detailed consideration of the bill by sections, bureau officials stand ready to confer, to offer suggestions when requested, and thus guide the deliberations of the committee along the lines of their views.

Now, all this may be very proper and helpful, within reasonable limitations. I have no desire whatever to minimize the value of the advice of men who have studied subjects from an administrative standpoint. They can render a valuable service in giving legislators the benefit of their experience in administration. But these practices, carried to the extent that they frequently are, are neither in harmony with the spirit of our institutions nor conducive to that untrammeled initiative and full and free consideration of measures which is essential to good legislation and to the complete separation of legislative and administrative functions. It results in legislation reflecting far more, both in its plan and detail, the opinions of a Government bureau than the collective view of Congress or its committees. Once give a legislative program a certain slant through the introduction of a bill, and follow that up with a continued nursing during the period of consideration by those who approve that slant, and it is almost impossible for even a majority of a committee to mold the legislation to their complete liking. The most that can be done, unless there is a majority entirely hostile to the whole tenor of the legislation, is to somewhat modify and amend it, so that while it may be less objectionable than originally, it will still fail to adequately express the views of a majority of the committee which reports it. These general observations apply to a greater or less extent to this legislation and to some of the bills that are to follow, notably the coal and oil leasing bill.

SCOPE OF THE BILL.

Mr. Chairman, a few days ago the House concluded the consideration of a bill intended by its author to promote and encourage the development of hydroelectric energy on navigable streams. We have before us now for consideration a bill which purports to encourage the development of water powers on the public lands from the waters of nonnavigable streams. The former bill applies to all the country wide wherever navigable waters flow. The bill before us applies to the public-land States, and in the public-land States I understand was intended to be confined to the nonnavigable streams. There is some doubt whether its provisions so limit it. Legislation relative to such water-power development is needed. We have two general right-of-way acts. The act of March 3, 1891, relates primarily to rights of way for irrigation, and by an amendment of that act, passed in May, 1898, it is possible to develop water powers subsidiary to the main purpose of irrigation. We have also the general right-of-way act of February 15, 1901, which is the act under which most of the water-power development on public lands is had in the public-land States.

That act is a general statute which has worked well, except for one fatal limitation contained in it. Under that act the Secretary of the Interior is authorized to revoke permits at any time. I think that at the time that act was passed it was not the thought of anyone who voted for it that any right granted under it would be revoked except for some violation of the direct or implied terms of the permit. But some years ago an outgoing Secretary of the Interior did revoke quite a number of important permits issued under that act, reminding all those who might seek rights of way under that act of the fact that their permits were revokable and might be revoked without any reason being given for the revocation.

And so it seems to be necessary to have some legislation whereby we may secure rights of way over public lands in the West for the development of water power. All that is asked of the Federal Government is to give those who seek to develop water power in the public-land States an opportunity to use the public lands for that entirely legitimate and useful purpose.

WATER RIGHTS UNDER STATE CONTROL.

Let us not forget that the primary and essential right upon which any enterprise of this character is based in the public-land States is a right received from the people of the State and not from the Federal Government. The people of the Commonwealths of the West are the owners and proprietors of all the waters within their borders, and the only right that any individual can have or secure, at least in the majority of the public-land States, is the right to use the water at a certain designated place for a specific and useful purpose; and the right continues so long as at that place for that purpose those waters are beneficially applied. The Federal Government can give no grant of right to build power plants on public lands in the Western States that will carry with it any right to divert a drop of water or to use a drop of water for the turning of any wheel or turbine. That right, under the laws of the States, recognized by the Federal Constitution and the courts, must be secured from the people through the authorities they have provided in the States. That right in all of the States is perpetual, so long as the water shall be used at that place for that beneficial purpose.

AN EXCISE TAX.

The bill before us seems to be based on the theory that in some way or other the Federal Government, as the proprietor of lands, may lay an excise tax upon the use of the water which the people of the States own. It seems to be based on the theory that the Federal Government can establish an excise tax, not uniform over all of the States, not uniform in the States to which it applies, but applied to certain specific enterprises, by reason of the fact that they are partly or wholly located on the public land. It seems to be assumed that the Federal Government has this right, whether the public land used be one acre out of ten thousand utilized for the enterprise; whether that one acre shall be essential to the development of the water power, or simply needed for a right of way to carry a pole line to some point of distribution.

It is proposed in this legislation that the Federal power shall extend, in the matter of fixing an excise tax, to all enterprises, near or remote, important or unimportant, material or immaterial, that are connected with the project. Over all of these it is proposed that the vast, unregulated, unlimited power of the Secretary of the Interior shall extend. The people whose product, water, is the prime necessity for the undertaking, the people who are to be served, the people who are to pay the bills, are to have no say about it from the beginning to the end. A member of the President's Cabinet, the Secretary of the Interior, is to have full and complete control in every matter of charge and requirement relative to all the enterprises that may find it necessary to use any of the public lands.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. I will.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Will the gentleman state whether or not, or to what extent, this law differs from the existing law, with reference to recognizing the right of the Federal Government to control the water in the nonnavigable streams upon the public domain? Does this go any further in that particular than the existing law?

Mr. MONDELL. Well, that is somewhat a question of opinion, as the gentleman from South Dakota knows. The present right-of-way acts do not pretend, and can not in their operation, in any wise affect the right of the States to control the use of water.

They are simply acts granting a right to use a certain portion of the public domain for a certain purpose; and while the Secretary of Agriculture under one of those acts has assumed the right to make certain charges, and under coercion some have agreed to such charges, the fact is there is nothing in the law that in any wise conflicts or comes in contact with the right of a State to say who shall use the water and how it shall be used. There is in this act a section—section 14—which was evidently intended to negative the clear intent of the balance of the act by the adoption of a self-denying ordinance to the effect—

That nothing in this act shall be construed as affecting or intended to affect or to in any way interfere with the laws of any State relating to the control, appropriation, use, or distribution of water used in irrigation or for municipal or other uses, or any vested right acquired thereunder.

It is somewhat similar to the provision contained in the reclamation law, but that provision is all-sufficient as it stands in the reclamation law, for there is nothing in that law that need raise the question of the right of the State to control the use of water. Section 8 of that statute is simply a recital of what is the law and recognizes the conditions under which the Secretary of the Interior is to proceed to the development of his enterprises.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Does not the gentleman think that section is exceedingly important to the West to remain in the bill?

Mr. MONDELL. I agree with my friend from Colorado, who, with other western Members, was instrumental in having this section placed in the bill, that it is not only exceedingly important that it remain in the bill, but that it is even more important that other provisions of the bill in conflict with it should go out. It would also be well if this provision of the bill could be so broadened as to clearly express the fact that nothing contained in this legislation should, and nothing contained in it can, in fact, interfere with the right of a State to regulate the use of nonnavigable water for all purposes within its boundaries.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. I may say that the thought before the committee was that language which we put in the Hetch Hetchy bill—and I think I may claim the credit for inserting it in both of the bills—was for the express protection of the States; and inasmuch as it went as far and in language substantially the same as section 8 of the reclamation law, we thought that the courts would construe that it was the intention of Congress to protect our rights.

Mr. MONDELL. I think the gentleman of the West did right in inserting this section in the bill. I think it should be still broader, in view of the fact that so many things the act proposes amount seemingly to a control of the waters of the States.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. I yield to the gentleman from Washington.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I desire to make the point that there is no quorum present.

Mr. BRYAN. I make the point of order that that is dilatory.

Mr. FERRIS. Does the gentleman insist upon his point of order? I hope he will let the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] conclude his speech.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I insist on the point of no quorum.

Mr. FERRIS. I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and Mr. UNDERWOOD having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. FITZGERALD, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 16673) to provide for the development of water power and the use of public lands in relation thereto, and for other purposes, and had come to no resolution thereon.

LEAVE TO EXTEND REMARKS.

Mr. SLOAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by introducing some statistics supplementary to others that are already in——

Mr. FITZGERALD. On what subject?

Mr. SLOAN. On the subject of agricultural imports.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Nebraska asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 2 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until Wednesday, August 12, 1914, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATION.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, a letter from the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, transmitting, pursuant to law, a report of the official proceedings of the Public Utilities Commission of the District of Columbia for the 10 months ending December 31, 1913, was taken from the Speaker's table and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII,

Mr. STOUT, from the Committee on the Public Lands, to which was referred the bill (S. 655) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to survey the lands of the abandoned Fort Assiniboine Military Reservation and open the same to settlement, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1079), which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

SENATE.

WEDNESDAY, August 12, 1914.

(Legislative day of Tuesday, August 11, 1914.)

The Senate reassembled at 11 o'clock a. m. on the expiration of the recess.

Mr. CULBERSON. I ask that the unfinished business, House bill 15657, be laid before the Senate and proceeded with.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 15657) to supplement existing laws against unlawful restraints and monopolies, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on the Judiciary with amendments.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, I make the point of no quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Hitchcock	O'Gorman	Smoot
Brady	Hollis	Overman	Sterling
Brandegee	Hughes	Page	Stone
Bryan	James	Perkins	Thomas
Burton	Johnson	Pittman	Thompson
Chamberlain	Jones	Poindexter	Thornton
Clark, Wyo.	Kern	Pomerene	Tillman
Clarke, Ark.	Lane	Saulsbury	Vardaman
Culberson	McCumber	Shafroth	Walsh
Cummins	Martine, N. J.	Sheppard	West
Gallinger	Myers	Simmons	White
Gronna	Nelson	Smith, Ga.

Mr. PAGE. I wish to announce the unavoidable absence of my colleague [Mr. DILLINGHAM] and to state that he is paired with the senior Senator from Maryland [Mr. SMITH].

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I desire to announce the unavoidable absence of my colleague [Mr. WARREN]. He is paired with the senior Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER]. I will let this announcement stand for this legislative day.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I was requested to announce the absence of the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. CHILTON] on official business. He is paired with the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. FALL]. I ask that this announcement may stand for the day.

Mr. WHITE. I wish to announce the necessary absence of my colleague [Mr. BANKHEAD] and to state that he is paired. This announcement may continue for the day.

Mr. JONES. The junior Senator from Michigan [Mr. TOWNSEND] is necessarily absent. He is paired with the junior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON]. I make this announcement for the day.

I also desire to announce that the senior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] is absent on account of illness.

Mr. JAMES. I wish to announce the unavoidable absence of my colleague [Mr. CAMDEN] and to state that he is paired. This announcement may stand for the day.

Mr. GALLINGER. I desire to announce the unavoidable absence of the junior Senator from Maine [Mr. BURLEIGH] because of a death in his family, and also the unavoidable absence of the junior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WEEKS].

Mr. SMOOT. I desire to announce the unavoidable absence of my colleague [Mr. SUTHERLAND] and also of the junior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. STEPHENSON]. I will let this announcement stand for the day.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Forty-seven Senators have answered to the roll call. There is not a quorum present. The Secretary will call the roll of absentees.

The Secretary called the names of the absent Senators.

Mr. BRYAN. My colleague [Mr. FLETCHER] is unavoidably absent. He is paired with the junior Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN].

Mr. SWANSON entered the Chamber and answered to his name.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Forty-eight Senators have answered to the roll call. There is not a quorum present. The Sergeant at Arms will carry out the instruction of the Senate heretofore given and request the attendance of absent Senators.

Mr. WILLIAMS entered the Chamber and answered to his name.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Forty-nine Senators have answered to the roll call. There is a quorum present.

Mr. CULBERSON. I ask unanimous consent that the formal reading of the bill may be dispensed with.

The VICE PRESIDENT. And that it be read for action on the committee amendments?

Mr. CULBERSON. And that it be read for action on the amendments of the committee first.

Mr. GALLINGER. It is not a very long bill, and I think it ought to be read. The Senate ought to know what is in it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. There is objection?

Mr. GALLINGER. I object.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the bill.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, I have conferred with the Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON] in regard to the matter, and it is agreeable to him to have the Senate transact some executive business that ought to be done at once. It may not take very long. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After 7 hours and 5 minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by J. C. South, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House disagrees to the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 18202) to provide for the admission of foreign-built ships to American registry for foreign trade, and for other purposes, asks a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. ALEXANDER, Mr. HARDY, Mr. UNDERWOOD, Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts, and Mr. MANN managers at the conference on the part of the House.

The message also announced that the House agrees to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 1644) for the relief of May Stanley, and for other purposes.

The message further announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. 17042) to amend the postal and civil-service laws, and for other purposes, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

BILL INTRODUCED.

A bill was introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. GALLINGER:

A bill (S. 6260) granting an increase of pension to Lovina P. Nudd (with accompanying papers), to the Committee on Pensions.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

H. R. 17042. An act to amend the postal and civil-service laws, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

REGISTRY OF FOREIGN-BUILT VESSELS.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives disagreeing to the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 18202) to provide for the admission of foreign-built ships to American registry for the foreign trade, and for other purposes, and requesting a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. O'GORMAN. I move that the Senate insist upon its amendment, agree to the conference asked for by the House, the conferees on the part of the Senate to be appointed by the Chair.

The motion was agreed to; and the Vice President appointed Mr. O'GORMAN, Mr. THORNTON, Mr. SHIELDS, Mr. PERKINS, and Mr. BORAH conferees on the part of the Senate.

RECESS.

Mr. SWANSON. I move that the Senate take a recess until to-morrow at 11 o'clock a. m.

The motion was agreed to, and (at 6 o'clock and 18 minutes p. m.) the Senate took a recess until to-morrow, August 13, 1914, at 11 oclock a. m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WEDNESDAY, August 12, 1914.

The House was called to order by the Speaker pro tempore, Mr. ADAMSON.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

We lift up our hearts to Thee, O God our Father, in fervent prayer for our great and growing Republic, that the trend of her life may ever be directed to right, truth, and justice. To this end eliminate unwarranted selfishness, avarice, greed, and vainglory. Deepen the springs of her life, widen her intellectual horizon, quicken her conscience, strengthen her religious zeal and fervor, that she may move onward, the vanguard of yet higher, grander civilization, under the spiritual lead of our Lord Jesus Christ. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

POSTAL AND CIVIL-SERVICE LAWS.

Mr. MOON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for five minutes on a matter that I feel in justice ought to be called to its attention.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent to address the House for five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MOON. Mr. Speaker, possibly I ought not to notice an article in the Washington Herald of this date, an editorial upon the subject of the railway mail pay, but it is a practical reproduction of some 50 editorials in as many papers throughout the United States that were published before the disposition by the House yesterday of the bill amending the postal and civil-service laws. I have not the pleasure of the acquaintance of the very able and usually accurate editor of the Washington Herald, but I have read this paper with a good deal of interest, and I have usually found it fair and accurate. But this article would seem to have been inspired. It is along the lines of the others that are assaulting the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads and the Post Office Department, and now this House. This discussion in the newspapers of the bill which the House passed yesterday has been along the same lines. I have no feelings in reference to the matter. I simply desire to correct the errors contained in the editorial, which is evidently intended for the purpose of influencing the Senate, if possible, in its action upon this bill. The editorial is headed "Railways and the mails." It says:

It may reasonably be assumed that not even Senator CUMMINS or Senator LA FOLLETTE will find fault with the activities of the committee on railway mail pay in seeking to restrain Congress from taking hasty action upon the Moon bill, which would compel the railroads to transport the mails at a rate of compensation to be determined by the Postmaster General.

The bill stated no such thing. It requires the mail to be carried at rates fixed by Congress, adequate and sufficient rates, in our opinion. Next:

The railroads are opposing the Moon bill for the excellent reason that the author of the measure has estimated that its effect would be to reduce the mail-carrying revenues of the roads $3,000,000 a year, and this item has assumed serious proportions since the disappointing decision of the Interstate Commerce Commission regarding increased freight rates.

The author of the bill has made no such statement. The fact is that the pay, in the aggregate, to the railroad companies, under the bill which this House passed yesterday, will be about $587,000 a year more than for the fiscal year 1915 under the regular Post Office appropriation bill. The department hopes to recoup that now, however, by the handling of the mails, and it can do it. The plan of the bill is entirely different from the old measure. The editorial says further:

The railroads have many other reasons for objecting to the Moon bill—concerning which they were denied a hearing—and among them is one which especially appeals to the common sense of the public. For two years past a congressional commission, of which Hon. Jonathan Bourne, jr., is chairman, has been conducting an exhaustive investigation into the question of compensation for mail carrying, and now when the commission is about ready to submit its report to Congress, action is being urged on the Moon bill, prepared without reference to the work of the Bourne commission.

A hearing was not denied. No hearing was ever asked for by the railroads of the Post Office Committee on this particular bill until it was reported. A full and complete hearing of all of the questions was had before the commission or the joint committee known as the Bourne committee. The Members of the House on that committee are supporting the bill which is referred to here. The department acted in conjunction with the committee and with the Post Office Committee. Every fact that they knew was known to us, and the full benefit of all of the action of that committee was known to the House committee. The fact is that the report was ordered in May last, and has been delayed evidently for no other purpose than to prevent action on the bill. I quote further from the editorial:

Such proceeding surely indicates the absence of any desire to ascertain the truth, to profit by an investigation of an extremely intricate subject, or to legislate with any regard for the equities of the case. Two years' work of a congressional commission is to count for naught.

When the joint committee's plan is identical with the plan of the Post Office Department, identical with the plan that this House has acted upon in the bill passed yesterday, it is very clear that this editor is in serious error.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Tennessee has expired.

Mr. MOON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for three minutes more in order that I may finish the editorial.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MOON. Mr. Speaker, quoting further from the editorial:

The present system of determining the rates to be paid the roads by a weighing process every four years at a large expense to the Government is antiquated and indefensible—

We think so, too, and this House thinks so, and it acted in accordance with that thought yesterday—and apparently inflicts an injustice upon the roads, whose officials claim they are at present underpaid about $15,000,000 a year.

Why did the roads want to continue that plan if that were so? We say that they have been overpaid and not underpaid, but I will not stop to discuss that phase of it. The debate, tables, and testimony show they are overpaid now. Continuing the editorial:

The Moon bill perpetuates the objectionable features of the present system and reduces the roads' revenue by several million dollars annually.

It does not reduce the compensation to the roads, it does not perpetuate the present system. The purpose of the bill is the destruction of the present system and the adoption of a system entirely different. It adopts the space system and abolishes the old quadrennial weighing system. This is the main feature of the bill. To quote further:

Whatever may be the view of the postal authorities and the advocates of the Moon bill, it is a safe assertion that the American people are making no demand that the railroads carry the mails at a loss.

No; they are not making any such demand, but more than 10,000 of them, by private letters to this committee, demand that these roads shall not be overpaid, and that the system shall be changed. The editorial continues:

They, of course, can not refuse to perform this public service, and in their present condition of depleted revenues and increased operating expenses it certainly would appear to be an injustice to deny them a hearing upon a measure that would compel them to transport the mail at a rate which they claim can be so determined by the Postmaster General as to amount to confiscation.

The Postmaster General can not do anything of the sort, nor could a constitutional law be passed that would do so. The rate is adequate and complete.

The editorial then concludes as follows:

At all events, intelligence and simple economies dictate that action on the Moon bill should await the forthcoming report of the congressional commission.

That report has been promised week after week. It has not come. We know just what has been ordered to be reported, and this bill here, which was passed by this House yesterday, urged by the Post Office Department, adopted by the committee, is along the lines that this commission will report, there being a variance of only perhaps half a cent on several items, and difference on terminal and other charges and slight difference in other respects, as to compensation for use of cars. The new plan adopted in the bill has the approval of the joint committee, the Post Office Department, and the House Post Office and Post Roads Committee.

As I remarked, Mr. Speaker, perhaps I ought not to call attention to this at all and ought to pass it unnoticed, but the continued and systematic repetition of these incorrect statements in reference to this matter justifies the correction in the House of the errors in the press.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. WINGO. To ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Arkansas? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

The SPEAKER pro tempore laid before the House the following applications for leave of absence:

JOHNSTOWN, PA., August 8, 1914.

Hon. CHAMP CLARK,
Speaker House of Representatives, Washington.

MY DEAR MR. SPEAKER: Will you kindly present my application for leave of absence, indefinitely, on account of illness in my immediate family.

Yours, truly, ANDERSON H. WALTERS.

AUGUST 12, 1914.

Hon. CHAMP CLARK,
Speaker House of Representatives.

MY DEAR SPEAKER: I respectfully ask leave of absence for three weeks owing to the death of my daughter.

Very respectfully,
JOHN J. ESCH.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. If there is no objection, the requests will be granted. [After a pause.] The Chair hears no objection.

Does the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. ALEXANDER] desire to be recognized?

MAY STANLEY.

Mr. POU. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. POU. I would like to call up the conference report on Senate bill 1644.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Speaker, this being Calendar Wednesday H. R. 12796 is the unfinished business and comes up automatically.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair understands, if the gentleman from Texas will permit, that this is Calendar Wednesday, but it has been the custom to permit gentlemen to call up conference reports by unanimous consent.

Mr. SLAYDEN. I beg the Chair's pardon. I did not hear the statement.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from North Carolina wishes to call up a conference report by unanimous consent. That has been the custom.

Mr. POU. I simply want to move to concur in the conference report. It has been printed and is in the RECORD of this morning.

Mr. MANN. This being Calendar Wednesday will not the gentleman ask unanimous consent?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair does not think that would be in order without unanimous consent.

Mr. POU. Well, I will ask unanimous consent to agree to the conference report.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman first asks to take up the conference report for consideration?

Mr. POU. Yes, sir.

Mr. SLAYDEN. I would like to ask the gentleman how long he thinks it will take on this?

Mr. POU. So far as I am concerned I do not want any time at all.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. What is the number of the bill?

Mr. POU. Senate bill 1644. The report of the conferees is in the RECORD this morning. This is one of those personal-injury matters.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Is it likely to lead to debate?

Mr. POU. I think not.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from North Carolina requests unanimous consent for the present consideration of the conference report which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read the conference report and statement, as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT (NO. 1080).

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 1644) for the relief of May Stanley, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its amendment numbered 2.

Amendment numbered 1: That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House numbered 1, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows:

In lieu of the sum proposed by said amendment insert "$3,000"; and the House agree to the same.

EDWD. W. POU,
GEO. C. SCOTT,
Managers on the part of the House.

N. P. BRYAN,
COE I. CRAWFORD,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

STATEMENT.

The House of Representatives receded from its amendment to pay May Stanley, widow of Will H. Stanley, $2,000 for salary on account of the loss of her husband and agree to fix the amount at $3,000, and a sum not to exceed $500, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to pay for medical and other necessary expenses, including funeral and administration expenses, incurred in connection with the death of the said Will H. Stanley.

EDWD. W. POU,
GEO. C. SCOTT,
Managers on the part of the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request?

Mr. POU. And I ask unanimous consent that the conference report be agreed to.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Speaker, what attitude will that be to the bill which is the unfinished business?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That does not affect it at all. The regular order of unfinished business will come up immediately.

Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina that present consideration be given to the conference report? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. Now, the request is that the conference report be agreed to. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. This being Calendar Wednesday, the unfinished business is H. R. 12796, and the House automatically resolves itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, with the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. JOHNSON] in the chair.

CALENDAR WEDNESDAY—REMOVAL OF BOTANIC GARDEN.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 12796, with Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the bill by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 12796) to provide for the removal of the Botanic Garden to Rock Creek Park, and for its transfer to the control of the Department of Agriculture.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, I want to make an effort to see if we can agree in regard to time. I ask unanimous consent that general debate be closed now and the bill taken up and read for amendment.

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent that general debate now close upon the bill and it be taken up under the five-minute rule. Is there objection?

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, there are two or three gentlemen present who desire to discuss this bill under general debate. I have no motive in delaying a vote upon this bill any longer than is necessary to intelligently discuss this question, which I think is rather important, and therefore, unless the gentleman from Texas can designate some time for general debate, I will be forced to object.

Mr. SLAYDEN. What time would the gentleman suggest as being reasonable to carry out the desires of those gentlemen?

Mr. HOWARD. On last Wednesday the gentleman from North Carolina, as I understand it, was on his feet, and he had, I think, 32 minutes remaining of his hour—that is, of the time that would be allotted to Members under the one hour for recognition.

Mr. SLAYDEN. That statement is correct.

Mr. HOWARD. And I had, I think, 36 minutes left.

The CHAIRMAN. Thirty-five minutes.

Mr. HOWARD. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOWLER] desires some time, so I am informed.

Mr. SLAYDEN. How much does he want?

Mr. HOWARD. Can the gentleman from Illinois give any idea of the amount of time he would like to have? We are trying to reach some agreement.

Mr. FOWLER. I think I can say all I want to in 20 or 25 minutes.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Let me ask the gentleman from Georgia if it will be agreeable to close this debate at 2 o'clock?

Mr. HOWARD. It will be perfectly so to me.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Then I ask unanimous consent to close the general debate at 2 o'clock.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent that debate be closed at 2 o'clock. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, how is that time to be controlled?

Mr. SLAYDEN. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HOWARD] has a mortgage on 35 minutes of it and the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. PAGE] 32 minutes, or such a matter.

Mr. MANN. Can the Chair inform me how much time I have remaining?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair can inform the gentleman from Illinois that he did not reserve his time.

Mr. SLAYDEN. In order that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] may have time, I amend that request to make the time for closing the debate 2.30 p. m. Is that satisfactory?

Mr. MANN. I take it that there will be some opportunity under the five-minute rule if gentlemen desire to be heard.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Make it 2.30, then. That will be quite satisfactory.

Mr. FOWLER. And the other gentleman from Illinois also may have 30 minutes.

Mr. SLAYDEN. We are providing for that, I will say to the gentleman.

Mr. MANN. I think you had better fix how the time is to be controlled, and then gentlemen will all know how much they are going to have.

Mr. SLAYDEN. I will say that I suggest, then, Mr. Chairman, that the time be controlled by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HOWARD] and by myself.

The CHAIRMAN. In order to avoid future dispute about it, does the request now made by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SLAYDEN] do away with the time which has been reserved by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HOWARD] and the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. PAGE]?

Mr. MANN. As I understand the gentleman's request now, it is that there shall be two hours more of general debate, one-half to be controlled by himself and one-half by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HOWARD].

Mr. SLAYDEN. Is that satisfactory?

Mr. HOWARD. That is satisfactory to me, if it is to the other gentlemen.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent that debate be closed in two hours—one half to be controlled by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HOWARD] and the other half by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SLAYDEN]. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, I will ask the gentleman from Georgia if he wants to consume some time now?

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Chairman, I have a substitute for the committee's bill that I would like to have the Clerk read now in order that we may discuss the substitute together with the original bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the substitute offered by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HOWARD].

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 12796) to provide for the removal of the Botanic Garden to Potomac Park and for its transfer to the control of the Department of Agriculture.

Be it enacted, etc., That for the purpose of establishing and maintaining a national arboretum and botanical garden in Potomac Park the Botanic Garden is hereby transferred from the direction and control of the Joint Committee on the Library to the direction and control of the Secretary of Agriculture, and he is authorized to remove to Potomac Park the plants, structures, and all that pertains to the Botanic Garden in its present location.

SEC. 2. That so much of Potomac Park, east of Washington & Southern Railway, as may be needed for the purposes of an arboretum and botanic garden is hereby transferred from the joint direction and control of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia and the Chief of Engineers of the United States Army to the direction and control of the Secretary of Agriculture.

SEC. 3. That the chairman of the Senate Committee on the Library and the chairman of the House Committee on the Library, the Secretary of Agriculture, and the Engineer Commissioner of the District of Columbia shall select and cause to be surveyed that portion of Potomac Park as may be necessary and set same apart for a botanic garden and arboretum.

SEC. 4. That all unexpended appropriations in relation to the Botanic Garden which shall be available at the time this act takes effect shall be available for expenditure for the transfer of the Botanic Garden to the new site and for other purposes incident to its removal and maintenance.

SEC. 5. That all laws or parts of laws not consistent with or that are repugnant to this act are hereby repealed.

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Chairman, I would like for the Chair to notify me when I have consumed 10 minutes.

Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, the only difference now between us upon the question of the removal of the Botanic Garden is the location of the garden and the acreage necessary to be used in a botanic garden. Now, there are certain questions that I want to present to you, consuming as little time as it is possible for me to consume, relative to the removal of this garden.

In the first place, 400 acres for a botanic garden is absolutely preposterous. Now, if you are going to establish a ranch for raising cattle or sheep, there might be some excuse in taking 400 acres. Now, let me tell you what it means to take out of Rock Creek Park 400 acres for this Botanic Garden, and if I can get the attention of gentlemen on the floor of this House relative to the situation as it now stands I feel absolutely assured that this bill will not pass in its present state. For instance, to take 400 acres of Rock Creek Park out of the park and appropriate it for this Botanic Garden means this—and, Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, I promise you that I will not impose upon your good nature beyond a very short time.

Mr. MILLER. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. HOWARD. Yes.

Mr. MILLER. Can the gentleman inform the committee about how many acres are in the Potomac Park east of the Southern Railroad bridge?

Mr. HOWARD. I was down there yesterday, and, according to Georgia acreage, I would say that from the east side of what they call the Long Bridge down to the point at the War College, taking into consideration the width of it, there are at least 125 acres. That is my guess.

Mr. MILLER. I asked if the gentleman had taken into consideration the advisability of including in the proposed Botanic Garden all that part of Potomac Park now east of the stone bridge over the lagoon, a region that is now utilized by the Department of Agriculture, as I am informed, as a nursery for the propagation of plants and shrubs and for experimentation with the growth of various kinds of plants and shrubs?

Mr. HOWARD. That very question was discussed here, I will say to the gentleman from Minnesota, the other day, and several gentlemen took the position that this particular portion of Potomac Park was unsuited for a botanic garden.

I stated then that, so far as I could ascertain, all sorts of shrubs and trees were now being grown down there, either in nursery rows or for propagation, I do not know which. But they are there. Now, my substitute for the original bill simply provides that they shall use so much of this particular portion of Potomac Park as may be necessary for usage as a botanic garden.

Now, let us get back to the practical situation. I said the other day that this removal of the Botanic Garden would eventually cost the taxpayers of this country millions of dollars, and my friend from Illinois [Mr. MANN] seemed to hoot at the idea. Now, let me tell you what is behind this whole business; I mean what will be the ultimate result of the removal of this Botanic Garden from its present location to Rock Creek Park. In the first place they want to take out of Rock Creek Park the enormous acreage of 400 acres. Now, every practical man on the floor of this House knows that it is an absolute impossibility, unless the Government of the United States wants to expend millions and millions of dollars, to consume 400 acres in what we might call a botanic garden. It is preposterous to think of the use of 400 acres for that purpose.

But there is another proposition. In that 400 acres now proposed to be taken out of Rock Creek Park there are several miles of fine roads, the present expense of which is equally divided between the District of Columbia and the United States Government on the half-and-half plan. The minute the 400 acres are removed from Rock Creek Park and exclusive jurisdiction thereof is given to the United States Government over that 400 acres, then Uncle Sam, and not the District of Columbia, will pay for the entire maintenance of all those roads out there.

Now, I said the other day—and I do not desire to cast any undue reflection on what they call the Fine Arts Commission—that 75 per cent of that commission live in the districts of the gentlemen from Massachusetts. The other 25 per cent live in the State of New York. They have no fixed interest in the District of Columbia. They do not care anything about the expense incident to the removal of statues or the placing of statues, or the confiscation of private property to the public use, or what the cost of it is. They are not interested in the District of Columbia.

Now, let us see. I want to give you gentlemen one illustration of the business sagacity and the fine art of selection that these gentlemen have indulged in in years past. Take this magnificent National Museum down here. How many millions of dollars went into that magnificent building I do not know. I have never been able to ascertain. But what did they do in the selection of a site whereon to place that building? They went back there behind the old markets. They picked out the most unsightly place in Washington. They put it behind a lot of buildings that front on Pennsylvania Avenue, which I venture the assertion have not paid 2 per cent on the money invested in them.

Mr. COX. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. HOWARD. Yes.

Mr. COX. Does not the gentleman think that this will likely occur if this bill passes and 400 acres are granted for this purpose, that in a very few years a powerful pressure will be brought to bear upon Congress—"Oh, the Rock Creek Park is not large enough; you have got to buy more land"?

Mr. HOWARD. I believe that is what will be done, but I am now discussing present plans. Let me finish about the National Museum Building. They put that magnificent building down there in the back yard of these ramshackle old buildings. For what purpose? For only one purpose on the face of the earth, and that was to force Congress to buy all the property in front of those buildings at exorbitant prices and build a beautiful park running out and abutting on Pennsylvania Avenue. That is what it was done for. There was no other reason on earth, because the only justification for putting that building where they did put it was that they had assurances that in the future they could make it look at least like the respectable sections of the city of Washington by purchasing this property on the Avenue at outrageous prices to the Government.

Now, what else? I say when you withdraw 400 acres of land from Rock Creek Park you place upon the Federal Government the burden of maintaining all the roads and bridges and all the appurtenances necessary for transportation through that park.

But that is not all. When I say the expenses incident to the removal of this park would amount to millions, I mean exactly what I say, and I am going to demonstrate it to you. I will put it in the RECORD, and salt it down for future consumption, that in less than two years after we do this and place the Botanic Garden in Rock Creek Park a concentrated effort will be made in Congress to extend Sixteenth Street to the Military Road. "Oh," but they will say to the committee, "we are obliged to extend Sixteenth Street, because that is the most available way to get to this magnificent Botanic Garden." But, incidentally, when the Government is expending its hundreds of thousands of dollars in extending Sixteenth Street you are enhancing the private property of a crowd of real-estate speculators to the extent of from 50 to 150 per cent. Then they want to say to us, "Pick up the Botanic Garden and move it."

It has been made fun of here on the floor of the House. One gentleman went so far as to say he could carry off everything of value down there in a crocus sack on his back.

The CHAIRMAN. In accordance with the gentleman's request, the Chair will remind him that he has consumed 10 minutes.

Mr. HOWARD. Very well. I yield myself five minutes more, Mr. Chairman, if you please.

Now, let us see what they have got down here and what they are going to do with it when they get it out there. They have got down there now as a nucleus to start with about 5 acres; yet they want 400 acres. I say they will be asking for double and treble the appropriations that they have asked for in the past, and that all these things I have mentioned will be incident to it.

Mr. HAY. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. HOWARD. With pleasure.

Mr. HAY. What is the area of the largest botanic garden of which the gentleman has any knowledge?

Mr. HOWARD. I am not certain, but I believe it to be about 150 acres

Mr. SLAYDEN. If the gentleman will permit me, I have a list of them here.

Mr. HOWARD. I wish the gentleman would give the gentleman from Virginia the information. I saw a statement of them the other day, and I thought about 150 acres was the largest.

Mr. SLAYDEN. One belonging to the Dutch Government has an area of 336 acres.

Mr. HOWARD. That is the largest one in the world, is it not?

Mr. SLAYDEN. I see that there is one of 394 acres.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Chairman, it is impossible to hear the conversation going on over there.

Mr. SLAYDEN. The gentleman is asking the size of the various botanic gardens in the world.

Mr. COOPER. Will the gentleman please repeat his statement? Nobody could hear it.

Mr. SLAYDEN. The botanic garden of the Dutch Government is 336 acres. The Royal Botanic Garden at Kew, near London, contains 260 acres. The Arnold Arboretum at Boston contains 220 acres, and in conjunction with it is a farm which is used for a botanic garden, I am told, which contains 394 acres. The New York Botanic Garden contains 250 acres.

Mr. BURNETT. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. HOWARD. Yes.

Mr. BURNETT. In all these gardens a certain part of the area is used for propagation purposes. Now, is it not true that we have propagating gardens somewhere else, and that it is not intended to create a propagation garden if the Botanic Garden is moved elsewhere?

Mr. SLAYDEN. I have no such purpose in mind.

Mr. BURNETT. Is it not a fact that we have propagating gardens elsewhere?

Mr. HOWARD. I understand that to be a fact.

Mr. BURNETT. And this garden down here is a mere ornament, and that is about all it will be, if it is removed to Rock Creek Park.

Mr. HOWARD. Yes.

Mr. BURNETT. Why not keep the ornament down here, then?

Mr. HOWARD. I want to discuss that.

Mr. SPARKMAN. What is the acreage of Rock Creek Park?

Mr. HOWARD. I understand it is 2,200 acres.

Now, Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, one other suggestion and I am done for the present. The question of isolation of the upper end of Rock Creek Park is another question that I think we ought to discuss.

Mr. COOPER. Will the gentleman yield for one question?

Mr. HOWARD. With pleasure.

Mr. COOPER. The gentleman remembers that in the last Congress, or perhaps in the preceding session of this Congress, the House unanimously voted to permit the ladies to erect the George Washington Memorial Hall, on the site of the old Pennsylvania Station, in the Mall.

Mr. HOWARD. Yes; I remember that.

Mr. COOPER. A bill providing for that was introduced by the distinguished gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD], and every man in the House, Republican and Democrat, voted for it. It became a law. That bill expressly provides that the south front of the George Washington Memorial Hall must be on a line with the south front of the museum about which the gentleman spoke. This requirement is in accord with the plans of the Fine Arts Commission for the beautification of Washington. The gentleman from Georgia himself voted for the bill. There was no real estate speculation about that.

Mr. HOWARD. And I presume when the Washington Memorial is constructed on the site of the old Pennsylvania Station they will want to buy the St. James Hotel and the Howard House on the opposite corners, so that they can have plenty of width to see the Washington Memorial. That is usually the way they do things in Washington.

But I am coming to the question of the isolation of this park. They want to get away in the northwest corner of Rock Creek Park. They want to locate the Botanic Garden there. I said the other day that it was absolutely impossible to reach that particular part of Rock Creek Park conveniently by street car transportation, by the Democratic way of riding, and I still maintain that the nearest point to the northwest part of Rock Creek Park that can be reached by street car service is nearly a mile.

Mr. THACHER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOWARD. Yes.

Mr. THACHER. Has the gentleman been out there on the trolley car? How did he get there?

Mr. HOWARD. When I do not walk I ride, the nearest way I can get to it.

Mr. THACHER. I think the gentleman ought to be fair.

Mr. HOWARD. I live very near Rock Creek Park. I live on Ontario Road, and as a rule I walk down there.

Mr. THACHER. Does not the gentleman know that he can take the Piney Branch car on the Fourteenth Street line, which stops at the circle that is about a block away from the reservoir?

Mr. HOWARD. But the gentleman will admit that you have not picked out any particular 400 acres. Now, suppose you pick it out where you say you are going to pick it out, where these vacant fields are that are being cultivated, where the new-mown hay is that the gentleman smelled out there, and all that. I say you can not pick out 400 acres, unless you do it in a strip entirely across the north end of that park, that will bring the general public nearer than a mile from a street car line.

Mr. DAVIS. Will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. HOWARD. Certainly.

Mr. DAVIS. The gentleman has laid a great deal of stress on the keeping of Rock Creek Park in repair. Does the gentleman know what the expense is annually and the amount contained in the last appropriation bill for that purpose?

Mr. HOWARD. I do not.

Mr. DAVIS. It is $18,000; and does the gentleman know that a very little of that is applied to the roads in Rock Creek Park, and that the annual expense of keeping the roads in the 400 acres in repair would not exceed $500 or $1,000 per annum? I will inform the gentleman that those are the facts.

Mr. HOWARD. Will the gentleman please give me some idea of what the construction of those magnificent roads originally cost?

Mr. DAVIS. The gentleman said that the total cost would fall upon the Government.

Mr. HOWARD. Yes; every cent in these 400 acres.

Mr. DAVIS. It is a very small amount.

Mr. HOWARD. That would be true if the Government simply maintained the roads that are already there.

Mr. DAVIS. But you limited yourself to the extent of keeping the roads in repair.

Mr. HOWARD. There is a great deal of difference between the District of Columbia having to pay one half of the cost and a poor old man—the people—the other half.

Mr. DAVIS. Which would not amount to a thousand dollars, if the Government kept all of the roads on this 400 acres.

Mr. HOWARD. Those roads in Rock Creek Park cost not one cent less than $10,000 a mile to construct.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Georgia has again expired.

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Chairman, I have been interrupted so much that I will have to yield myself five minutes more.

Mr. DAVIS. Will the gentleman yield for just one more question?

Mr. HOWARD. Yes.

Mr. DAVIS. I want to ask the gentleman if he thinks the United States Government ought to maintain a botanic garden at all?

Mr. HOWARD. I think if they are going to maintain one they ought to maintain one upon conservative and economic lines, and not a foolhardy proposition to go out here and incorporate the whole face of the earth into a botanic garden.

Mr. DAVIS. Is the gentleman satisfied with the present botanic garden?

Mr. HOWARD. Perfectly so.

Mr. DAVIS. Very well; that is all I want to know. I desired to ascertain the gentleman's views as to what constitutes a suitable botanic garden for this great country.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOWARD. Yes.

Mr. HAY. The gentleman is aware of the fact that the Agricultural Department controls 1,500 acres of land out at Arlington?

Mr. HOWARD. I am.

Mr. HAY. In the Arlington reservation, which is easily accessible and has a fine military road leading to it. I want to ask the gentleman if it has occurred to him that there is a large portion of those 1,500 acres which is not now utilized, and that the Botanic Garden could be moved there, if it is to moved anywhere?

Mr. HOWARD. It could be. That is another admirable place to put it; but the reason I suggested Potomac Park is this: This present strip of land that I have in view for the location of the Botanic Garden is now unsightly. The Government will have to spend much more money and will spend large sums of money in its improvement.

While they are spending this large sum of money to beautify this undeveloped part of Potomac Park, why not spend the money for the purpose of establishing down there the Botanic Garden, where it will be accessible to your constituents and to my constituents when they come here and want to go and see the Botanic Garden? All that they would have to do would be to get on a street car at the corner of Fifteenth Street and Pennsylvania Avenue and go down on this street car line for a nickle and see the park without any inconvenience.

Mr. CARAWAY. But that would not benefit the street car line running out there to the circle if it was put in Potomac Park.

Mr. HOWARD. Not at all. It would not benefit the street car line running out that way. But, I say, give me one good reason why we should mar the beauty of Rock Creek Park that is so sacred to many of these people in Washington and to so many Members of this House. For years they have tried to sell the Government 400 acres for that Rock Creek Park, and they tumbled in price from the original offer to the Government at $100,000 a clip, and every year they have tumbled in price from $50,000 to $75,000; and finally the Government purchased the 400 acres of land and added it to the park, and my distinguished friend from Tennessee [Mr. SIMS] lost hours of sleep, and I am informed that he became almost a nervous wreck fighting these real estate owners that tried to sell the Government these 400 acres of land at an exorbitant price.

And now it is proposed by Congress after years of fighting over the acquisition of these 400 acres, after it was said to be absolutely necessary that it should be a part of Rock Creek Park, that it was essential to its everlasting beauty, that if we did not get it we would never get it, that now is the accepted time, I say now, after we have got it, it is proposed to take it away and make a botanic garden out of it. Do not you know, gentlemen of the committee, that as soon as you take it away from them you will find that they are like the nigger baby with the hookworm—they can not be satisfied, and they will be crying for 400 acres more?

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOWARD. Yes.

Mr. COOPER. Permit me to suggest to the gentleman that he is entirely mistaken about the 400 acres being the same as the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. SIMS] talks about, because they are not the same at all.

Mr. HOWARD. I am not conversant with all of the facts, but I know that 400 acres were involved, and I know that my good friend SIMS appeared in the RECORD more than once fighting the acquisition of that land. Where it is located I do not know, and the gentleman from Wisconsin will not deny the fact that they decreased their original price nearly 50 per cent from what they originally offered it to the Government for.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOWARD. Yes.

Mr. COOPER. One of the greatest wrongs ever done by this House was permitting to go unrebuked the accusation that the land for the proposed extension of Rock Creek Park was first offered at $600,000 and then reduced to $423,000. In a speech I called attention to the fact that there was no such reduction made in the price of that land and that the attack on Mr. Glover for making such alleged reduction was absolutely without justification in fact. The House ought not to have permitted that accusation to go unrebuked.

Mr. HOWARD. Oh, I can not yield for a speech.

Mr. COOPER. But the gentleman is reiterating a baseless slander against an innocent man.

Mr. HOWARD. I am glad that the gentleman has corrected me, because I have mentioned no individual. I have mentioned what appeared in the RECORD. It is in the RECORD, and if the RECORD of this Congress—and the gentleman has been here a long time—can not be relied upon for information, in the name of God where can we go to get accurate information about the deliberations of this body? [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Georgia has again expired.

Mr. HOWARD. I will yield myself two minutes more.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOWARD. I refuse to yield, because I want to answer the gentleman's question—not his question, but his speech. Mr. Chairman, they brought in the question of baseless statements about prices for real estate. I made no statement about any individual. I do not know any of those who attempted to extract exorbitant prices from this Government for real estate, but I do know, and the gentleman from Wisconsin knows, and every gentleman upon the floor of this House knows, that when the Government of the United States attempts to do anything around the District of Columbia the people who are mostly benefited by that beneficent work try most to exact and drive the hardest bargains.

Mr. HULINGS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOWARD. Yes.

Mr. HULINGS. Will the gentleman inform the House whether the anticipated cost of this transfer has been arranged for in the new bill that is to come in here for additional taxation?

Mr. HOWARD. I do not know. Now, the gentleman from Wisconsin says that I have repeated a baseless slander. Why, it was charged in the campaign in my State, upon authority of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, that certain people have been mixed up in this Rock Creek proposition, that it seethed with rottenness to the extent that the man in the moon had to hold his nose when he came over Rock Creek Park, on account of what was attempted to be done here on that particular proposition. Talk about a baseless slander. There are some folks in this country you can not slander. People who attempted to pocket an unjust profit of $200,000 from the pockets of the taxpayers of this country you can not slander.

Now, Mr. Chairman, in conclusion for the present, I do not know what the gentleman from Wisconsin might say, but I say that this is the most useless expenditure of the people's money. They are putting it out there where nobody can see it. They have got land available within the sight of this Capitol, a magnificent piece of land that can be improved, and one of the most beautiful botanic gardens in the country or in the world can be made down there. Why not do it? Why go out here and give these people an opportunity again? [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, how much time has the gentleman from Georgia used?

The CHAIRMAN. Twenty-two minutes.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. SIMS.]

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Chairman, there is no use in getting excited or heated up about a thing of this sort. We ought to look at it from the standpoint of the country's good, that is the only thing that ought to be considered. Now, I am not discussing the question of whether or not the Botanic Garden is to be moved from where it is now located. I suppose that is settled. I have not studied with reference to whether it should be moved or not; but I am taking for granted that that question is settled. Now, we have a bill brought in by the committee which has jurisdiction of this subject and has thoroughly investigated this matter and it has had the aid of experts, gentlemen who are supposed to have no feeling and no private interest to serve, but who look at it from the standpoint of expert knowledge. These gentlemen have said that the place to reestablish the Botanic Garden is a section of land now embraced within the boundaries of Rock Creek Park. They give their reasons in detail why that is a good place for the garden. I do not know how to compare it with the place which is spoken of down on the Potomac River, which is a low, level, flat country. There is no proposition pending unless by way of a substitute to establish it there.

Mr. BURNETT. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. SIMS. Certainly.

Mr. BURNETT. Did not some of the same experts work on this thing when the gentleman was a Member of the District Committee, and who advised the acquisition of this land out there?

Mr. SIMS. I can not remember whether that is true or not. But the gentleman from Georgia is wholly mistaken in one thing, and that is that there was 400 acres of land acquired by anybody for Rock Creek Park. There was a bill pending here for a great many years to acquire 100 acres—as I remember, ninety-nine and some odd acres—which, no doubt, is the tract the gentleman has in mind——

Mr. HOWARD. What is the price?

Mr. SIMS. Which was just above where Massachusetts Avenue crosses Rock Creek and lying out toward where there is a school, and widened out at that end, but narrowed toward Rock Creek; and it is said that it was sought to be a part of Rock Creek Park, but Rock Creek Park proper is a mile or more from that place, and the whole Zoological Park lies between this proposed acquisition and Rock Creek Park.

Mr. HOWARD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SIMS. Yes.

Mr. HOWARD. Some of these bills were introduced by my distinguished predecessor. Now, is it not a fact that in each one of those bills every year the price was materially reduced in each bill as to the amount asked in the appropriation for the acquisition of the land?

Mr. SIMS. As to the 98 or 99 acres lying just above Massachusetts Avenue and below Connecticut Avenue, narrowing toward the creek and widening out in the hill part, I do not really know who introduced the first bill. I do not remember whether there were any separate bills or not, but it had no physical connection whatever with Rock Creek Park, the entire Zoological Garden of 2,200 or 2,300 acres lies between this strip and Rock Creek Park, and I thought at the time when it was proposed and talked about in connection with Rock Creek Park that it was to furnish some excuse for acquiring it. Now, this part where the Botanic Garden is to be located is some place at least 2 or 3 miles away from this so-called addition to Rock Creek Park, and never has been acquired and never will be for that purpose.

Mr. HOWARD. Was all the original 2,200 acres acquired at one time for the park?

Mr. SIMS. I do not remember——

Mr. HOWARD. Does the gentleman mean to convey to the House the proposition that at no time a specified tract of 400 acres was acquired?

Mr. SIMS. I do not know what tract the gentleman refers to, but the tract he called my name in connection with at one time was the 100 acres which is at least a mile away from Rock Creek Park. Now, in reference to the place where the Botanic Garden is to be located under this bill, I went out there and looked at the ground in company with the gentleman from Missouri, Dr. BARTHOLDT.

The ground is hill and valley, some of it agricultural land, and if it is beautified for any purpose it will require an expenditure of money. Now, the locating of the Botanic Garden, as it is called, upon that land would absolutely have no effect, so far as detracting from it as a park feature is concerned. It is wholly consistent with it and harmonizes with it. They will simply require some additions to it by way of shrubs and plants, if made into a botanic garden, that perhaps would not be put there merely for park purposes. It is now a park, and those fields have nothing on them, and when they have to be utilized for park purposes will have to be reforested with trees of some kind. This is Government land. We already own it. It requires no expenditure of money to acquire the land, and it can be treated so as to harmonize it with the further improvement of the park. The roadways, driveways, and pathways, if any are there, and everything connected with a park as a park will remain after it is utilized for a botanic garden.

Mr. BLACKMON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SIMS. I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. BLACKMON. If this proposition should go through, would it remove the Botanic Garden down on the Avenue that we now have?

Mr. SIMS. I understand the object of the bill is to take many of the plants and shrubs that are down here in our so-called Botanic Garden and place them within this 400 acres of land to be used for a botanic garden.

Mr. BLACKMON. One other question, if the gentleman will kindly permit. Is there any provision made in this bill for making it possible for the people who come here to visit the Botanic Garden when it is moved out to Rock Creek Park?

Mr. SIMS. I have never seen a bill in Congress that provided means for people to travel to any particular improvement within the District of Columbia at public expense or otherwise.

There is a street car line called the Fourteenth Street car line, double track, underground trolley, that runs out near the reservoir, perhaps not more than a block or so, and the reservation on which the reservoir is placed is Government property and, I am informed, joins Rock Creek Park; so that the means of going to this Botanic Garden will be at present, if no other roads are built, on the Fourteenth Street double track, underground trolley line, that will carry the people within a block or two—I do not know just where this garden will be located with reference to the car line.

Mr. BLACKMON. I was sure that by legislation you would not provide means for the general public to get out to this particular place, but what I wanted to know was whether or not it would be accessible to the general public coming here if it was removed to Rock Creek Park?

Mr. SIMS. It will be accessible to the extent of the Fourteenth Street car line. I have been informed, although I do not know how reliably, that there is another line to be built that will carry them even nearer.

Every effort we have made in this House to build a trolley car line to Rock Creek Park in order that the common people, like we assume to be, can go out there has been opposed most bitterly in this House by the gentlemen who want to hold that place as sacred to those only who have automobiles or other means of vehicle travel to get to it.

Mr. HOWARD. Will the gentleman yield right there?

Mr. SIMS. Yes.

Mr. HOWARD. We own the Potomac Park property. For the very reason that only those who can take automobiles can reach it, they propose to put this beautiful Botanic Garden out at Rock Creek Park.

Mr. SIMS. The people can reach it with the existing street car lines. I have not said much about this property down here on the Potomac River, because I know but little about it. I assume that it is better to move it where it will harmonize with existing plans of improvement than to move it to where there is no park, and not suitable, according to the opinions of experts who are qualified on this subject, simply to keep what they call Rock Creek Park intact, and especially a portion of that park that has not been yet thought necessary to improve as a park.

Mr. SLAYDEN. As a matter of fact, do not the street cars go nearer to the site that is supposed to be selected in Rock Creek Park than they do to the proposed site in Potomac Park?

Mr. SIMS. I do not know of any street car lines that go nearer to Potomac Park, but there may be.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. SIMS. I would like to do so, but my time has been occupied largely with questions that have been asked me and not much with my answers.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Crockett, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed with amendment the bill (H. R. 18202) to provide for the admission of foreign-built ships of American registry for the foreign trade, and for other purposes, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed bill of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 3342. An act for the enlargement, and so forth, of the Wall Street front of the assay office in the city of New York.

The message also announced that the Senate had insisted upon its amendment to the bill (H. R. 4403) for the relief of Frederick J. Ernst, disagreed to by the House of Representatives, had agreed to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. BRYAN, Mr. WHITE, and Mr. STERLING as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

REMOVAL OF BOTANIC GARDEN.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, I will ask the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HOWARD] if he wants to use some of his time?

Mr. HOWARD. I will yield five minutes to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BURNETT].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BURNETT] is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Chairman, I know that every member of the Committee on the Library is absolutely sincere and incorruptible, and there is not one of them who, in my judgment, would give his support to a proposition merely for the purpose of benefiting any real estate scheme. Yet there is no doubt in my mind but that the result of this proposition would be the enhancement of real estate in the hands of certain people, and that those who have started this agitation want to forward some real estate interests.

It looks like it might be a fight between two real estate interests. I do not believe, so far as I am concerned, that there is any necessity for removing the Botanic Garden from its present location. The Grant statue will have plenty of room down there, and then they can cut off enough to make a conservatory where the people may see the beauties of the Botanic Gardens without having to go miles to see it. All who are familiar with these matters know that the Government has established its propagating gardens at another place. If the Botanic Garden is moved, why not have it located so that our constituents, some of whom may come here from a distance of a thousand miles, can have an opportunity to look at these beauties that the Government has prepared to exhibit to them? If we move it, let it be placed down in Potomac Park, and not hidden from the view of people who are taxed to keep it up.

I have never been a member of one of the committees having charge of the park extensions, and have had very little knowledge of those who are trying to ply these real estate schemes; but last winter, when some thought that I would perhaps be chairman of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, inasmuch as I was the ranking member of that committee after Mr. SHEPPARD, of Texas, left the House, one of the people who owns large real estate in the direction of Rock Creek Park telephoned to me one day. I had never met the party before.

The party asked myself and my wife to take an automobile ride. I said, "All right, we will go"; and just before we left the hotel I said to my wife, "There is something in this which I do not understand. They are looking out for suckers, evidently, and perhaps I am one that they think they can play."

As soon as we were in the automobile the party began talking about the purchase of a splendid mansion for the Vice President's home that the party had just constructed. I said at the outset: "I will not be chairman of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, because I already have a chairmanship which, I think, is more important." I also stated that I was opposed to buying a home for the Vice President. However, we went out to Rock Creek Park, and when we got there this party began talking about how important it was that the Botanic Garden should be moved out there. When it was found that I was not being interested by the plea for the purchase of a home for the Vice President nor in the removal of the Botanic Garden the party lost interest in me at once.

Mr. Chairman, are we to follow every one of these real estate schemes that are put up to Congress? Why not locate this Botanic Garden down in Potomac Park, if it is to be moved? It is only a mile down there, and accessible to anybody who comes here and stops in the central part of the city. Why should we be the champions—innocent, perhaps—of every one of these propagandists who have been working the city of Washington and bleeding the Government for 40 years? Ever since I came here, 16 years ago, I have been hearing of these same schemes; and now, Mr. Chairman, it seems here is another one.

This is Government property that is asked to be taken, but it is property which, if improved, will greatly enhance the value of somebody else's adjoining property. Why not utilize the ground we already have in Potomac Park? Or why not do what seems to me to be the reasonable thing—retain the present Botanic Gardens as an ornament, not attempting to keep up the propagating gardens there? We have land over in Virginia, where the Government farm is, and much of that land could easily be devoted to this purpose. Why should we become parties to the schemes of either one of these great conflicting and jealous-hearted groups of real estate owners?

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield there?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Alabama yield to the gentleman from Texas?

Mr. BURNETT. Yes; with pleasure.

Mr. SLAYDEN. I wish to ask the gentleman from Alabama if he does not know that the purpose of a botanic garden is not necessarily ornamental, but that in addition to the ornamental features of it, it is presumed to have, and in other parts of the world does have, a useful function in the development of plants for drugs and for use in the pharmacopœia, and that it would be impossible to do that sort of thing on the limited area down here? Moreover, Congress has decreed by act that the fence shall be removed, and the Botanic Garden necessarily would have to go to some place where the plants would be protected.

Mr. BURNETT. Protected from what, Mr. Chairman?

Mr. SLAYDEN. It is not merely an ornament.

Mr. BURNETT. We have the propagating grounds already at another place. Is there any reason, economic or otherwise, why the propagating features of the Botanic Garden should be in exactly the same locality as the ornamental part of the garden? I think not.

The gentlemen supporting this bill would spend hundreds of thousands of dollars to remove the propagating gardens that we already have established, Mr. Chairman, to a place which would mean hiding it from the view of our constituents who come here and want to see the beauties of Washington and the beauties that Uncle Sam has prepared for them. At the same time that we vote for this bill we play into the hands of some real estate sharks, who think this Government is run to fill their greedy tills. [Applause.]

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Chairman, I want to use sufficient time to place in the RECORD a certain statement in reply to a statement that the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. COOPER] thought proper to make a moment ago, that I made a baseless and unfounded statement, and that it was or was not mine. I want to put in the RECORD an extract from a certain debate that took place on the floor of the House on March 3, 1909, when the discussion of the act for the acquisition of additional land for Rock Creek Park took place. It is to be found on page 3292 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of March 3, 1909. Mr. ANDRUS, of New York, was speaking, and here is what he said:

Mr. Speaker, I have had some experience, having bought a few lots during my life, and I found the assessors' value, as a rule, a pretty good criterion on which to act. On March 30, 1906, evidently a conscience was pricked, and a bill—H. R. 5102—was introduced for $550,000—$50,000 less. On February 16, 1907, conferees of the House and the Senate came to an agreement of $475,000, but it was not satisfactory to the House Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, and the matter dropped with the expiration of the Fifty-ninth Congress.

The thing took on new life, and on January 27, 1908, the bill S. 4441 was reported for $423,000—a gradual coming down. That bill went directly to one of the appropriation committees, and on May 26 last, under a suspension of the rules, it was defeated by a vote of 57 for and 164 against.

Mr. NORRIS. That was this same bill?

Mr. ANDRUS. This same bill that is brought up to-day. Now, what have the Government and the people lost in these three years? We are talking now about $423,000 as against $600,000 three years ago, a saving to some one of $177,000. The interest on $600,000 for three years at 2 per cent is $36,000. It makes a total of $213,000. It may be a small sum in this House, but, Mr. Chairman, there are 10,000 boys in my district who would be exceedingly happy if in a legitimate way they could make that money in three years. [Applause.]

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Chairman, I ask that I have an opportunity to reply to the speech of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HOWARD].

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. COOPER. I rise to reply to the gentleman from Georgia.

The CHAIRMAN. From whom does the gentleman get time?

Mr. COOPER. Can I get time from the gentleman from Texas?

Mr. SLAYDEN. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. COOPER].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. COOPER] is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Chairman, I want to tell my good friend from Georgia [Mr. HOWARD], who is usually fair-minded, that for him to quote a baseless statement does not fortify his original wrongful position. The gentleman whom he quoted, Mr. Andrus, made a mistaken statement, devoid of facts to support it, and on the 9th of May, 1913, I brought the mistake to the attention of the House.

One of the troubles in debate is the superficial way in which men sometimes investigate. It was a very careless, superficial investigation which caused Mr. Andrus to make a mistaken charge against the character of a resident of this city. He asserted that $600,000 was asked for a certain piece of property to add to Rock Creek Park, but that a gradual reduction in the price was made, because, as Mr. Andrus alleged, "a conscience was pricked," until the price was brought down to $423,000. Now, that statement was an inexcusable blunder. Here is the way Mr. Glover disposed of it, before a committee of the House, under oath:

Mr. Chairman, the statement that I offered that property to the Congress of the United States at $600,000; that I was pricked by conscience and reduced the sum to $550,000; that it was embodied in any bill by my authority at $475,000; or, as Mr. SIMS says, is now before the House at $435,000, is an unqualified falsehood. I never offered the property save at the one single price of $420,000, plus the $3,000 added by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia.

As that charge stands, I can well understand why Maj. Judson has had to defend my character before some Members of the House. It leaves me, instead of being a public-spirited citizen, a man with an option on a piece of property at $420,000 endeavoring to palm it off on the Government of the United States at $600,000.

I do not believe, Mr. Chairman, that these gentlemen intended to make an untrue statement, but the bill was before them. Here is the identical bill, and the last clause of that bill says that the price of that land was $432,000.

It was one of the most valuable pieces of property that could, under any conceivable circumstances, have been bought by the Government of the United States, beautiful in its magnificent woodland and its splendid springs, and with the pieces of property already owned by the Government of the United States it would have given about 4,000 feet front from Rock Creek to Thirty-fourth Street on that magnificent avenue.

This property to-day is selling somewhere from about two to four millions of dollars. It is selling from 60 to 75 to 90 cents, or nearly a dollar, per square foot. And I think very much more than that is asked for some of it. It was one of those mistakes which can never be rectified. It has already been laid out in streets and a large sum expended in its improvement. But it is rather an unfair advantage to take of a man who can not get before the House of Representatives to make a statement that could so easily be disproved by the gentleman who refers to the very bill itself that calls for not $600,000 or $435,000 or $550,000, or any other sum, but the exact sum that I offered this property to the Government at all three of the sessions that it was before the Congress of the United States.

Mr. Chairman, I called the attention of the House to the fact that it was Meridian Hill property which was offered at $600,000, and later gradually reduced in price to $423,000, but that the proposed addition to Rock Creek Park was never offered except at one price, $420,000. Mr. Glover never had any interest whatever in the Meridian Hill property.

Those are the facts.

Now, I hope that my friend from Georgia [Mr. HOWARD] will not consider that he has strengthened his original statement any by the baseless quotation which he has made. He has not fortified himself any by merely quoting from another gentleman whose statement was equally devoid of facts to support it. I investigated this matter thoroughly, got an opportunity to extend my remarks in the RECORD, and after weeks of investigation printed a speech which appears in the appendix in volume 50, part 7, first session, Sixty-third Congress, and called attention to the fact that this mistake was made and a great wrong done to an innocent man. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Does the gentleman from Georgia wish to occupy the floor?

Mr. HOWARD. I will ask the gentleman from Texas to yield some of his time.

Mr. SLAYDEN. I yield to the gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN] 10 minutes.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HOWARD] and the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BURNETT] are of the opinion that the present Botanic Garden is sufficient for the needs of this country. There is not a capital in the world of any consequence that has not an infinitely better and finer botanic garden than has this capital of what we are pleased constantly to refer to as the greatest Nation on the face of God's footstool. Even the city of Manila, over in the Philippine Islands, has a much larger and a much more beautiful botanic garden than has this Capital of a great Nation. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HOWARD] and the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BURNETT] seem to be of the opinion that the Botanic Garden should be moved down to the Potomac Flats. If such a policy were adopted, it would defeat the very purpose of a botanic garden.

In the first place, the Potomac Flats constitute low-lying ground—made ground. The soil there has been drawn from the bed of the Potomac River by a suction dredge. The whole area down there has been filled in. No one can tell when a freshet on the Potomac will wash it out. Such things have happened, and may happen again. A flood may come along any year and do irreparable damage. Through such a calamity the work of years could easily be destroyed in a few hours. We hope that we will never again have a flood here in the city of Washington, and yet no man can look into the future. A great ice jam in the Potomac at Long Bridge might cause an overflow that would wash out many acres of the low-lying soil along the Potomac River. The soil down there, in fact, is nothing but silt, with neither rocks nor clay to hold it against a great rush of water.

But that is not all. The purpose of a botanic garden is educational as much as anything else. The trees and shrubs and plants are brought from all sections of the world. They are planted for the purpose of observation and study by the botanists and scientists of the country. In order to study them thoroughly they should be planted in soil where the conditions are natural, with rocks, clay, gravel, loam—all of the various conditions that are found in the soil that one finds in this vicinity. The trees must be watched year after year, to find out just what progress they make in this climate and in this soil, which are probably far different from the climate and soil to which they are indigenous.

The high grounds of Rock Creek Park are admirably suited and adaptable to a botanic garden. When the matter was up last Wednesday my friend from Illinois, Mr. BALTZ, stated that in his opinion there is no good soil in that section of the city. As a matter of fact, Rock Creek Park has a magnificent growth of trees. There are few sections of the country that have a more beautiful growth of natural forest, and a botanic garden is largely devoted to the growth of forest trees and shrubbery.

Mr. BALTZ. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KAHN. Certainly.

Mr. BALTZ. Is it the intention of Congress to move the Botanic Garden from where it is now because the soil there is not fitted for a botanic garden?

Mr. KAHN. Not at all. That is not the question involved in this controversy. It is the purpose of Congress to move it because it has outgrown its usefulness in its present location. I merely refer to the fact that the gentleman contended that there was no good soil in that section of the city to emphasize my contention that natural conditions are the best kinds of conditions for a successful botanic garden.

The splendid growth of sycamores, maples, locusts, chestnut, and oak trees that one finds all over Rock Creek Park, and the laurel, dogwood, and other shrubs one finds there show that the soil is admirably suited to the very purpose of a botanic garden. Of course, many of the exotic plants must be propagated and grown in hothouses. That is the case even in the present location.

Mr. BALTZ. Is it not true that the soil is gravelly all through that country?

Mr. KAHN. It does not make any difference what the character of the soil is. It has produced a splendid growth of trees and shrubs, and those are what we want to grow in a botanic garden.

Reference has been made here to some real-estate speculation. I have never heard that any real-estate speculator is interested one way or the other in the removal of this garden from its present location. Certainly, no one has ever spoken to me on the subject. I do not know whether anyone has ever spoken to any Member of the House upon the subject, but Rock Creek Park to-day is nearer the present car lines than the site proposed by my friend from Georgia [Mr. HOWARD].

The walking difference is greater from the Alexandria car line to the location that he would set apart in Potomac Park than it is from the Fourteenth Street car line to Rock Creek Park, up in the northwest section of our city.

Of course, everyone desires to save money for the Government. But it will cost the Government no more to maintain a botanic garden in Rock Creek Park than in Potomac Park. It is idle and misleading to talk of additional expense if the former site be selected. The population of London is proud of its Kew Gardens. The population of the entire United Kingdom is proud of the Kew Gardens, and the population of the entire United States will be proud and should be proud of a proper botanic garden in the city of Washington. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HOWARD], I am afraid, has not traveled far. I doubt whether he has ever seen any other botanic garden than the one here in the city of Washington. I may be mistaken, but from what he said upon this subject on this floor I am satisfied that he has never seen any other than the one in Washington. In my judgment, this Government can well afford to remove this Botanic Garden into Rock Creek Park. That park to-day is worthy of this Capital. Improvements to it by way of a botanic garden worthy of this Nation will make it infinitely more beautiful than it is now. Mr. Chairman, we are building for the ages. Let us have the vision of American statesmen. Let us imagine Washington in its glory a thousand years hence. We must not take a narrow, contracted view of this question. We must look at it in a broad light. That is what the American people expect of us when we legislate for their Capital.

The low lands of the Potomac can play a very important part in the development of this city. To my mind, one of the best uses that those lands could be put to would be the laying out of a golf course for the average citizen who can not afford to belong to some high-priced golf club in order to take a little recreation. It would be well to lay out baseball grounds down there and tennis courts down there. It would be well to lay out a track for the young men who want to race and a gymnasium for those who want to develop their muscles. It ought to be given over to recreation and athletics. Potomac Park would serve an infinitely better purpose for the people of this District and for the people of this country if it were put to some uses of that kind. The District Commissioners have already laid out some tennis courts in one section of those grounds, and they have laid out polo grounds in another section of that park. Those things are useful; they are beneficial.

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KAHN. Yes.

Mr. HOWARD. Will the gentleman please state to the House about what percentage of the people of Washington and of the United States play polo? For the Lord's sake, will he do that?

Mr. KAHN. I do not know what the percentage is, but the mere fact that there is a ground there that enables those who want to play polo to play it to their heart's content is a good thing in my judgment. I do not care how small the percentage may be of those who play. The grounds are there for all those who want to take advantage of them. The numbers who avail themselves of the opportunity do not count with me. I know they are used for that purpose, and the players afford entertainment and enjoyment to hundreds of interested spectators.

Mr. Chairman, I do not suppose there is a single city in this Union that has the good fortune to possess a large park that has not experienced all kinds of difficulties in securing the necessary appropriations for its purchase and the necessary legislation for its maintenance. And yet, what city would part with its park system after it once has been established? When Central Park was laid out in New York City, it was considered far out of town. To-day it is in the very heart of that magnificent metropolis, a pleasure to thousands of its citizens, a pride to all its inhabitants.

Some 20 years ago the city of London purchased an area of superb beech trees known as the "Burnham Beeches." They are probably 20 miles distant from the present center of the British capital. The people of England have simply looked forward. They feel that in the years to come their capital city will be extended to the Burnham Beeches, and that these will make a beautiful park for generations yet unborn. I hope this House will take a broad view of this question. I hope it will make no mistake in the selection of a proper site for a botanic garden that shall be worthy of this great American commonwealth; and, in my humble judgment at least, the Rock Creek Park site is much more desirable for such a garden than the site on the bank of the Potomac River.

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Chairman, I would like to use some time myself in order to reply to something the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. COOPER] has said. I notice that he is now on the floor. I wish to again call the attention of the gentleman from Wisconsin to the record. I have prepared briefs of evidence long enough to have acquired a habit of trying to stick to the record and to state the record accurately. The gentleman has brought in an individual here that I do not know, and upon whom I have cast no reflections. He has attempted to put me in the position of misstating a fact. If the gentleman says that the gentleman from New York, Mr. Andrus, with whom I did not have acquaintance, willfully misstated the truth about this transaction, the gentleman should place in the same category the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. SIMS], the gentleman from Minnesota, Mr. Nye, the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HEFLIN], the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY], and the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BARTHOLDT], because they all stated that great reductions in the price of this land had been made as compared to the original price asked.

Mr. COOPER. The gentleman can also put in that list the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. COOPER]. I voted that way, because I relied upon the gentleman from New York, Mr. Andrus, a member of the District Committee, having the matter in charge. He was mistaken and misled us all, as the facts, on investigation, plainly demonstrate.

Mr. HOWARD. The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. COOPER] is recorded as having voted in the negative.

Mr. COOPER. Surely.

Mr. HOWARD. Now, what are the facts about this. Mr. Nye, of Minnesota, said this, and I want this to go in the RECORD:

> Mr. NYE. Mr. Speaker, if we really want economy, we ought to defeat this bill, because the price of the property has declined $200,000 in the last three years, and if we wait long enough we will get it perhaps for what it is worth. [Laughter.] It has declined $200,000 in a time of the greatest prosperity known in the history of this country. I am opposed to it, for this reason: As a new Member of this House I am appalled at the manner in which legislation is sluiced through here the last minute of the session, legislation which carries millions of dollars, and at the last moment a real-estate scheme is sprung upon us. [Applause.] I am opposed to the bill and I hope it will be beaten more overwhelmingly than it was last session. [Applause.]

Mr. COOPER. Will the gentleman permit an interruption?

Mr. HOWARD. If the gentleman will wait just a second, then I will yield. I read from the report. It is Calendar No. 2811, near the bottom of the third page, says Mr. Andrus, quoting:

> The price named in the bill, $600,000, for about 437,000 square feet of land, or about $1.37 a square foot, is in excess of the estimated value of the land by the board of assessors, their value being $230,000.

Now, that is the record. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BARTHOLDT], whom I see sitting before me, at that time chairman of the great Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, made a statement here, which you will find on page 3792. He corroborated what Mr. Andrus stated about it, and Mr. SIMS corroborated what was stated about it, and Mr. Clayton and Mr. HEFLIN, they all corroborated it. Now, the gentleman from Wisconsin comes in here with the usual method of his, of "shoo, fly; don't bother me, and get out of my way or I will run over you; you do not know what you are talking about," and says I have misrepresented somebody, and Mr. Andrus had before him the report of the committee, and the evidence of Mr. Glover before the committee, which is as follows:

> The CHAIRMAN. How is it, Mr. Glover, with respect to the 88 or 98 acres; would it be possible for you to have the option renewed another year?
> Mr. GLOVER. No, sir; that is out of the question, Mr. TAWNEY. They have assessed this ground at $7,500 an acre. The assessment has gone up tremendously.
> Mr. FITZGERALD. The assessed valuation of it?
> Mr. GLOVER. Yes; they have put it up enormously, and justly so. It is a pretty fine piece of ground. Bell told me the other day that they hardly knew what to do about this thing.
> The CHAIRMAN. You think it would be impossible to renew the option?
> Mr. GLOVER. Absolutely.
> The CHAIRMAN. When will the option expire?
> Mr. GLOVER. With this session of Congress.

It was a question of take it now or never, at $1.37 a square foot, for 437,000 square feet, or forever hold your peace and lose this land, and yet in the face of that record the distinguished gentleman from Wisconsin has got the unmitigated gall to denounce his former colleagues and says I am trying to besmirch the character of a gentleman of this town. I now yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOWLER].

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, I have had my sense of propriety and justice shocked occasionally here on the floor of this House, but I never had it outraged before like the proposition presented in this bill. I am a great lover of nature. I am happier there than anywhere else. When a boy I used to run away from home in order that I might get out and study the birds, bugs, worms, and the flowers. I do not think that there is any man on the floor of this House who appreciates nature any more than I, and I do not think there is any man here who would go any further for the purpose of propagating nature's flowers, plants, and animals than I. Mr. Chairman, the proposition of removing the Botanic Garden over to Rock Creek Park is a mammoth proposition. It is no little affair. The conception of the gentlemen who favor this proposition is much larger than a botanical garden and an arboretum. The cue was sounded by the gentleman from California when he said that they intended to add to it a playground for entertainment. Not only do they expect to add a playground to it, but they expect to add whatever may come up in the future that can be carried by Congress for it. Mr. Chairman, let us see what a botanic garden is—I mean a botanic garden in the sense of the one under consideration. It is a place for the purpose of raising, propagating, and perpetuating flowers and plants for the benefit of Members of Congress, members of the Supreme Court, the President, and his Cabinet. That was the original idea, as we understand, for a national botanic garden, but the definition has been revised of late years, and, in addition to the definition which I have already given, it is for all of those whom I have mentioned and for their special friends and relatives who may call on them for a share in those beauties. That is the botanic garden that we are talking of here to-day, and they call it a national botanic garden. Why, my colleague from Illinois [Mr. MANN], on the floor of this House in the discussion some time ago, said that he was interested in the Botanic Garden because he had been raised in a botanic garden. He further said he was interested in the Botanic Garden because he had visited the one down here so often that every time he went down there he was so familiar that each individual plant and flower in it appeared to say, "Good morning." We are asked now to extend it. Oh, they say that Washington has outgrown the little garden down here where Grant's Monument has been located. Yes; some time in the past encroachments were allowed to be made, and I am not criticizing because that monument is placed there, but undoubtedly the encroachment was made with the design of some men of removing the garden to some other place.

Now, what is the proposition? To put it under the Agricultural Department? Yes. That is the great dumping ground for everything nowadays, a department which was designed for the farmers of this country, a department which is second to none in importance in this country, a department which is needed as much as any other department in this country, and yet is being subordinated to every crank proposition that can be drummed up. Why, this Congress put seismology under one of the branches or bureaus of the Agricultural Department. Now it is proposed to put the Botanic Garden under the direction and control of the Agricultural Department, to take away the means and abilities of those men who are charged by this Government with the high responsibility of making improvements in farming to-day and reduce it to scientific methods. Yes; to take their minds and their ability away from these duties in order that we may build up a botanic garden out in Rock Creek Park, so that the Members of Congress may get more flowers and plants; so that the members of the Supreme Court and their friends can have more flowers and plants; and so that all who have been sharing in these beauties and favors may have an opportunity to spend more for their friends and more for their relatives.

I beg your pardon for using the term "graft," because I want to use it mildly; but it will be one of the greatest graft heritages of future Congresses. Ah, you say that 400 acres will be an addition to Rock Creek Park, if you can provide it with flowers and an arboretum. I warn you now, my colleagues, that if you put that flower bed over there and an arboretum it will be a "money-eatum," running into the millions before we are done with it. Four hundred acres, practicaly as it fell from the plastic hand of nature, must be reclaimed and prepared before flower beds can be planted and cultivated with any success. It will take money to do this, and the extent of the flower beds and the extent of the arboretum will not end with the 400 acres. Some time in the future some men, like my colleague from Illinois [Mr. MANN], will get an idea that there is not enough down there to say good morning to him, and he will want some more, and will bring in a bill for an addition. As a matter of fact, gentlemen, a botanic garden for the purpose for which this bill proposes is not right in principle. I do not care nor quibble about its location. A botanic garden for the purpose of everybody would be a different proposition, but a botanic garden for Members of Congress is selfish and unjustifiable.

Mr. Chairman, the friends of this bill have incorporated into the report a letter from Dr. Galloway. I presume that Dr. Galloway is an authority. He ought to be an authority on the lily. Some four years ago, while he was acting in the capacity of chief of the Bureau of Plant Industry, he went down to the Bermuda Islands for the purpose of studying the Bermuda lilies. He stayed down there a while, and came back and was sent to southern California for the purpose of studying the calla lily, which grows wild out there. Then he came back to Washington and went to Japan for the purpose of studying the lilium superbum; so that I presume the doctor is an authority, and that is the reason why the friends of this bill have incorporated his letter in the report.

Mr. MOORE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FOWLER. I dislike to yield, because I have only three minutes.

Mr. MOORE. Will the gentleman kindly inform us what it was that the doctor studied. We were unable to hear on this side.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman declines to yield.

Mr. FOWLER. The doctor spent a good deal of money, I understand, about $5,000, belonging to the Agricultural Department, for the purpose of going to Japan.

Mr. MOORE. To study what?

Mr. FOWLER. To study the lilium superbum.

Mr. MOORE. That is what we wanted to know.

Mr. FOWLER. And that is the reason why he is relied upon as authority, I presume, and I suppose that he is the greatest authority that they have for removing the Botanic Garden to Rock Creek Park.

Now, I am going to vote against this bill. And I invite every Member of the House to do likewise. It should be defeated by a unanimous vote, and I hope it will be.

Mr. Chairman, I yield back the remainder of my time.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, for the purpose of permitting the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. ALEXANDER] to get a bill to conference, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to; and Mr. GARRETT of Texas having resumed the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 12796) to provide for the removal of the Botanic Garden to Rock Creek Park, and for its transfer to the control of the Department of Agriculture, and had come to no resolution thereon.

ADMISSION OF FOREIGN-BUILT SHIPS TO AMERICAN REGISTRY.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate amendments to H. R. 18202 be taken from the Speaker's table, that we disagree to the Senate amendments, and ask for a conference.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent that the Senate amendments to the bill H. R. 18202 be disagreed to, and that the bill be sent to conference. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, does not the gentleman think it might be well to have a little statement of what this is—I mean the matters in dispute—for the benefit of the country?

Mr. ALEXANDER. The purpose of asking for a conference is to consider the Senate amendments to this bill, to which I have asked the House to disagree. The Senate amended the bill as it passed the House in several important particulars.

Mr. MOORE. Will the gentleman state what this bill is?

Mr. ALEXANDER. If the gentleman will please wait a minute, I will undertake to do so.

I will state for the information of the House that the Senate has added section 3 to the bill H. R. 18202, as follows:

SEC. 3. The President is hereby authorized, whenever in his judgment the needs of domestic trade require, to suspend by order, so far and for such length of time as he may deem desirable, the provisions of law confining the trade from points on the Atlantic coast to points on the Pacific coast and from points on the Pacific coast to points on the Atlantic coast, and from points on the Gulf coast or from the Great Lake ports to points on the Pacific or the Atlantic coast, and from points on the Pacific or Atlantic coast to points on the Gulf coast or to ports on the Great Lakes, to American-built ships, and permit foreign-built ships having an American register to engage in the trade between said points.

That is a new provision which has been inserted in the bill by the Senate. Also a provision has been inserted in the bill admitting to American registry a vessel for the use of the American Red Cross. Also a provision permitting naval officers of the United States, active or retired, and men serving or employed in the Navy of the United States, upon application made by them to the Secretary of the Navy, to accept such temporary service on board vessels registered under the terms of the act as may not be detrimental to the naval efficiency of the United States, without prejudice to their rank or status in the naval service or any loss, prejudice, or detriment whatever.

Also there is a provision inserted by the Senate that the Secretary of the Navy is authorized to direct the navy yards to be used for the purpose of repairing and keeping in a seaworthy condition all merchant vessels now or hereafter registered under the American flag.

These are all new and very important provisions that have been inserted in the Senate, and matters to which, of course, we desire to give careful consideration in the conference.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield a little time to me?

Mr. ALEXANDER. I will yield to the gentleman five minutes.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I shall not object to the request of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. ALEXANDER] to send this bill to conference after a formal disagreement to the Senate amendments. I have discussed the matter with a good many Members on this side of the House, and every one, I think, concedes that that is the only practical method of procedure—for the House to pass the bill to meet the emergency in reference to our foreign trade. The Senate has added various amendments to that which are not—many of them, at least—for the purpose of meeting an emergency, but for the purpose of enacting permanent legislation. Of course the original House bill was in the form of permanent legislation, because it was thought advisable to put it in that form rather than enact it as a temporary measure, owing to the chance of foreign complications if it were stated to be merely a temporary measure.

One of the provisions of the bill as it comes from the Senate opens up a very interesting question, which, I think, could not well be disposed of without careful deliberation. It is proposed by the so-called Jones amendment, as amended by the so-called Williams amendment, to authorize foreign-built vessels admitted to American registry to carry on commerce between the Pacific coast and the Atlantic coast, and also to carry on commerce between the Gulf coast and the Atlantic or Pacific coasts and also to carry on commerce between the Lake ports and the Atlantic and Pacific coasts. Under the terms of this amendment it would be possible for foreign-built ships admitted to American registry to carry grain or other freight from Galveston or New Orleans to New York, or from Tampa, Fla., to New York, while the same privilege was denied to vessels running from Jacksonville to New York; or vessels on the Lake ports might have freight carried by way of the Welland Canal from Lake ports to the Atlantic coast or to the Pacific coast by foreign-built vessels, but those same vessels could not carry commerce between the Lake ports and the Gulf ports.

Outside of the economic feature involved, there is a constitutional feature involved. The provision of the Constitution is—

No preference shall be given by any regulation of commerce or revenue to the ports of one State over those of another.

Now, this is a regulation of commerce. Suppose we had said in the bill that ports lying west of the mouth of the Mississippi River might have their commerce carried in foreign-built ships, without giving the same privilege to the ports on the Mississippi River or those lying east of the Mississippi River, so that you gave a preference to Galveston over New Orleans and Mobile. Anyone could see that that would be giving preference to the ports in Texas, at Galveston and other ports, over ports lying east thereof.

It is quite as easy to see that you are giving a preference to the ports on the Gulf, it seems to me, as it would be over ports on the Atlantic coast. I do not undertake to say whether giving the preference right to the ports on the Pacific coast and on the Atlantic coast in regard to trade between the two would be giving a preference to ports of one State over those of another. But the provisions of this bill as it stands now with the Senate amendments, in my judgment, are unconstitutional, and would probably render the whole bill unconstitutional if it were enacted into law.

There is another feature of the bill, giving authority to the navy yards to repair merchant-marine vessels under regulations to be established, it not even being required that the owners of the vessels shall pay for the repairs, although I assume it was intended to have a regulation to that effect, if it becomes necessary. If our fleet under the American flag grows so rapidly that the private shipyards are unable to fairly take care of the repairs of vessels, I would be in favor of permitting those vessels to be repaired at the navy yards temporarily. But I do not believe that the Government is called upon as a permanent policy to start in to repair merchant-marine vessels.

I say these things because I think the country in part will want to know why there is any delay in the final consideration of this bill, and it seems to me—and I agree thoroughly with the gentlemen on the other side—that the Senate amendments ought to be sent to conference instead of being concurred in now.

Mr. FALCONER. Mr. Speaker, I want to ask if this amendment has been printed or the bill printed?

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. ADAMSON). The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. ALEXANDER] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. ALEXANDER. I hope that there will be no further delay on this proposition.

Mr. MANN. I can furnish the gentleman with a copy of the Senate amendment, which is a copy of the engrossed print. It has not been printed for the document room.

Mr. ALEXANDER. It is not available yet for general distribution.

Mr. FALCONER. I do not want to delay the passage of the bill, but I would like to get information as to the Senate amendment.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I was not on the floor when the gentleman from Missouri rose. Is this a request for unanimous consent to send the bill to conference?

Mr. ALEXANDER. Yes.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Will the gentleman yield to me a minute so that I can say a word or two?

Mr. ALEXANDER. I will yield to the gentleman two minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Washington [Mr. HUMPHREY] is recognized for two minutes.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I agree with the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] and with the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. ALEXANDER] that this matter ought to be expedited. While I think we will get practically no relief under it, yet at the same time, as the administration wants it, I think we ought to pass the bill promptly.

What I did want to say is that I would like to have some understanding about debate when it returns to the House. It is a matter of very great importance, and we ought to have some time to debate it when it comes back.

Mr. ALEXANDER. I do not think there will be any trouble about having reasonable debate.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. In regard to the provision of which the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] speaks, I had a conversation this morning over the telephone—if I may violate the rules to that extent by referring to it—with Senator JONES. His construction of that amendment does not agree with the construction that apparently the gentleman from Illinois places upon it and with the construction that I am constrained to place upon it. I believe it is a very serious question whether that amendment is not a violation of the provision of the Constitution which was read by the gentleman from Illinois. That is another reason why I think the bill ought to be sent to conference. The conferees would probably be able to thrash out that question.

That is all I have to say under the circumstances. I have no objection to its going to conference.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Speaker, I ask that the Chair put the request to the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. ALEXANDER] that the House disagree to the Senate amendment to the bill (H. R. 18202) to provide for the admission of foreign-built ships to American registry for the foreign trade, and for other purposes, and ask for a conference?

There was no objection; and the Speaker pro tempore announced as the conferees on the part of the House Mr. ALEXANDER, Mr. HARDY, Mr. UNDERWOOD, Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts, and Mr. MANN.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Crockett, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had insisted upon its amendment to the bill (H. R. 18202) to provide for the admission of foreign-built ships to American registry for the foreign trade, and for other purposes, disagreed to by the House of Representatives, had agreed to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. O'GORMAN, Mr. THORNTON, Mr. SHIELDS, Mr. PERKINS, and Mr. BORAH as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

REMOVAL OF BOTANIC GARDEN.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The House automatically resolves itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, with Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky in the chair.

Mr. TEN EYCK. Mr. Chairman, I now yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BARTHOLDT].

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Mr. Chairman, I do not think I shall require 10 minutes, because nearly all that could be said on this subject has been said. I want to call attention, however, to the main issue involved in this bill, an issue which should not be beclouded by any charges of real-estate speculations or anything of the kind. Insinuations of this character are a matter entirely foreign to the members of the Committee on the Library, and probably to the majority of the Members on this floor. Certainly if every improvement in this District were to be halted merely because somebody would profit by it, owing to the enhancement of real estate values, there would never be any improvement at all. As Rock Creek Park is already an established park, it is incomprehensible to me how any real estate could be benefited by using part of it as a botanic garden.

The question is, Shall we have a National Botanic Garden or not? Shall we have an institution worthy of our country or not? Shall we emulate the example of the other civilized nations of the world in establishing a botanic garden, and by so doing promote the cultivation of flowers so conducive to love of home and of country? When last year I had the pleasure of making a trip through the old fatherland I was surprised to find nearly every vacant space, every back yard, and every window covered with flowers, so that I realized how literally true it is when that country is called "the land of flowers." I was told that this cultivation of flowers was being promoted mainly by the great botanic gardens which are to be found in nearly all the larger cities of the country. I could not help but feel that we in the United States are certainly somewhat behind in that respect, and I made up my mind that if ever I would have a chance during my incumbency as a Member of this House to favor a proposition to give us a botanic garden worthy of the name and worthy of this country, I would certainly vote for it.

The Committee on the Library, of which I am a member, have carefully considered the best sites that might be selected for such a purpose. The Potomac Flats have been considered, but experts tell us that it would be absolutely useless to locate the Botanic Garden there, because they need undulating ground for the purpose of cultivating trees, flowers, shrubbery, and so on. Besides, that site is not large enough. If the Congress wants to appropriate money for the purpose of establishing another park, well and good. We can beautify the Potomac Flats for that purpose, but it would not be what we want—namely, a botanic garden. The assertion repeatedly made during this discussion, that it would cost millions, is absurd on the face of it. Dr. Galloway estimates that no increase of the appropriation which is now being made for the Botanic Garden will be necessary if we transfer it to Rock Creek Park, and that appropriation amounts to about $30,000. When once that garden is established on the scale contemplated, it will be practically self-sustaining, from the fact that we will sell plants and flowers and trees to all the municipal and private parks all over the country, as is being done by the great botanic gardens in Europe.

Now, I want to refer for just one minute to this bugaboo of a real estate speculation. My friend from Georgia [Mr. HOWARD] seems actually to be laboring under the impression that there is a real estate speculation connected with this proposition. He would come very much nearer the truth, however, if he asserted that the opposition to this bill is created by real estate speculators; that behind the opposition to this bill stands the ring of real estate men who do not want us to locate that establishment in Rock Creek Park. The real estate men of Washington can not get it into their heads that any great improvement should be made in this city without the Government going into its pocket and paying money for the site; and that is what is behind this opposition, my friends. They simply play out the Potomac Flats now. They say, "Let us have the Botanic Garden in the Potomac Flats rather than in Rock Creek Park," which means that they will succeed in killing this bill. After they have killed this bill they will say, "Oh, well; Potomac Flats would not do for a great national botanic garden," and then they will get you to vote for an appropriation to purchase a site in this city or outside of its limits for that purpose. Therefore I think I am justified in saying that behind the opposition to this bill are the real estate speculators of this city.

Mr. BURNETT. If the substitute of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HOWARD] is adopted, for the Potomac Flats, there would be no real estate speculation in that, would there?

Mr. BARTHOLDT. They would soon find that that site would not do for a botanic garden.

Mr. BURNETT. They would have to repeal that, would they not, before they could go anywhere else?

Mr. BARTHOLDT. If that substitute is adopted, it simply means to establish a new park here in the city; but it could not possibly be used for the purposes for which this is to be used, and for which the department wants to use it, namely, a great botanic garden.

Mr. BURNETT. The gentleman spoke about the botanic gardens in Europe. Did he ever visit the botanic gardens at Marseille, in France?

Mr. BARTHOLDT. No; I never did.

Mr. BURNETT. If the gentleman had visited them, he would have found that there, where there are the greatest propagating gardens, I suppose, in Europe, it is a flat and low country around Marseille, where they propagate a great many of the seeds of the fine geraniums and plants of that kind that are sent to this country. It is a low, flat country.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. I must say that I have been induced to favor this bill just because Rock Creek Park is so exceptionally adapted for the purpose of establishing a botanic garden, and just because it will not be necessary, if we locate the garden in that park, to put our hands into the Treasury and purchase additional land for that purpose.

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Certainly.

Mr. HOWARD. Will the gentleman state why, in his opinion, Potomac Park is absolutely unsuited for botanic gardens?

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Because the ground is flat. It is not what we want to see in a botanic garden. We should have undulating grounds, nurseries, shrubberies, and full cultivation, and you can not have that on flat ground.

Mr. HOWARD. Could they not move all of that over where they ought to have it now?

Mr. BARTHOLDT. The fact is that in Kew, where the great botanic gardens of England are located, they had to wait pretty nearly half a century before they could have trees such as we fortunately have now in Rock Creek Park. They had to expend millions of dollars for the purpose of providing the very hills which nature has provided in Rock Creek Park, and therefore I can not help but think that anyone who would oppose the selection of Rock Creek Park for that purpose must be actuated by some motive, no doubt unwittingly, which will eventually lead him to vote for an appropriation of money to purchase a site for a botanic garden.

Mr. HOWARD. Why do they want trees? I thought the purpose of establishing a botanic garden was to propagate these things, and those the gentleman says we have already.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Oh, we propagate trees.

Mr. HOWARD. I thought it was for rare plants, shrubs, and all that sort of thing.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, the bill specifically calls for an arboretum—tree cultivation, as well as plant.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Mr. Chairman, I want now to call attention to a statement made by an expert, who, I believe, enjoys the confidence and respect of every Member on the floor of this House.

Dr. B. T. Galloway, Acting Secretary of Agriculture, says:

Rock Creek Park offers a peculiarly suitable location for a national arboretum and botanical garden, in that it has a variety of soils and exposures which are essential for the proper cultivation of a wide variety of plant species, and already contains a remarkable collection of native trees and shrubs. We would not for a moment consider any work in Rock Creek Park which would tend to destroy its natural beauty. On the contrary, our object would be to enhance the beauty of the park through the gradual accumulation of collections of plants in such way that they would serve a useful purpose to the whole country, as well as enhance the beauty of the local surroundings.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Missouri has expired.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, I will ask the gentleman from Georgia to use some more time now.

Mr. HOWARD. The gentleman has one more speech, or how many?

Mr. SLAYDEN. Oh, I have two or three.

Mr. STAFFORD. How much time remains, Mr. Chairman?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas has 25 minutes and the gentleman from Georgia 13 minutes.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL].

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, we have been maintaining for quite a number of years what we have called, as a matter of courtesy, a botanic garden. The area available where the garden is now located has long been realized to be altogether insufficient for the purpose of a national botanic garden, and the necessity for the removal of the garden is increased by the fact that we have recently placed the Grant Monument in the garden, taking a considerable portion of the altogether too limited space which we had there. It is therefore necessary to move the Botanic Garden. It has been suggested that we place it down in the water-logged swamp at the lower end of Potomac Park. I assume that anyone who has any conception of what a botanic garden ought to be, who has visited that tract, realizes how improper it would be, how altogether destructive of the objects sought, it would be to place it there. Some have suggested that the garden might be placed across the river on the lowlands below Arlington. That would be a better location, and yet not a satisfactory one. Fortunately, we have in Rock Creek Park a location ideal in every way, a tract fronting on one of the finest streets in the city, easily accessible by street cars, several hundred acres of beautiful woodland, open glade, valley, and hill slope; lands with a variety of soil; lands sloping in various directions, fertile as any lands in this immediate vicinity; in every way adapted for the purposes which we seek to serve in the establishment of a national botanic garden. It is exceedingly fortunate that we have those lands. If we had not owned them, we would have needed to acquire them. I am familiar with them. I have been over the tract quite recently, carefully, and I must say that there is no place near Washington so admirably suited in every way for the location of this governmental institution. We ought to have a good botanic garden, one which will be a credit to the Nation; a place where we can gather the beautiful and useful plants of all the earth—such, at least, as will grow in this climate—a show place, and yet a garden useful to all of the people of the country, giving them an idea of what nature produces throughout the world, and an opportunity to select, for the beautification of their own homes and gardens and surroundings, these plants gathered here from the ends of the world. It is very fortunate, Mr. Chairman, that we own this location; and it is very fortunate that at this time, when it is necessary to remove the garden from its present location, that we are proposing to move it to Rock Creek Park. [Applause.]

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, I want to consume just a few minutes myself, and then the gentleman from Georgia will close, and after that I will yield to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN].

Mr. Chairman, there seems to be a general misapprehension as to what a botanic garden is or should be. A botanic garden is not a mere rose garden, nor is it a place for the cultivation of lilies. If that were true, perhaps the place suggested by my friend from Georgia would be entirely appropriate, but I have been told by certain people in Washington—among others, by the present superintendent of the Botanic Garden—that these flat lands are utterly unsuited even for the cultivation of some flowers. Roses, for example, do not do well down there. As has been mentioned by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BARTHOLDT], all qualified writers and experts on botanic gardens say that there should be hills and valleys, running streams, if possible, and a topographical variety. Rock Creek Park nearly everywhere offers those conditions. It is not in the mind of the committee to put this Botanic Garden at any particular spot in Rock Creek Park, but, perhaps, about halfway between the limits of this park running from the south to the north. There is a Zoological Park at the south end, and the reservoir up toward the north. Within that section, it is stated, can be found all of the conditions laid down by botanic experts as necessary for the proper development of a botanic garden. In the four or five minutes I want to use I can only briefly refer to one or two questions that have been raised.

Some gentlemen seem to have in their minds a suspicion that other gentlemen are either interested in real estate transactions or that they have been unwittingly made the tools of people who are. Well, I repudiate that for every member of the committee, and I think I can repudiate it for practically every Member of this House. I have been here as a Member of Congress for 18 years and I have never owned an inch of real estate in the District of Columbia. I never expect to own an inch of real estate in the District of Columbia. I have no interest in the development of the city in any one direction, but it does occur to me, Mr. Chairman, that it is impossible to make any improvement of any kind—north, south, east, or west—that incidentally and unavoidably will not confer benefit upon property owners in that neighborhood. That is one of the things we can not avoid, but it offers no sound reason, in my judgment, for undertaking to create a suspicion of interest in the mind of anyone. Sixteenth Street is extended already for a considerable distance beyond the point that some gentlemen have in mind as the place where the Botanic Garden should be placed. Of course it will ultimately be extended if the District of Columbia goes on growing and if the city of Washington continues to grow in the future as it has in the past. I do not know that I feel any particular interest in the growth of the city of Washington. It is big enough now. It is quite as big as any city ought to be, in my judgment, but it will grow, no matter what my personal views are, and as it grows streets will be opened and the development will extend in all directions, and it is no reason for opposing a project which is an honest one in every particular. Gentlemen ask also what good reason there is for marring the beauty of Rock Creek Park. There is no good reason that can be offered. There is no good reason of any kind which could possibly be offered for such a thing. Some people believe that the putting of a botanic garden in Rock Creek Park will mar the beauty of that particular park and lessen the enjoyment of the people in it. If it did so, I would be opposed to it, but I believe that the putting of the Botanic Garden in Rock Creek Park will beautify the park itself and will add to the pleasure of the people who visit it.

It is not intended to use 400 acres of land in the cultivation of plants. That was an arbitrary figure put into the bill by the author. It may be wrong. It may be too little, and, as I said in my opening remarks last Wednesday, it may be too much. I do not pretend to know about that. It makes no difference to me if the area be reduced.

I have no special interest in that. It is not intended, if the 400 acres are conceded by the House, that the whole 400 acres shall be put into a plant garden. It is highly probable that in 100 years from now there will not be 100 acres of that land devoted to the cultivation of plants. A large part of the 400 acres is already covered by forest, and as this is frankly a bill for the cultivation of trees as well as plants, it would be foolish, and no one would dream of destroying the native forest trees. We want them to stand. One of the most economical things we can take up in this country is the cultivation of our forests. How to conserve our forests, how to grow other trees to take their places when these are gone, is important. One hundred years ago Europe destroyed her great forests. The result was a bad effect upon the climate of such countries as Spain, for example, and in the last 40 years or so the great European nations have devoted much time and thought and money and the skill of its learned men to the reforestation of those countries. We ought to be prepared to do the same thing; and in order to do it intelligently, we must have scientific research and advice. The land which it is proposed to take in Rock Creek, or which has been suggested to be taken, because it is not specifically defined anywhere, offers, so soil experts say, an excellent opportunity and splendid conditions for the cultivation of plants; and the idea in the minds of those of us who are interested in this project was that when we get such a project established it will develop into a great establishment and be of immense economical advantage. We not only cultivate flowers in botanic gardens, but we cultivate plants for other reasons; we cultivate plants out of which drugs are made; we cultivate plants which will add to the health and comfort of our fellow citizens.

Now, Mr. Chairman, how much time have I used?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has used eight minutes.

Mr. SLAYDEN. I will yield the floor to my friend from Georgia [Mr. HOWARD].

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Chairman, I will yield the remainder of my time—13 minutes—to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. PAGE].

Mr. DONOVAN. Mr. Chairman, I wish to make the point of no quorum.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will count. [After counting.] Sixty-two gentlemen are present—not a quorum.

Mr. KINKEAD of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. KINKEAD of New Jersey. Is it too late now if the gentleman should withdraw his point?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has not indicated a wish to withdraw it.

Mr. KINKEAD of New Jersey. But the gentleman is in a receptive mood, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will call the roll.

The roll was called, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

Thereupon the committee rose; and Mr. ADAMSON having assumed the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 12796, and finding itself without a quorum, he had caused the roll to be called, and 239 gentlemen answered to their names, and that he presented therewith a list of the absentees.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The committee will resume its session.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. PAGE] is recognized for 13 minutes.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, when this bill was under consideration on last Wednesday, and I submitted some reasons why in my judgment it should not pass, I did not at that time expect to have anything more to say upon the bill. For the benefit of a number of members of the committee who may not have been here during the discussion and who may not for themselves have examined the provisions of the bill pending, I will say that this is a proposition for the removal of the National Botanic Garden, now located at the foot of Capitol Hill, the proposition being to remove it to Rock Creek Park, and by the provisions of the pending bill appropriating 400 acres of land within the park for the purpose of a botanic garden.

This 400 acres, by the terms of the bill and by the statements made by those gentlemen who are favoring its passage, has not been selected. It might be, if the bill passes as it is now worded, that any 400 acres of the 2,200 comprising the Rock Creek Park might be selected for the purpose indicated. True, it is stated that it is proposed to establish this Botanic Garden in the northern end of Rock Creek Park.

Some gentlemen have stated that if this bill becomes a law it is proposed to establish this garden near the reservoir at the head of Sixteenth Street. Other gentlemen have named other localities within the park. The truth is, there has been no spot within this park of more than 2,000 acres that has been selected for the purpose of carrying out the provisions of the bill now pending, and, as I said a while ago, it might be located anywhere within this park, in the very center of it, for that matter, if in the wisdom of this commission that is named under the terms of the bill they so direct.

Mr. Chairman, so far as I am concerned, I believe that the National Government might continue to exist for a little while longer without a botanic garden upon the scale that is contemplated here, or, for that matter, without any botanic garden at all. There is a question in my mind as to whether or not it is a proper and legitimate channel for the expenditure of money from the National Treasury. My friend, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SLAYDEN], the chairman of the committee, in his remarks only a few minutes ago made the statement that it was proposed, in connection with the cultivation of plants and flowers, to investigate the forestry conditions, the growth of trees and the methods for the preservation of trees, and for the preservation of the forests of the country. Why, certainly my friend from Texas forgot that already in the Department of Agriculture there is a Bureau of Forestry, that is provided for by appropriation and that is actively engaged in the very scientific research in the very direction that he has pointed out is to be carried on by this bill if it becomes a law. Why, gentlemen of the committee, it is making possible a duplication of work that is already being appropriated for and carried on at great expense to the Government. Are there not enough duplications already in the activities of the National Government from appropriations that are made to the various departments by the Congress? Certainly, if the gentleman's statement is to be taken at its face value, here we are to appropriate money to scientifically study the question of forestry and the preservation of our forests, in spite of the fact that we already have a bureau in the Department of Agriculture for this very purpose.

The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BARTHOLDT] was making comparisons of our country with foreign countries in the matter of appropriations for the preservation and care of botanic gardens. Why, gentlemen of the committee, it seems to me that not only in this direction but also in a great many others we have already gone out of our way imitating foreign Governments to our hurt. I do not believe that we are called upon to imitate every foreign Government in every branch of its activities in the expenditure of money from the National Treasury.

There is another matter in connection with this proposed appropriation. Why establish it in the National Capital? Why locate it in Washington, to be placed under the Department of Agriculture—a department that is supposed to have the care of the agricultural interests of this great country of ours? But no; when this is placed under its charge—and I believe if we are to have a botanic garden it ought to be under the charge of the Agricultural Department—it must be established in the city of Washington. Why? Can anybody tell me why it ought to be placed here in preference to any other place, possibly over places more centrally located, from which a larger constituency would derive benefit than if placed here? Oh, no; there is always an influence here that brings within the District of Columbia an appropriation for anything that takes money out of the National Treasury.

Now, let us see what this means. Here is the Rock Creek Park, maintained by appropriations chargeable half to the United States Treasury and half to the District of Columbia. Situated within this great park is the National Zoological Park. The maintenance of that park and the appropriations for it are made half from the National Treasury and half from taxes derived from property in the District of Columbia. Now, it is proposed by this bill to take out 400 acres from this park, maintained by both the Nation and the city, and place the entire cost of its maintenance, the building of its roads, and all that, upon the National Treasury, contributed to by your constituents and mine wholly.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from North Carolina yield to the gentleman from Texas?

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Yes; I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman, I suppose, wants to be perfectly accurate in his statements?

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Certainly I do not want to make an inaccurate statement.

Mr. SLAYDEN. It does not take out 400 acres. It simply fixes a limit beyond which they can not go.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Did the gentleman ever know of a limit fixed and any department of this Government given the discretion when it did not "go the limit"? [Laughter.]

Mr. SLAYDEN. Well, I think there have been cases of that kind.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. The gentleman from Texas is asked how much this 400-acre garden is going to cost, and he makes the statement, based upon the opinion of one man only, that it will cost no more to maintain a 400-acre botanic garden than it costs now to maintain a 5-acre garden at the foot of Capitol Hill.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield again?

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Yes.

Mr. SLAYDEN. The gentleman raised the question a moment ago as to whether it was the proper thing for the Government to make an appropriation for the Botanic Garden. Has the gentleman taken that position as a member of the Committee on Appropriations? Has he not as a member of that committee voted for appropriations for an alleged botanic garden?

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Oh, I voted for that established institution, as I have for many others that my judgment did not approve.

Mr. SLAYDEN. This is an established institution.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. I understand that, and I have voted for it; and I will be frank to say to the gentleman that if I had the slightest idea that this botanic garden could be maintained on the scale proposed in this bill for the modest appropriation that is now being made I should not oppose this bill. But I know enough, and other Members of this House know enough, to know that in spite of the expressed opinion of one man, a botanic garden can not be established and maintained upon even 100 acres of ground anywhere and cost no more than the appropriation that is now being made for its maintenance upon 5 or 6 acres of ground. It is preposterous upon its face; and while I do not know or pretend to say what the tax on the National Government will be if this bill becomes a law, yet I am satisfied it will be multiplied many times over the present appropriation for the maintenance of this garden.

I want to say to the members of this committee that you may or I may or any of us may desire the maintenance of a botanic garden for the purpose of furnishing us plants and flowers that we may in turn furnish a few to our constituents; but I want to say to you that whatever this appropriation may be for the maintenance of this 400-acre garden that is to be laid out within Rock Creek Park, for which your constituents and mine are expected to contribute the expense of its maintenance, they will derive practically no benefit, because if it is put there, not one in twenty of them who come to the city of Washington will ever see it. Much has been said here as to its accessibility to the general public if it is located where most of the Members who have spoken on the subject have said it will be located, near the reservoir at the head of Sixteenth Street. If it is located there, it will be adjacent to the largest undeveloped real estate proposition there is in the District of Columbia. I have no idea that any gentleman interested in this bill has been biased in the slightest degree because of that fact, nor has he any interest in it; but nevertheless it is true, and, incidentally or otherwise, the largest benefit that will flow out of the establishment of this Botanic Garden will be the benefit that will come to the adjacent private property owners in that section of the city.

Mr. Chairman, I am not obsessed with the substitute offered by my friend from Georgia [Mr. HOWARD], because I do not know, nor is my mind fully made up, that we want to go out on so large a scale in the establishment of a botanic garden for the benefit of a few people in this country. My friend from Texas [Mr. SLAYDEN] says it is to be made a source of profit; that they are to grow plants and sell them to other botanic gardens, and to individuals, I imagine. Well, they must sell to somebody if it is to become a source of profit. Who ever knew the Government to sell anything for pay?

Mr. SLAYDEN. The gentleman misunderstood me.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. I am sorry if I did.

Mr. SLAYDEN. I said a source of economic value. If I used the word "profit" I think the context will show that that was the sense in which I used it.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. I understood him in a different way when he was on the floor; but even in the sense in which the gentleman explains, suppose it was for the cultivation of plants for medical purposes, why, we have a Bureau of Plant

Industry in the Department of Agriculture, largely appropriated for, and manned by experts chosen for that purpose, to point out to the people the economic value of the growth of plants. Gentlemen of the committee, there is but one purpose, and that is an esthetic one, to grow flowers and ornamental plants for the beautification of a certain spot in the District of Columbia, largely for the benefit of the population of the District of Columbia, and incidentally for the Members of the House of Representatives and the Senate, and others who can draw upon it for the sending out of these plants. I do not believe we can justify the appropriations that will grow, in proportion to the value of the institution, and I very much hope that this bill will be voted down by the membership of this committee. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from North Carolina has expired.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, I yield one minute to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. THACHER].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts is recognized for one minute.

Mr. THACHER. Mr. Chairman, brevity is the soul of wit, and I will say all I can in one minute.

The gentlemen opposed to this bill have been very eloquent, indeed, but not in all cases very logical. They have criticized the Committee on the Library very severely. Our judgment has been impugned. The expression "land sharks" has been thrown over our heads, and in the same breath some of these gentlemen have criticized our committee because the bill removes the Botanic Garden from the control of the Committee on the Library and puts the Botanic Garden under the control of the Secretary of Agriculture. If these gentlemen have apparently so little confidence in our Committee on the Library, why do they object to removing the control of this botanic garden from our committee to the Secretary of Agriculture? The gentlemen on this committee have studied the question carefully, and they have made a unanimous report in favor of the removal. The distinguished gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOWLER] says, with a great deal of heroism, that he will volunteer as general to lead a charge against the committee and the bill, and he asks all the Members of the House to join in this onslaught against the committee. I ask all the Members here who believe in the committee, who believe we know what we are talking about, and that we are not engaged in a wild-goose chase, to stand by the committee and vote for this bill.

Mr. SLAYDEN. I yield the remainder of my time to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] is recognized for 11 minutes.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, the Botanic Garden down here has got to be removed or else abolished. Everyone knows that. It can not remain where it is. I think everyone is conversant with that fact. Some time ago the Committee on the Library, which has jurisdiction over the Botanic Garden, took up the question of what should be done with it. The appropriations for the Botanic Garden are now made through the Committee on Appropriations, and the Joint Committee on the Library has control of the operation of the garden and the expenditure of the appropriation. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. SLAYDEN], chairman of the House wing of the Joint Committee on the Library, took up the matter with Dr. Galloway, the Assistant Secretary of Agriculture, who had been for many years the Chief of the Bureau of Plant Industry. Those of us who have been in the House for years and who have known Dr. Galloway well would, I think, pay more attention to his judgment on a matter affecting plants and plant industry than we would to anybody else in the United States. He had no politics in him. It was the merits of a proposition which appealed to him, and he was the best-informed man that I ever met in reference to plants generally. He gathered together a number of the chiefs of the bureaus in the Department of Agriculture and asked them for their judgment, what, if anything, should be done in reference to the Botanic Garden—whether it would be advisable, in their opinion, to put it in the Department of Agriculture; that is, whether it would work harmoniously and economically with the other work of the Department of Agriculture, or whether it would be better to be entirely separated and maintained as an institution apart from any other Government department; and if it were to be moved, where, in their opinion, would be the cheapest and best place to put it.

We have our notions and we have to act upon them, but I believe that everyone here will say that if they had to leave it to somebody on the outside to determine they could not select anybody, in their opinion, better qualified to determine it than Dr. Galloway, the Assistant Secretary of Agriculture, and the chiefs of the bureaus in that department concerned with plant industry. After consultation among themselves, after visiting various localities around Washington, these gentlemen reported to Dr. Galloway and he reported to Mr. SLAYDEN that, in the opinion of the officials of the Department of Agriculture, the Botanic Garden might well be placed under the control of the Department of Agriculture, and that it would work in harmoniously with the other work of that department. They also recommended that they be permitted, if they had the Botanic Garden, to establish it in the north 400 acres of Rock Creek Park. That is a section of the park that has not been developed. There are no roads through it. I have heard gentlemen here on the floor say that they have driven through there in automobiles. There are no roads through it. They were mistaken about the locality. There has been no development of Rock Creek Park at all in that section as yet, but it is owned as a part of Rock Creek Park. Gentlemen say—and I was rather surprised at my level-headed friend from North Carolina [Mr. PAGE] saying it—that the establishment of the Botanic Garden up there would benefit the adjoining property. It is a matter of absolute indifference to adjoining property owners whether a park is developed as a park or as a botanic garden. The park is there. It will be developed. It will be developed, probably, before the adjoining property is developed to any extent. It will be developed as a park if it is retained as a park. If it is retained or established as a botanical garden, it will still be developed along precisely the same lines as it would be if it remained a part of Rock Creek Park, except that in certain vacant spaces up there there will be plants and trees planted as a botanic garden without interfering with the other developments of property and without interfering with the woods which are there. There can be no real estate speculation in it. It can be of no possible interest to the people who own property around the park, because it can make no difference in the value of their property whether the roads that run through that park and the development there run through it as a part of Rock Creek Park or as a part of a botanic garden laid out on park grounds.

Of course no one supposes that they need 400 acres for the purpose of planting; no one has dreamed of that. No one desires to interfere with the natural woods up there. Certainly no lover of nature or lover of a park wishes to interfere with the natural forest that is there, but there are places up there which used to be under cultivation, some of which are now vacant and some of which are now covered with small scrub pines, of no value as woods or forest for beauty, which can be used for the planting of trees or shrubs or perennial flowering plants and of annual flowering plants—of all those things which go to make up a botanic garden—and the Department of Agriculture says that it can be done without much expense. There is no reason for spending any large sum of money. Of course, if you charge against the Botanic Garden the cost in the end of constructing roads up there, it will add that much, but the roads will be built through this end of the park sooner or later without regard as to whether it is a botanic garden or a park.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. Yes.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. The building of roads under present conditions would be paid for out of the joint treasury of the District of Columbia and the Federal Government, while the building of roads within these 400 acres would come entirely out of the Federal Treasury.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I did not yield to the gentleman to make an argument.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. I merely asked that as a question.

Mr. MANN. I had hoped that the gentleman would develop that argument in his speech, as I had asked him to do it. The consensus of opinion of all these people who examined this subject was that it could be located in Rock Creek Park for less money and maintained at less expense than it could anywhere else, and that it was a better place for a botanic garden or arboretum than any of the other places which were suggested. No one would propose that we go and buy another piece of ground. I think no one in the House has ever proposed that, although that is what the people in the Botanic Garden at one time desired to do. There was the proposition suggested of taking the lower end of the new extension of Potomac Park and placing the Botanic Garden under the jurisdiction of the Superintendent of Public Buildings and Grounds, who is in the War Department. I went with him and examined that part of Potomac Park, and I am quite willing to say that I do not think it is the best place. You could establish a botanic garden there, as is suggested in the substitute proposed by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HOWARD], but if you did and should pass the bill, it would surely be under the jurisdiction of the War Department. That park is under the War Department. I do not think that it is practicable to secure legislation which would take that part of Potomac Park out from under the jurisdiction of the War Department. I do not believe that the War Department is the best department to have charge of a botanic garden as against the Agricultural Department.

If we locate the Botanic Garden in Rock Creek Park, I think that we should charge one-half of the cost of its expense to the District of Columbia. We have the Zoo, which is practically a portion of Rock Creek Park, although under a separate management. The District of Columbia pays half of the cost of the maintenance of the Zoo, the purchase and maintenance of animals, the construction of roads. The District pays half the cost. The District of Columbia pays half the cost of the maintenance of Rock Creek Park. I think that when we establish in Rock Creek Park a national arboretum or a botanic garden, whichever you please, there is no reason why the cost and maintenance of it should not be charged to the District of Columbia, as is the maintenance of any other park in the District of Columbia. I think that when you locate this in Rock Creek Park, if we do, and when the appropriation is made, it should provide that one half of it shall be paid for out of the District treasury and the other half out of the Federal Treasury. That of itself is an argument in favor of the economy of the proposition. We have the example of the Zoo to follow. No objection is made to that. We can properly charge one-half of the expense of the Botanic Garden to the District of Columbia if we locate it in Rock Creek Park as a part of the park, while if we locate it anywhere else the whole expense will fall upon the National Treasury.

Gentlemen who are in favor of economy can not very well say that they are opposed to charging one-half of its expense to the District of Columbia and then vote to pay all of the expense out of the Federal Treasury. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. All time has expired, and the Clerk will report the bill under the five-minute rule.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. DAVIS. I rise to ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the subject of waterways in general, and particularly in reference to the Duluth and Mississippi waterways.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman. [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and leave is granted.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That for the purpose of establishing and maintaining a national arboretum and botanical garden in Rock Creek Park the Botanic Garden is hereby transferred from the direction and control of the Joint Committee on the Library to the direction and control of the Secretary of Agriculture, and he is authorized to remove to Rock Creek Park or otherwise dispose of the plants, structures, and all that pertains to the Botanic Garden in its present location as he may deem proper.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. Mr. Chairman, I think it most unfortunate that in supporting this bill its friends should be accused of supporting a measure which has back of it some sort of a real-estate scheme. Personally I believe that no accusation could be more ill-founded, more absolutely devoid of facts to substantiate it. I knew nothing about this proposition—had never heard of the bill—until the distinguished gentleman from Texas, the chairman of the Committee on the Library, called it up one week ago to-day. I never have owned, nor do I expect ever to own, even so much as the slightest interest in any real estate in the city of Washington nor elsewhere in the District of Columbia. Like the gentleman from Texas, I have no interest in the city of Washington except to see it become all that it ought to be as the capital city of the greatest Republic the world has ever known. That is all.

Now, the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HOWARD], for whom I have the highest personal respect, spoke with much vehemence, and broadly intimated that back of the pending bill there is a real-estate scheme, and he especially and very strongly insisted that he was correct in his original charge that the land for the addition proposed to be made to Rock Creek Park a few years ago was first offered for $600,000, and that afterwards the price was reduced to $423,000. Mr. Chairman, I propose to show that in that statement the gentleman from Georgia is entirely mistaken.

Now, the pending bill relates to a botanic garden, which it is proposed to establish in Rock Creek Park; and, therefore, when the gentleman from Georgia referred in pointed terms to a great reduction from $600,000 to $423,000 which he said was made in the price of land offered a few years ago for a proposed park extension in this city, those gentlemen who heard him at once thought of the proposed addition to Rock Creek Park which came before the House in March, 1909, and of the charge then made here by Mr. Andrus, a Member from New York, that $600,000 had first been demanded for certain land to extend Rock Creek Park, but that, as he said, "evidently somebody's conscience had been pricked," so that on the 3d of March, 1909, the price had been reduced to $423,000.

Mr. HOWARD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COOPER. The gentleman declined to yield to me. Let me finish this first.

Mr. HOWARD. I yielded to the gentleman to make a whole speech in my time.

Mr. COOPER. The gentleman will have opportunity later in the five-minute debate. I have only five minutes.

In his last speech the gentleman read from the RECORD and charged that I was utterly mistaken in my statement that the reduction from $600,000 to $423,000 did not relate to the proposed Rock Creek Park extension, but to land on Meridian Hill. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, bear in mind that the land offered for a park on Meridian Hill was on the east side of Sixteenth Street, about opposite the Henderson property, but not near Rock Creek Park. That is the land, and the only land, the price of which was at first $600,000 and then reduced to $400,000.

Now, the land for the proposed Rock Creek Park addition was not near Meridian Hill, but extended from the present park across Connecticut Avenue to Massachusetts Avenue. That land never was offered for but one price—$420,000, with $3,000 added by the commissioners for necessary expenses.

Notwithstanding these indisputable facts, the gentleman from Georgia declared with great earnestness that I had "unmitigated gall"—those were his words—in the face of the record to say that no reduction at all ever had been made in the price asked for the land for the extension of Rock Creek Park, but that the reduction was made on the Meridian Hill property. And yet, Mr. Chairman, any intelligent person will, upon investigation, find the facts to be exactly as I have stated them.

The gentleman from Georgia also referred to the fact that in March, 1909, I voted against the bill to extend Rock Creek Park. It is true, I did vote against it. I believed the statement made by Mr. Andrus and another gentleman that at first $600,000 had been demanded of the Government and that in the course of time the price had been cut down to $423,000, because, as the gentleman from New York, Mr. Andrus, directly charged, "somebody's conscience had been pricked." Yes; it is true, I did vote against the bill. It is also true that I was mistaken—misled utterly as to the facts. I found this when I looked up the record. I looked up the record, because I read the testimony given by Mr. Glover before a committee of this House, from which testimony, if true, it was clear that a great wrong had been done him.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and the gentleman is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. COOPER. In a speech found in the RECORD, Appendix, page 183, first session Sixty-third Congress, volume 50, part 7, I said [reading]:

On March 3, 1909, I voted against the bill to extend Rock Creek Park, my vote being influenced by statements made in the debate by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. SIMS] and the gentleman from New York, Mr. Andrus. Their speeches began the controversy by making charges and impugning motives.

Now, I beg the gentlemen to listen [reading]:

It now appears that the whole controversy turned on the confusion by these gentlemen of the Massachusetts Avenue project with the Meridian Hill project. The Massachusetts Avenue project called for an appropriation of $423,000. No more ever was asked for it. The other project called originally for an appropriation of $600,000. Both gentlemen confused the two, as the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. SIMS] in subsequent speeches admitted.

Now, Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. SIMS] himself, on the 15th of January, 1913, when his attention had been called to the fact that he and the gentleman from New York, Mr. Andrus, had been mistaken in what they had said on March 3, 1909, about the alleged reduction in price on the land for Rock Creek Park, rose on this floor and admitted his mistake. And here is his language; I will read it. I quoted from it in a speech which will be found on page 183 of that RECORD, volume 50, first session Fifty-third Congress. In explaining his mistake the gentleman from Tennessee said:

"I heard the remarks of the gentleman from New York, Mr. Andrus, and I was yielded five minutes, in which I discussed the bill as best I could * * *. Now, the facts were that the bill was for $423,000. I am quoted in the RECORD as saying $435,000.

He then proceeded and admitted his mistake:

Now, at nearly the hour of midnight, on the last day of the session, on a motion to suspend the rules, when there was no time to investigate and understand anything, almost anyone was liable to be misled. But the gentleman from New York, Mr. Andrus, spoke before I did, and read from a report by Senator GALLINGER.

Then the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. SIMS] proceeded:

But as that bill, which this report accompanied, also embraced another tract of land known as the Meridian Hill tract, the two being together, the gentleman from New York, Mr. Andrus, made the mistake of reading from that part of the Senate report which referred to the Meridian Hill property instead of this Rock Creek Park addition.

And yet, Mr. Chairman, out of that mistake made originally by the gentleman from New York, Mr. Andrus, came all the subsequent well-remembered trouble on this floor and elsewhere. They charged a highly respected citizen with duplicity, charged him practically with corruption. He bitterly resented the statements made about him, and the facts show that his resentment was amply justified.

Mr. Chairman, I have gone into this subject at this time because at the very outset friends of the bill were accused of supporting a real-estate scheme—an utterly baseless accusation that was followed by the repeated reference to the proposed Rock Creek Park extension of 1909.

As I have said, I knew nothing about the bill now before us until it came up a week ago to-day. No resident of the District of Columbia ever has spoken to me on the subject of this bill. I support the bill because it appeals to my judgment as being worthy of support. I know that either the Botanic Garden at the foot of the hill here ought to be done away with or else that the word "National" ought to be taken from it. As I remarked the other day, constituents of mine who have visited it have always come away laughing. It amounts to nothing—that is, to nothing deserving the word "National."

Carry out the commission plans. Take down that old brick wall and iron fence. Remove all else that is unsightly. Make it a place worthy of the memorial to Ulysses S. Grant. The commission plan suggests, I believe, that it be called "Union Square." Experts competent to judge declare that if improved in accordance with that plan it will be one of the most beautiful squares of its size in the world. To-day, viewed from any neighboring street, it is unsightly—unworthy to be called the National Botanic Garden.

Mr. MURDOCK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COOPER. Yes.

Mr. MURDOCK. The gentleman says that he is in favor of moving the Botanic Garden. To where does he propose to move it?

Mr. COOPER. I rely largely on the judgment of Dr. Galloway and the statement of the distinguished gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN], who says that Dr. Galloway's recommendations, which appear in his letter in the committee report on this bill, were based on the report of experts of the doctor's selection from the Department of Agriculture.

Mr. MURDOCK. Where did they want it to go?

Mr. COOPER. They want it to go to Rock Creek Park.

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Chairman, I had hoped that the controversy existing between the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. COOPER] and myself about the attempt of certain real-estate owners in Washington to exact exorbitant prices from the people for real estate that they wanted to sell to the Government had about ended; but, like the Irishman's calf, I reckon you would have to pull his ears off to get him up to suckle and pull his tail off to get him loose [laughter], and there is no way of getting rid of him. The controversy between the gentleman from Wisconsin and myself is about the difference between "Come down, Stephen," and "Stephen, come down." [Laughter.]

I stated originally here this morning that an effort was made at one time to get, by exorbitant prices, out of the Government nearly $200,000 in profit. I did not say by whom, and I did not care by whom. I do not know the gentleman that the gentleman from Wisconsin has mentioned from a sack of meat suit. I do not know whether it is Mr. Glover or who he is. I say that several distinct attempts were made by a parcel of people engaged in selling real estate to rob the Government of nearly $200,000 in the sale of some property.

Now, why do I say that? On page 3792 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of March 3, 1909, it is stated that various efforts were made through bills introduced in Congress to purchase a piece of property; whether it was property contiguous to Rock Creek Park or whether it was some hill on Massachusetts Avenue, I care not. But in Senate bill 5289 there was a proposition to sell a piece of property at $600,000. In House bill 5102, the next year, a proposition was made to sell the same property for $550,000. In Senate bill 4441 another proposition was made to sell the same identical piece of property to the Government for $423,000. What matters it whether it be Rock Creek property, or Massachusetts Avenue property, or Meridian Hill property, or whether it be in the northwest, or northeast, or southeast? Whatever the property was, an effort was made by a crowd of gentlemen interested in real estate to exact an exorbitant price from the Government because they had the power to do it and the influence to do it through such gentlemen as the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. COOPER] has cast aspersions upon, saying that Mr. Andrus, formerly an honored Member of this House, was mistaken when he stated the proposition on this floor. I do not know where to go for information if we can not go to the RECORD.

I take it from the RECORD. Here it is in cold type, and I say that not only did the gentleman from New York, Mr. Andrus, but also the gentleman from Massachusetts, Mr. Lovering, and the gentleman from Alabama, Mr. HEFLIN, and others fell into making the grievous mistake of charging these people with an attempt to filch money from the Government by the sale of property that was not worth the money asked, and then reduced the price.

Now, I say that this effort to change the site of the Botanic Garden and move it to Rock Creek Park will benefit the property owners out there, because it is an improvement, and every improvement enhances the value of surrounding property incidentally. The question as presented by the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. PAGE] appeals more forcibly to me, and that is in determining whether I want a botanic garden or not; the question is whether or not it will ever be worth the snap of my finger as a general proposition to the taxpayers of my district and the people of my great State. Why should I be called upon to vote to establish a botanic garden in Washington? What benefit will ever accrue to my constituents from the enormous expenditures of money that will be necessary to carry on the plan as set out in this bill? What my people are interested in is cotton, corn, and potatoes; and when they get to trees they like to talk about locust trees and persimmon trees and trees of that sort that they know something about. When you go to talking about trees with Latin names a yard long they have no use for them [laughter]; and I say that so far as this proposition is concerned I hope my substitute will be voted down, and I hope this bill will be voted down, and I will vote readily and willingly to abolish the Botanic Garden if this is a sample of what is to follow in future years in extravagant appropriations for its maintenance. [Applause.]

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on this paragraph be closed.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. SLAYDEN] moves that all debate on this paragraph be closed. The question is on agreeing to that motion.

The motion was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 3. That the chairman of the Senate Committee on the Library and the chairman of the House Committee on the Library and the Engineer Commissioner of the District of Columbia shall select and cause to be surveyed that portion of Rock Creek Park, not in excess of 400 acres, herein set apart for a botanic garden and arboretum.

With a committee amendment, as follows:

Page 2, line 13, after the word "Library," insert the words "the Secretary of Agriculture."

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Chairman, I propose an amendment to line 16, page 2. After the words "excess of" strike out the word "four" and insert "one."

The CHAIRMAN. The committee amendment will be voted on first. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HOWARD. Now, Mr. Chairman, I propose an amendment to line 16, page 2. After the word "of" strike out the word "four" and insert the word "one," so that the line as amended will read "excess of 100 acres."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HOWARD].

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Chairman, in order to make this amendment effective it will be necessary also to offer an amendment to the same effect in line 4 of page 2, section 2, after the word "of."

The reason I offer this amendment is this, Mr. Chairman: I think it is perfectly preposterous for this Government to attempt to maintain a botanic garden consisting of 400 acres. I think it is absolutely absurd for us to expend upon this one proposition the amount of money that will be necessary properly to care for and maintain 400 acres of land in a botanic garden. One hundred acres will be ample. As a matter of fact, it will be more than will be used by this Government in a botanic garden in 100 years. One hundred acres of land is a large body of land, if anybody has ever walked over it or plowed over it, and it will take them 25 years to get that 100 acres in a condition where we can present it to the people of this country as a real botanic garden.

If they undertake to incorporate 400 acres into this garden, it will take four times the amount of money that it would take to care for this 100 acres, and I think it is foolish for us to attempt to maintain a garden of this size, when, since 1836, we have been perfectly content with a little garden here containing 5 acres.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, I think the gentleman is very much mistaken in some of his statements, and probably correct in others. I do not believe that in 25 years there will be 100 acres in plants in the proposed botanic garden; but we have endeavored to make plain to gentlemen that it is not in the mind of anyone to have 400 acres of plants in this botanic garden, but that we are merely undertaking to define an area to be transferred to the keeping of the Department of Agriculture, to be known as the Botanic Garden. There is nothing compelling the immediate development of every acre of that land, and its planting in flowers or shrubs, or anything of that kind. Indeed, every man who has had anything to say about this bill in support of it has undertaken to convey to gentlemen who oppose the idea that it was not intended to disturb any part of the forest area within that 400 acres—and my impression is that at least 75 per cent of it is forest. I appeal to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] to know if that is not true of any part of Rock Creek Park?

Mr. MANN. I should say that more than 75 per cent is in forest.

Mr. SLAYDEN. At least 75 per cent. I think that 100 acres is entirely too small for a botanic garden. This is not intended to be the development of a day or a year or a decade. It is presumed that in making provision for the Botanic Garden, made necessary by the order to remove it from the present site and to tear down the fence, which would expose such plants as are there to depredation by boys and irresponsible people, we are building for all time. We take it for granted that the Government is going to live, and that there will be a development in the future, and a long time in the future it may be before we will reach the limit of the 400 acres and have it all developed in some way or other.

Again I call attention to the area of other botanic gardens. That at Kew, near London, contains 260 acres. That was founded 160 years ago. And, Mr. Chairman, let me say that my information is that the ground on which the botanic garden was placed was flat in the beginning, and at great expense hills were made. They wanted the variety of soil and appearance and the variety of exposures referred to by Dr. Galloway in his letter, and they had to do artificially and at great expense what we have provided for us without any cost.

The great garden at Batavia, in Java, contains 336 acres. It belongs to the general Dutch Government. The New York Botanic Garden, which is jointly controlled by the city of New York and the New York Botanic Garden Corporation, contains 250 acres. I did not think it proper that the Government of the United States should, in laying down a plan for the future, be so moderate in its demands as to be second, third, fourth, or fifth to the work done by other and less important Governments in the same line and second in importance even to the great State of New York. I hope that the amendment offered by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HOWARD] will not prevail.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the adoption of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HOWARD] to strike out "four" and insert in lieu thereof "one."

The question being taken, the Chairman announced that the noes appeared to have it.

Mr. HOWARD. Division, Mr. Chairman.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 47, noes 49.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I ask for tellers.

Tellers were ordered, and the Chairman appointed Mr. HOWARD and Mr. SLAYDEN.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 55, noes 65.

Accordingly the amendment was rejected.

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer the following amendment in line 16: After the word "of," strike out "four" and insert "two."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Georgia offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, page 2, line 16, by striking out the word "four" and inserting "two."

The question being taken, the Chairman announced that the noes appeared to have it.

Mr. HOWARD. Division, Mr. Chairman.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 51, noes 69.

Accordingly the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 4. That all unexpended appropriations in relation to the Botanic Garden which shall be available at the time this act takes effect shall be available for expenditure for the transfer of the Botanic Garden to the new site and for other purposes incident to its removal and maintenance.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer the following amendment:

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment which the gentleman from Pennsylvania sends up.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, line 18, strike out all of section 4 and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"SEC. 4. That the cost of making the transfer of the Botanic Garden to the new site shall be assessed against the property benefited, in proportion to the benefits, the cost of maintenance to be borne in equal proportions by the Federal Government and the District of Columbia."

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that that amendment is not germane in any respect to the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman from Texas on his point of order.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, I am not very familiar with the rules, and I can not refer to any precedent, but I am under the general impression that an amendment must be germane to the bill; and as I caught the reading of the amendment, it assumes that there is going to be some benefit to property in some section of the District of Columbia by the putting of a botanic garden in Rock Creek Park, and then it proposes to have taxed against that property which may be benefited, but which, I think, will not be, the cost of removing the present plant to the new site. Now, as a matter of fact, that is not germane to the section or the bill.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. SLAYDEN. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. Of course this is purely a parliamentary proposition?

Mr. SLAYDEN. Yes.

Mr. MANN. The bill provides for the removal of the Botanic Garden, and it provides that certain unexpended appropriations may be used for that purpose. Does not the gentleman think that, as far as the parliamentary point of view is concerned, it is quite within the power of the committee, as a germane proposition, to say that the cost of removal shall be raised in some other way?

Mr. SLAYDEN. I did not catch the gentleman's question.

Mr. MANN. Is it not just as germane to the purpose of the bill to say that the cost of removal shall be raised by special assessment, if Congress chooses to commit such an absurdity, as it is to say that it is to be raised by appropriations already made, so far as germaneness is concerned?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule. Section 4 of the bill provides that an unexpended balance of an appropriation heretofore made shall be used to pay these expenses. The amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania provides for another way to pay the expenses. The Chair, therefore, holds that it is germane, and the point of order is overruled.

Mr. SLAYDEN. I hope the amendment will be voted down.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. Chairman, I desire to say only a few words, and that is to the effect that if it be true, as has been charged here upon this floor repeatedly during the debate upon this bill, that land speculators are interested in this matter, the amendment which I offer will effectively pull the teeth of those who are supposed to be in the way of benefiting pecuniarily by this improvement. It has been said on this floor repeatedly to-day, as it was said last Wednesday, that the removal of this Botanic Garden would greatly enhance the land values in that particular neighborhood, and we have been informed to-day that there are large bodies of undeveloped land in that section which would be brought under development by the stimulus of this improvement.

The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] denounces as absurd the proposition which is put forth in my amendment, but that very proposition in other forms has been applied in many cases, and, if I mistake not, in the gentleman's own city—my own city once, and a city of which I am still as proud as I was when I lived there. If I am not sadly mistaken, when Lincoln Park in Chicago was laid out, many years ago, this very principle of betterment was applied. I am not quite sure of that, but I think I am not mistaken.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BAILEY. Yes.

Mr. MANN. I did not characterize as absurd the proposition to raise by special assessment the money for the establishment of a park. The gentleman is correct. All of our parks in Chicago practically were paid for by special assessment.

Mr. BAILEY. I understood the gentleman to characterize the special-assessment proposition as absurd?

Mr. MANN. Not at all.

Mr. BAILEY. I thought it very strange, coming from the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman's proposition is to strike out of the bill the section that makes an unexpended appropriation available for the removal of the park, and to provide that the cost of the removal of the park shall be by special assessment levied upon property benefited, when there will be no property benefited. That is the reason the proposition from my point of view is absurd. There would be no way of moving the Botanic Garden if the bill should pass with the gentleman's amendment in it.

Mr. OGLESBY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. OGLESBY. Will the gentleman not ask that the amendment be again reported? A great many of us did not hear it.

Mr. MANN. I can tell what it is in a word. The proposition of the gentleman from Pennsylvania is to strike out of the bill a section which authorizes, in the removal of the garden, the use of an unexpended appropriation for the maintenance of the Botanic Garden, and to insert in place of it a provision that the cost of removing the Botanic Garden shall be raised by special assessment levied upon the property benefited.

Mr. OGLESBY. Then I would like to ask the gentleman this question: Would not that be substantially nugatory legislation, in that no machinery is provided for the collection or levying of this assessment in any way?

Mr. MANN. I do not know about that; but I assume special assessment was to be levied under the law in the District of Columbia. If not, that could be easily corrected; but when you strike out of the bill the use of the money which can be used, the unexpended balance, and leave no money that can be used at all until you raise it by special assessment upon property which is specially benefited, and there is no property specially benefited, it is much easier to vote to strike out the enacting clause, because that is what it would amount to; and those gentlemen who believe that the enacting clause ought to be stricken out of the bill ought to vote for the amendment, while those who believe that the bill ought to be passed in some form ought to vote against the amendment.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. SLAYDEN. The gentleman understands that when we authorized the fence to be removed around the old Botanic Garden, a bid was received for its removal, and some one agreed to remove the fence for the old material. I think that when the gentleman and I were at the Department of Agriculture we were told that the cost of the removal of the garden from down here to any place that might be selected in Rock Creek Park would be trivial.

Mr. MANN. Purely nominal.

Mr. SLAYDEN. How could that be assessed?

Mr. MANN. The cost of the assessment would be more than the cost of removal, because there is no intention to remove most of it. Most of it is not worth carrying out.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the adoption of the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 5. That all laws or parts of laws not consistent with or that are repugnant to this act are hereby repealed.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise and report the bill as amended to the House with the recommendation that the amendment be agreed to, and that the bill as amended do pass.

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Chairman, I would like to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HOWARD. What became of my substitute? [Laughter.]

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. HOWARD. The Chair has one already.

Mr. STAFFORD. Has the substitute offered by the gentleman from Georgia ever been offered as a substitute during the consideration of the bill under the five-minute rule?

The CHAIRMAN. Before we reached the consideration of the bill under the five-minute rule, the substitute offered by the gentleman from Georgia was sent up and was read for information.

Mr. MANN. What is the motion now?

Mr. SLAYDEN. That the committee rise and report the bill back.

Mr. MANN. I think the gentleman from Texas ought to withdraw that motion and permit the gentleman from Georgia to offer his substitute.

Mr. SLAYDEN. I will say to the gentleman that the gentleman from Georgia submitted a parliamentary inquiry, and I was waiting for a decision on that question.

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Chairman, I think the proposition of the gentleman from Wisconsin at this time is pertinent for this reason: I asked unanimous consent at the outset of the debate to offer a substitute and to have that substitute pending and to be considered as offered to the original bill, to which there was no objection.

Mr. MANN. Well, the matter was never submitted to the House, and the gentleman knows that perfectly well; but I think the gentleman ought to have an opportunity to offer his substitute if he has been misled in any way.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, I am perfectly willing to withdraw the motion to rise and report the bill back with a favorable recommendation.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the substitute sent heretofore to the Clerk's desk by the gentleman from Georgia will now be offered. The Clerk will report it.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 12796) to provide for the removal of the Botanic Garden to Potomac Park and for its transfer to the control of the Department of Agriculture.

Be it enacted, etc., That for the purpose of establishing and maintaining a national arboretum and botanical garden in Potomac Park the Botanic Garden is hereby transferred from the direction and control of the Joint Committee on the Library to the direction and control of the Secretary of Agriculture, and he is authorized to remove to Potomac Park the plants, structures, and all that pertains to the Botanic Garden in its present location.

SEC. 2. That so much of Potomac Park, east of Washington & Southern Railway, as may be needed for the purposes of an arboretum and botanic garden is hereby transferred from the joint direction and control of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia and the Chief of Engineers of the United States Army to the direction and control of the Secretary of Agriculture.

SEC. 3. That the chairman of the Senate Committee on the Library and the chairman of the House Committee on the Library, the Secretary of Agriculture, and the Engineer Commissioner of the District of Columbia shall select and cause to be surveyed that portion of Potomac Park as may be necessary and set same apart for a botanic garden and arboretum.

SEC. 4. That all unexpended appropriations in relation to the Botanic Garden which shall be available at the time this act takes effect shall be available for expenditure for the transfer of the Botanic Garden to the new site and for other purposes incident to its removal and maintenance.

SEC. 5. That all laws or parts of laws not consistent with or that are repugnant to this act are hereby repealed.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the adoption of the substitute.

The question was taken, and the Chairman announced the noes seemed to have it.

On a division (demanded by Mr. HOWARD) there were—ayes 23, noes 64.

So the substitute was rejected.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, I renew my motion that the committee rise and report the bill as amended back to the House, with the recommendation that the amendment be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and Mr. ADAMSON having resumed the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 12796, and had directed him to report the same back to the House with an amendment, with the recommendation that the amendment be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the bill and amendment to final passage.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was read the third time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the passage of the bill.

The question was taken, and the Speaker pro tempore announced the noes appeared to have it.

On a division (demanded by Mr. SLAYDEN) there were—ayes 71, noes 44.

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of no quorum.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Georgia makes the point of no quorum. Evidently there is no quorum, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 137, nays 88, answered "present" 3, not voting 204, as follows:

Mr. HUGHES of Georgia with Mr. MERRITT.
Mr. CALLAWAY with Mr. WILLIS.
Mr. CLANCY with Mr. HAMILTON of New York.
Mr. MANN. I am paired with the gentleman from Alabama, Mr. UNDERWOOD, who is engaged in a conference. I desire to withdraw my vote of "yea" and be recorded as answering "present."
The name of Mr. MANN was called, and he answered "Present."
Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.
The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.
Mr. HOWARD. Is it not a fact that under a roll call of this sort Members voting have to qualify?
The SPEAKER pro tempore. The point of no quorum was made.
Mr. REILLY of Connecticut. And the gentleman made it himself. [Laughter.]
The SPEAKER pro tempore. A quorum is present. The Doorkeeper will open the doors.
On motion of Mr. SLAYDEN, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.
The SPEAKER pro tempore. Has the Library Committee any other bills to be brought up? If not, the Clerk will call the Committee on Printing.
The Clerk called the Committee on Printing.

CODIFICATION OF PUBLIC PRINTING LAWS.

Mr. BARNHART. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (H. R. 15902) to revise and codify the laws relating to public printing and binding and the distribution of Government publications.
The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BARNHART] calls up the bill H. R. 15902. The Clerk will report it.
The Clerk read the title of the bill, as follows:
A bill (H. R. 15902) to revise and codify the laws relating to public printing and binding and the distribution of Government publications.
The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is that a Union Calendar bill?
Mr. BARNHART. Yes; it is.
The SPEAKER pro tempore. Then the House automatically goes into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. SHACKLEFORD] will take the chair.
Thereupon the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 15902) to revise and codify the laws relating to the public printing and binding and the distribution of Government publications, with Mr. SHACKLEFORD in the chair.
Mr. BRYAN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by inserting a letter from Mr. Samuel Gompers.
The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman should have done that before we went into committee. The Chair is informed that it is not in order to transact business of that kind in committee. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 15902, which the Clerk will report.
Mr. BARNHART. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask my colleague——
Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, has the bill been reported?
Mr. BARNHART. Not yet.
Mr. MANN. I ask for the regular order.
The CHAIRMAN. It has been reported by title. The Clerk will report the bill.
The Clerk again read the title of the bill.
Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, of course it would take some time to read this bill on the first reading, and I suggest that the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BARNHART] ask unanimous consent to dispense with the first reading and say that he will move to rise after that; otherwise I shall object.
Mr. BARNHART. That was what I was going to do. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with.
The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BARNHART] asks that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with. Is there objection?
Mr. MURDOCK. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Chairman, will the bill be printed in the RECORD?
Mr. MANN. Oh, my, no. It is 125 pages of fine print.
Mr. MURDOCK. Will it ever appear in the RECORD?
Mr. MANN. That part of it will appear where it is read for amendment.
Mr. MURDOCK. Otherwise not?
Mr. MANN. Otherwise not.
Mr. MURDOCK. I shall not object. I do not want to encumber the RECORD.
The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?
There was no objection.
Mr. BARNHART. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.
The motion was agreed to.
Accordingly the committee rose; and Mr. ADAMSON, as Speaker pro tempore, having resumed the chair, Mr. SHACKLEFORD, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 15902) to revise and codify the laws relating to the public printing and binding and the distribution of Government publications, and had come to no resolution thereon.

IMPORTATION OF CHEMICALS, DYESTUFFS, ETC.

Mr. METZ rose.
The SPEAKER pro tempore. For what purpose does the gentleman from New York rise?
Mr. METZ. I rise for the purpose of asking unanimous consent to address the House for a few minutes on a matter of the utmost importance to every Member.
The SPEAKER pro tempore. How much time does the gentleman desire?
Mr. METZ. Five minutes.
The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from New York [Mr. METZ] asks unanimous consent to address the House for five minutes. Is there objection?
There was no objection.
Mr. BRYAN. Mr. Speaker, before the gentleman begins his speaking may I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by inserting a letter from Mr. Samuel Gompers on the seamen's bill?
The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Washington [Mr. BRYAN] asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD by inserting a letter from Mr. Samuel Gompers on the seamen's bill. Is there objection?
There was no objection.
The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from New York [Mr. METZ] is recognized.
Mr. METZ. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen, my purpose in rising is to call the attention of the Members of the House to a situation that is going to confront us in the very near future that will vitally affect every one of us and every one of our districts. It is the question of the importation of dyestuffs and materials involved in the manufacture of cotton, wool, silk, leather, paints, and printing inks.
There is in this country to-day not more than 60 days' supply. In the last 10 days I have had at least 25 per cent of the manufacturers of cotton, silk, and woolen goods in my office, begging for enough goods to keep them going. I mention this as an important fact, for we have got to shut down our mills or run only on part time within 60 days, unless we are relieved from abroad by shipments of the chemicals used in making our goods. Those products come mainly from Germany. I took the matter up with the Department of State and the Department of Commerce this morning, advising the officials there to get in touch with our consuls in Germany, especially those at Frankfort, Mannheim, and Cologne, along the Rhine, where all these large chemical plants are located. Those goods are usually shipped in Dutch bottoms down the Rhine to Rotterdam, and from there are transshipped to New York. Those ships are neutral. The goods are not contraband.
We ought to keep the State Department in communication with our consuls at those points, with a view to keeping open the transit of those products from abroad. It not only affects commerce, but it affects the men who use those things. It affects not only the running of the mills, but many pharmaceutical and medicinal preparations. The United States Army sent in to me yesterday for 2,000 vials of a certain remedy, and they got only 200, and the men are in the hospitals awaiting treatment and in need of them, and the Navy is in the same position. To this extent it affects our own Government already.
It is a very serious situation that confronts us, and we ought to do all we can to see to it that our mills are kept running by getting a supply of the necessary materials as long as we can by getting them through neutral bottoms. I have tried for three or four days to get cable advices, but have been unable to get them. Everything passes through London.
We should be advised and kept in touch with the situation abroad by our consuls in this crisis. It is a very serious crisis, indeed, and does not fully appear as yet, but in 60 days one-half or even all of our mills will be running on half time, or be entirely closed. What that will mean to our working people in this country I leave to you to comprehend. It is a situation that is, indeed, very serious.

Mr. O'SHAUNESSY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from New York yield to the gentleman from Rhode Island?

Mr. METZ. Yes; I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. O'SHAUNESSY. Are any of these dyestuffs manufactured in America?

Mr. METZ. A very small quantity; but the raw materials for them are made abroad; those chemicals with the long, unpronounceable names, which the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE] has at the tip of his tongue, are made mostly in Germany for the supply of the whole world.

Mr. MURDOCK. Are those plants running?

Mr. METZ. No; probably they are not running.

Mr. PAYNE. The gentleman is speaking of foreign plants?

Mr. METZ. Yes; I mean the foreign plants. They are probably not running, and they are not now manufacturing these goods. But they must have at least two or three months' supply on hand to supply the mills of the world. Now, the mills of the world have stopped. Russia, which is ordinarily a large consumer, has stopped. Austria is a large consumer. Belgium, France, England, and Germany are large consumers. They have all stopped. The only consumers left are Switzerland on silk goods, and to a very small extent Spain and Italy. We are the only important consumer left.

Mr. MURDOCK. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. METZ. Yes.

Mr. MURDOCK. Even in the event that we do get these shipments of these dyestuffs and these chemicals, in the course of three months there will be no supply left, will there?

Mr. METZ. Yes; for this reason: The supply on hand at the works is an amount sufficient to supply the normal demands of the world for two or three months, which will be sufficient to keep us alone going for a year, and there is no one else to use this supply at present. The goods are there on hand, made for the purpose of supplying the whole world. Now, if they are brought here in neutral bottoms, they will keep us going.

Mr. O'SHAUNESSY. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. METZ. Yes.

Mr. O'SHAUNESSY. Can these dyestuffs be manufactured in this country?

Mr. METZ. No; you can not build a plant overnight. These plants have taken 50 years to build.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. METZ. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. As I understand, the problem is to get the ships to convey these things over here.

Mr. METZ. No; the problem is that their shipments shall be maintained in neutral bottoms. The Dutch lines are running. There are enough ships in the Dutch lines that can bring them right along. The Holland-American Line can bring them right down the Rhine to Rotterdam, and from there to the United States. The question is to get in touch with them and keep them going.

Mr. REILLY of Connecticut. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. METZ. Yes.

Mr. REILLY of Connecticut. If you can not get any communication over there, how do you know the condition exists that you speak about?

Mr. METZ. I know it exists. I can not get into communication with them, but the State Department ought to be able to get into communication with them through its own ambassadors and consuls. It is high time that the United States take steps to communicate with its ambassadors and consuls, and that is all the communication I want to maintain.

Mr. REILLY of Connecticut. How do you know that the factories over there are closed?

Mr. METZ. Certainly they must be, at least, practically closed. I know, further, that in letters of July 30 from Germany no mention is made of anticipated trouble and the next day the war was on.

Mr. LEVY. What does the gentleman from New York recommend?

Mr. METZ. I do not recommend anything, except simply to state that I have asked the State Department and the Department of Commerce to cooperate, with a view to getting information through our consuls abroad, so that we may know what to tell the people who are so vitally interested in this matter. We have an opportunity for great development, and if we can keep our commerce going in neutral bottoms we are all right. If we are going to be cowed and not allow it, we shall be all wrong, and the trouble will fall on us. That is all there is to it.

Mr. CONRY. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. METZ. Certainly.

Mr. CONRY. Has the gentleman any suggestion whatever to make of a remedy?

Mr. METZ. Not until we get in touch with our consuls, who are located right where these mills are located, at the places I have mentioned.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. Is the State Department now cooperating?

Mr. METZ. I asked them this morning, and they agreed to cable at once. They realize the gravity of the situation. The Secretary of Commerce also understands the importance of this, and he is going to keep his agents there. But I want the Members of Congress to know, so that their own constituents may have the benefit. We want them to know that we are doing all we can to keep this thing going and to keep their plants running. If these materials can not be obtained, it means the shutting down of their plants and the throwing out of employment of hundreds of thousands of American men and women who are working in these mills. That is all I have to say, Mr. Speaker, and I thank the House for its courtesy. [Applause.]

LEAVE TO EXTEND REMARKS.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on general conditions.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Kansas asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD on general conditions. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. BARNHART. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 30 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until Thursday, August 13, 1914, at 12 o'clock noon.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, bills and resolutions were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the several calendars therein named, as follows:

Mr. OLDFIELD, from the Committee on Patents, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 15989) to revise and amend the laws relating to patents, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1082), which said bill and report were referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. SUMNERS, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 18172) to increase the limit of cost of the United States post-office building at Seymour, Ind., reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1083), which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills, resolutions, and memorials were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. EDMONDS: A bill (H. R. 18336) to authorize the President of the United States to build or acquire steamships for use as naval auxiliaries and transports, and to arrange for the use of these ships when not needed for such service, and to make appropriation therefor; to the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries.

By Mr. WHALEY: A bill (H. R. 18337) to authorize one-half of the water of the Santee River to be diverted and flowed into the Cooper River for the purpose of maintaining a canal connecting these two rivers; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. MOSS of West Virginia: A bill (H. R. 18338) providing for the purchase or construction of vessels for the Navy, to be used for mail, passenger, and freight service in time of peace and as auxiliary ships of the Navy in time of war; to the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries.

By Mr. LEWIS of Maryland: A bill (H. R. 18339) to authorize the establishment of a bureau of marine insurance in the Department of Commerce; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. IGOE: Joint resolution (H. J. Res. 319) proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. HOWARD: Joint resolution (H. J. Res. 320) requesting the Secretary of Commerce to submit to Congress statement showing amount of foodstuff exported during month preceding the European disturbances and amount exported since the existence of such disturbances, and other information; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. KINKEAD of New Jersey: Concurrent resolution (H. Con. Res. 45) authorizing the printing of 17,000 copies of the proceedings upon the unveiling of the statue of Commodore John Barry in Washington, May 16, 1914; to the Committee on Printing.

PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, private bills and resolutions were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. BROCKSON: A bill (H. R. 18340) for the relief of Isaac T. Cooper; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 18341) granting an increase of pension to John C. Short; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. FOWLER: A bill (H. R. 18342) granting an increase of pension to John Turner; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. GUDGER: A bill (H. R. 18343) granting a pension to James B. Anders; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. HAMMOND: A bill (H. R. 18344) granting an increase of pension to Erasmus D. Miller; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. KIESS of Pennsylvania: A bill (H. R. 18345) granting a pension to Hannah E. Bush; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. LANGLEY: A bill (H. R. 18346) for the relief of Rachel Preston, administratrix of the estate of Martin Preston, deceased; to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. McGILLICUDDY: A bill (H. R. 18347) granting an increase of pension to Sarah D. Edwards; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. OLDFIELD: A bill (H. R. 18348) granting an increase of pension to Lucy Brokaw; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. ROBERTS of Massachusetts: A bill (H. R. 18349) for the relief of the widow of Frank J. Sargent, deceased; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. SLAYDEN: A bill (H. R. 18350) for the relief of Cynthia E. Jett; to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. STEPHENS of Texas: A bill (H. R. 18351) for the relief of J. C. Elliott; to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. TEN EYCK: A bill (H. R. 18352) granting a pension to Isaac Kestbaum; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 18353) for the relief of Alfred D. Brink; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. WOODS: A bill (H. R. 18354) granting an increase of pension to James Patrick; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. GREGG: Resolution (H. Res. 591) referring certain claims to the Court of Claims for finding of facts and conclusions of law under section 151 of the act of March 3, 1911, entitled "An act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary"; to the Committee on War Claims.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk and referred as follows:

By Mr. ESCH: Petition of the Central Federated Union of New York City, favoring passage of House bill 10735, to create a bureau of labor safety in the Department of Labor; to the Committee on Labor.

By Mr. FESS: Petition of the Clinton County (Ohio) Teachers' Association, favoring national prohibition; to the Committee on Rules.

Also, petitions of 64 citizens of Wilmington, Ohio, protesting against national prohibition; to the Committee on Rules.

By Mr. GOOD: Petition of the Sioux Valley Medical Association, relative to House bill 6282, the Harrison antinarcotic bill; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. HELVERING: Petitions of 24 members of the United Brethren Church of Minneapolis, Kans., and 36 members of the Christian Church of Hope, Kans., favoring national prohibition; to the Committee on Rules.

By Mr. KIESS of Pennsylvania: Petition of sundry citizens of the fifteenth congressional district of Pennsylvania, favoring national prohibition; to the Committee on Rules.

By Mr. LONERGAN: Petition of Mr. Warren D. Chase, of Hartford, Conn., favoring House bill 13305, Stevens standard-price bill; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

SENATE.

THURSDAY, August 13, 1914.

(Legislative day of Tuesday, August 11, 1914.)

The Senate reassembled at 11 o'clock a. m. on the expiration of the recess.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Pursuant to the order of the Senate, the Sergeant at Arms will clear the galleries and close the doors.

The galleries having been cleared and the doors closed, the Senate resumed the consideration of executive business. After 5 hours and 18 minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened.

While the doors were closed, as in legislative session,

PURCHASE OF SILVER BULLION.

Mr. SMOOT. I ask unanimous consent to introduce a bill, it being a matter of emergency.

The bill (S. 6261) authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to purchase not to exceed 25,000,000 ounces of silver bullion, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Finance.

REGISTRY OF FOREIGN-BUILT VESSELS (S. DOC. NO. 564.)

Mr. O'GORMAN submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 18202) to provide for the admission of foreign-built ships to American registry for the foreign trade, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate and agree to the same with the following amendment: In lieu of the matter proposed by the Senate insert the following:

"That section 4132 of the Revised Statutes of the United States as amended by the act entitled 'An act to provide for the opening, maintenance, protection, and operation of the Panama Canal and the sanitation and government of the Canal Zone,' approved August 24, 1912, is hereby amended so that said section as amended shall read as follows:

"'SEC. 4132. Vessels built within the United States and belonging wholly to citizens thereof; and vessels which may be captured in war by citizens of the United States and lawfully condemned as prize, or which may be adjudged to be forfeited for a breach of the laws of the United States; and seagoing vessels, whether steam or sail, which have been certified by the Steamboat-Inspection Service as safe to carry dry and perishable cargo, wherever built, which are to engage only in trade with foreign countries or with the Philippine Islands and the islands of Guam and Tutuila, being wholly owned by citizens of the United States or corporations organized and chartered under the laws of the United States or of any State thereof, the president and managing directors of which shall be citizens of the United States, and no others, may be registered as directed in this title.'

"Foreign-built vessels may engage in the coastwise trade if registered pursuant to the provisions of this act within two years from its passage: Provided, That such vessels so admitted under the provisions of this section may contract with the Postmaster General under the act of March 3, 1891, entitled 'An act to provide for ocean mail service between the United States and foreign ports, and to promote commerce,' so long as such vessels shall in all respects comply with the provisions and requirements of said act.

"SEC. 2. Whenever the President of the United States shall find that the number of available persons qualified under now existing laws and regulations of the United States to fill the respective positions of watch officers on vessels admitted to registry by this act is insufficient, he is authorized to suspend by order, so far and for such time as he may find to be necessary, the provisions of law prescribing that all the watch officers of vessels of the United States registered for foreign trade shall be citizens of the United States.

"Whenever, in the judgment of the President of the United States, the needs of foreign commerce may require, he is also hereby authorized to suspend by order, so far and for such length of time as he may deem desirable, the provisions of the law requiring survey, inspection, and measurement by officers of the United States of foreign-built vessels admitted to American registry under this act.

"SEC. 3. With the consent of the President and during the continuance of hostilities in Europe, any ship chartered by the American Red Cross for relief purposes shall be admitted to American registry under the provisions of this act and shall be entitled to carry the American flag. And in the operation of any such ship the President is authorized to suspend the laws requiring American officers, if such officers are not readily available.

"SEC. 4. This act shall take effect immediately."

JAMES A. O'GORMAN,
J. R. THORNTON,
JOHN K. SHIELDS,
WILLIAM E. BORAH,
Managers on the part of the Senate.
J. W. ALEXANDER,
RUFUS HARDY,
O. W. UNDERWOOD,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. O'GORMAN. I ask that the conference report may lie on the table and be printed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. LEA of Tennessee in the chair). The conference report will lie on the table and be printed.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVALS.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. Latta, executive clerk, announced that the President had approved and signed the following acts:

On August 13, 1914:

S. 4628. An act extending the period of payment under reclamation projects, and for other purposes;

S. 4969. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy and of wars other than the Civil War, and to certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors;

S. 5278. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy and of wars other than the Civil War, and to certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors;

S. 5501. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy and of wars other than the Civil War, and to certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors; and

S. 5899. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy and of wars other than the Civil War, and to certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors.

After the doors were reopened,

AMERICAN-HAWAIIAN STEAMSHIP CO.

Mr. CULBERSON obtained the floor.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I ask the Senator from Texas to yield to me for just a moment to have a short telegram read into the RECORD in answer to a statement that was put into the RECORD the other day in a telegram which I submitted with reference to the American-Hawaiian Steamship Co.

Mr. CULBERSON. Very well.

Mr. JONES. I think it but justice that this telegram should be read and placed in the RECORD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. In the absence of objection, the Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

NEW YORK, August 12, 1914.

WESLEY L. JONES, Washington, D. C.:

We beg to emphatically deny the report that we have given all of the lumber space in our ships to one concern. We are ready to take lumber from anyone when our service is established.

AMERICAN-HAWAIIAN STEAMSHIP CO.

AMELIA ERICKSON.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Texas yield to the Senator from South Dakota?

Mr. CULBERSON. For what purpose?

Mr. STERLING. If the Senator will yield to me, I should like to submit a resolution and have it referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there any objection?

Mr. CULBERSON. I do not object.

The resolution, S. Res. 440, was read and referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to pay to Amelia Erickson, widow of John L. Erickson, late a messenger to Senator STERLING, a sum equal to six months' salary at the rate he was receiving by law at the time of his death, said sum to be considered as in lieu of funeral expenses and other allowances.

BILL INTRODUCED.

A bill was introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. BURTON:

A bill (S. 6262) granting an increase of pension to Robert De Gray; to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. CULBERSON. I ask that the unfinished business be proceeded with.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 15657) to supplement existing laws against unlawful restraints and monopolies, and for other purposes.

Mr. CULBERSON. I ask unanimous consent that the formal reading of the bill may be dispensed with.

The VICE PRESIDENT. And that the bill be read for amendment?

Mr. CULBERSON. I will bring that question up later, Mr. President. I desire to present one proposition at a time.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, if we proceed with the bill at all, after the formal reading has been dispensed with, it will be for the consideration of committee amendments, and I think the Senator from Texas ought to include that in his request. Then, of course, any Senator can speak on any amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. As the Chair recalls, the Senator from Texas has once before preferred the same request, and there was objection.

Mr. CULBERSON. By the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER].

Mr. NELSON. The Senator from New Hampshire objected. The Chair is correct in that statement.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from New Hampshire objected.

Mr. NELSON. And in view of his objection and on his account, I shall have to object now.

Mr. CULBERSON. I do not think the Senator from New Hampshire would object if he were present; but in view of the objection of the Senator from Minnesota, the bill must be read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the bill.

The Secretary read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That "antitrust laws" as used herein includes the act entitled "An act to protect trade and commerce against unlawful restraints and monopolies," approved July 2, 1890; sections 73 to 77, inclusive, of an act entitled "An act to reduce taxation, to provide revenue for the Government, and for other purposes," of August 27, 1894; an act entitled "An act to amend sections 73 and 76 of the act of August 27, 1894, entitled 'An act to reduce taxation, to provide revenue for the Government, and for other purposes,'" approved February 12, 1913; and also this act.

"Commerce" as used herein means trade or commerce among the several States and with foreign nations, or between the District of Columbia or any Territory of the United States and any State, Territory, or foreign nation, or between any insular possessions or other places under the jurisdiction of the United States, or between any such possession or place and any State or Territory of the United States or the District of Columbia or any foreign nation, or within the District of Columbia or any Territory or any insular possession or other place under the jurisdiction of the United States.

The word "person" or "persons" wherever used in this act shall be deemed to include corporations and associations existing under or authorized by the laws of either the United States, the laws of any of the Territories, the laws of any State, or the laws of any foreign country.

SEC. 2. That any person engaged in commerce who shall, either directly or indirectly, discriminate in price between different purchasers of commodities in the same or different sections or communities, which commodities are sold for use, consumption, or resale within the United States or any Territory thereof or the District of Columbia or any insular possession or other place under the jurisdiction of the United States with the purpose or intent thereby to destroy or wrongfully injure the business of a competitor of either such purchaser or seller shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction thereof shall be punished by a fine not exceeding $5,000 or by imprisonment not exceeding one year, or by both, in the discretion of the court: Provided, That nothing herein contained shall prevent discrimination in price between purchasers of commodities on account of differences in the grade, quality, or quantity of the commodity sold, or that makes only due allowance for difference in the cost of transportation: And provided further, That nothing herein contained shall prevent persons engaged in selling goods, wares, or merchandise in commerce from selecting their own customers, except as provided in section 3 of this act.

SEC. 3. That it shall be unlawful for the owner, operator, or transporter of the product or products of any mine, oil or gas well, reduction works, refinery, or hydroelectric plant producing coal, oil, gas, or hydroelectric energy, or for any person controlling the products thereof, engaged in selling such product in commerce to refuse arbitrarily to sell such product to a responsible person, firm, or corporation who applies to purchase such product for use, consumption, or resale within the United States or any Territory thereof or the District of Columbia or any insular possession or other place under the jurisdiction of the United States, and any person violating this section shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and shall be punished as provided in the preceding section.

SEC. 4. That any person engaged in commerce who shall lease or make a sale of goods, wares, merchandise, machinery, supplies, or other commodities for use, consumption, or resale within the United States, or any Territory thereof or the District of Columbia or any insular possession or other place under the jurisdiction of the United States, or fix a price charged therefor, or discount from, or rebate upon such price, on the condition, agreement, or understanding that the lessee or purchaser thereof shall not use or deal in the goods, wares, merchandise, machinery, supplies, or other commodities of a competitor or competitors of the lessor or seller shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction thereof shall be punished by a fine not exceeding $5,000, or by imprisonment not exceeding one year, or by both, in the discretion of the court.

SEC. 5. That any person who shall be injured in his business or property by reason of anything forbidden in the antitrust laws may sue therefor in any district court of the United States in the district in which the defendant resides or is found or has an agent, without respect to the amount in controversy, and shall recover threefold the damages by him sustained, and the cost of suit, including a reasonable attorney's fee.

SEC. 6. That whenever in any suit or proceeding in equity hereafter brought by or on behalf of the United States under any of the antitrust laws there shall have been rendered a final judgment or decree to the effect that a defendant has entered into a contract, combination in the form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce, or has monopolized, or attempted to monopolize or combined with any person or persons to monopolize, any part of commerce, in violation of any of the antitrust laws, said judgment or decree shall, to the full extent to which such judgment or decree would constitute in any other proceeding an estoppel as between the United States and such defendant, constitute against such defendant conclusive evidence of the same facts, and be conclusive as to the same questions of law in favor of any other party in any action or proceeding brought under or involving the provisions of any of the antitrust laws.

Whenever any suit or proceeding in equity is hereafter brought by or on behalf of the United States, under any of the antitrust laws, the statute of limitations in respect of each and every private right of action, arising under such antitrust laws, and based, in whole or in part, on any matter complained of in said suit or proceeding in equity, shall be suspended during the pendency of such suit or proceeding in equity.

SEC. 7. That nothing contained in the antitrust laws shall be construed to forbid the existence and operation of fraternal, labor, consumers, agricultural, or horticultural organizations, orders, or associations instituted for the purposes of mutual help, and not having capital stock or conducted for profit, or to forbid or restrain individual members of such organizations, orders, or associations from carrying out the legitimate objects thereof; nor shall such organizations, orders, or associations, or the members thereof, be held or construed to be illegal combinations or conspiracies in restraint of trade, under the antitrust laws.

Nothing contained in the antitrust laws shall be construed to forbid associations of traffic, operating, accounting, or other officers of common carriers for the purpose of conferring among themselves or of making any lawful agreement as to any matter which is subject to the regulating or supervisory jurisdiction of the Interstate Commerce Commission, but all such matters shall continue to be subject to such jurisdiction of the commission, and all such agreements shall be entered and kept of record by the carriers, parties thereto, and shall at all times be open to inspection by the commission, but no such agreement shall go into effect or become operative until the same shall have first been submitted to, and approved by, the Interstate Commerce Commission: Provided, That nothing in this act shall be construed as modifying existing laws prohibiting the pooling of earnings or traffic, or existing laws against joint agreements by common carriers to maintain rates.

SEC. 8. That no corporation engaged in commerce shall acquire, directly or indirectly, the whole or any part of the stock or other share capital of another corporation engaged also in commerce, where the effect of such acquisition is to eliminate or substantially lessen competition between the corporation whose stock is so acquired and the corporation making the acquisition, or to create a monopoly of any line of trade in any section or community.

No corporation shall acquire, directly or indirectly, the whole or any part of the stock or other share capital of two or more corporations engaged in commerce where the effect of such acquisition, or the use of such stock by the voting or granting of proxies or otherwise, is to eliminate or substantially lessen competition between such corporations, or any of them, whose stock or other share capital is so acquired, or to create a monopoly of any line of trade in any section or community.

This section shall not apply to corporations purchasing such stock solely for investment and not using the same by voting or otherwise to bring about, or in attempting to bring about, the substantial lessening of competition. Nor shall anything contained in this section prevent a corporation engaged in commerce from causing the formation of subsidiary corporations for the actual carrying on of their immediate lawful business, or the natural and legitimate branches or extensions thereof, or from owning and holding all or a part of the stock of such subsidiary corporations, when the effect of such formation is not to eliminate or substantially lessen competition.

Nothing contained in this section shall be held to affect or impair any right heretofore legally acquired: Provided, That nothing in this paragraph shall make stockholding relations between corporations legal when such relations constitute violations of the antitrust laws.

Nor shall anything herein contained be construed to prohibit any railroad corporation from aiding in the construction of branch or short line railroads so located as to become feeders to the main line of the company so aiding in such construction or from acquiring or owning all or any part of the stock of such branch line, nor to prevent any railroad corporation from acquiring and owning all or any part of the stock of a branch or short line railroad constructed by an independent company where there is no substantial competition between the company owning the branch line so constructed and the company owning the main line acquiring the property or an interest therein, nor to prevent any railroad company from extending any of its lines through the medium of the acquisition of stock or otherwise of any other railroad company where there is no substantial competition between the company extending its lines and the company whose stock, property, or an interest therein is so acquired.

A violation of any of the provisions of this section shall be deemed a misdemeanor, and shall be punishable by a fine not exceeding $5,000, or by imprisonment not exceeding one year, or by both, in the discretion of the court.

SEC. 9. That from and after two years from the date of the approval of this act no person who is engaged as an individual, or who is a member of a partnership, or is a director or other officer of a corporation that is engaged in the business, in whole or in part, of producing or selling equipment, materials, or supplies to, or in the construction or maintenance of, railroads or other common carriers engaged in commerce, shall act as a director or other officer or employee of any other corporation or common carrier engaged in commerce to which he, or such partnership or corporation, sells or leases, directly or indirectly, equipment, materials, or supplies, or for which he or such partnership or corporation, directly or indirectly, engages in the work of construction or maintenance; and after the expiration of said period no person who is engaged as an individual or who is a member of a partnership or is a director or other officer of a corporation which is engaged in the conduct of a bank or trust company shall act as a director or other officer or employee of any such common carrier for which he or such partnership or bank or trust company acts, either separately or in connection with others, as agent for or underwriter of the sale or disposal by such common carrier of issues or parts of issues of its securities, or from which he or such partnership or bank or trust company purchases, either separtely or in connection with others, issues or parts of issues of securities of such common carrier.

That from and after two years from the date of the approval of this act no person shall at the same time be a director or other officer or employee of more than one bank, banking association, or trust company organized or operating under the laws of the United States either of which has deposits, capital, surplus, and undivided profits aggregating more than $2,500,000; and no private banker or person who is a director in any bank or trust company, organized and operating under the laws of a State, having deposits, capital, surplus, and undivided profits aggregating more than $2,500,000, shall be eligible to be a director in any bank or banking association organized or operating under the laws of the United States. The eligibility of a director, officer, or employee under the foregoing provisions shall be determined by the average amount of deposits, capital, surplus, and undivided profits as shown in the official statements of such bank, banking association, or trust company, filed as provided by law during the fiscal year next preceding the date set for the annual election of directors, and when a director, officer, or employee has been elected or selected in accordance with the provisions of this act it shall be lawful for him to continue as such for one year thereafter under said election or employment.

No bank, banking association, or trust company organized or operating under the laws of the United States in any city or incorporated town or village of more than 100,000 inhabitants, as shown by the last preceding decennial census of the United States, shall have as a director or other officer or employee any private banker or any director or other officer or employee of any other bank, banking association, or trust company located in the same place: Provided, That nothing in this section shall apply to mutual savings banks not having a capital stock represented by shares: Provided further, That a director or other officer or employee of such bank, banking association, or trust company may be a director or other officer or employee of not more than one other bank or trust company organized under the laws of the United States or any State where the entire capital stock of one is owned by stockholders in the other: And provided further, That nothing contained in this section shall forbid a director of class A of a Federal reserve bank, as defined in the Federal reserve act, from being an officer or director, or both an officer and director, in one member bank.

That from and after two years from the date of the approval of this act no person at the same time shall be a director in any two or more corporations, either of which has capital, surplus, and undivided profits aggregating more than $1,000,000, engaged in whole or in part in commerce, other than common carriers subject to the act to regulate commerce, approved February 4, 1887, if such corporations are or shall have been theretofore, by virtue of their business and location of operation, competitors, so that an elimination of competition by agreement between them would constitute a violation of any of the provisions of any of the antitrust laws. The eligibility of a director under the foregoing provision shall be determined by the aggregate amount of capital, surplus, and undivided profits, exclusive of dividends declared but not paid to stockholders, at the end of the fiscal year of said corporation next preceding the election of directors, and when a director has been elected in accordance with the provisions of this act it shall be lawful for him to continue as such for one year thereafter.

When any person elected or chosen as a director or officer or selected as an employee of any bank or other corporation subject to the provisions of this act is eligible at the time of his election or selection to act for such bank or other corporation in such capacity his eligibility to act in such capacity shall not be affected and he shall not become or be deemed amenable to any of the provisions hereof by reason of any change in the affairs of such bank or other corporation from whatsoever cause, whether specifically excepted by any of the provisions hereof or not, until the expiration of one year from the date of his election or employment.

That any person who shall violate any of the provisions of this section shall be guilty of a misdemeanor and shall be punished by a fine of not exceeding $100 a day for each day of the continuance of such violation, or by imprisonment for such period as the court may designate, not exceeding one year, or by both, in the discretion of the court.

SEC. 10. That any suit, action, or proceeding under the antitrust laws against a corporation may be brought not only in the judicial district whereof it is an inhabitant, but also in any district wherein it may be found or has an agent.

SEC. 11. That in any suit, action, or proceeding brought by or on behalf of the United States subpœnas for witnesses who are required to attend a court of the United Statse in any judicial district in any case, civil or criminal, arising under the antitrust laws may run into any other district: Provided, That in civil cases no writ of subpœna shall issue for witnesses living out of the district in which the court is held at a greater distance than 100 miles from the place of holding the same without the permission of the trial court being first had upon proper application and cause shown.

SEC. 12. That whenever a corporation shall violate any of the provisions of the antitrust laws, such violation shall be deemed to be also that of the individual directors, officers, or agents of such corporation who shall have authorized, ordered, or done any of the acts constituting in whole or in part such violation, and such violation shall be deemed a misdemeanor, and upon conviction therefor of any such director, officer, or agent he shall be punished by a fine of not exceeding $5,000 or by imprisonment for not exceeding one year, or by both, in the discretion of the court.

SEC. 13. That the several district courts of the United States are hereby invested with jurisdiction to prevent and restrain violations of this act, and it shall be the duty of the several district attorneys of the United States, in their respective districts, under the direction of the Attorney General, to institute proceedings in equity to prevent and restrain such violations. Such proceedings may be by way of petition setting forth the case and praying that such violation shall be enjoined or otherwise prohibited. When the parties complained of shall have been duly notified of such petition, the court shall proceed, as soon as may be, to the hearing and determination of the case; and pending such petition, and before final decree, the court may at any time make such temporary restraining order or prohibition as shall be deemed just in the premises. Whenever it shall appear to the court before which any such proceeding may be pending that the ends of justice require that other parties should be brought before the court, the court may cause them to be summoned, whether they reside in the district in which the court is held or not, and subpœnas to that end may be served in any district by the marshal thereof.

SEC. 14. That any person, firm, corporation, or association shall be entitled to sue for and have injunctive relief, in any court of the United States having jurisdiction over the parties, against threatened loss or damage by a violation of the antitrust laws, when and under the same conditions and principles as injunctive relief against threatened conduct that will cause loss or damage is granted by courts of equity, under the rules governing such proceedings, and upon the execution of proper bond against damages for an injunction improvidently granted and a showing that the danger of irreparable loss or damage is immediate, a preliminary injunction may issue: Provided, That nothing herein contained shall be construed to entitle any person, firm, corporation, or association, except the United States, to bring suit in equity for injunctive relief against any common carrier subject to the provisions of the act to regulate commerce, approved February 4, 1887, in respect of any matter subject to the regulation, supervision, or other jurisdiction of the Interstate Commerce Commission.

SEC. 15. That no preliminary injunction shall be issued without notice to the opposite party.

No temporary restraining order shall be granted without notice to the opposite party unless it shall clearly appear from specific facts shown by affidavit or by the verified bill that immediate and irreparable injury, loss, or damage will result to property or a property right of the applicant before notice could be served or hearing had thereon. Every such temporary restraining order shall be indorsed with the date and hour of issuance, shall be forthwith filed in the clerk's office and entered of record, shall define the injury and state why it is irreparable and why the order was granted without notice, and shall by its terms expire within such time after entry, not to exceed 10 days, as the court or judge may fix. In case a temporary restraining order shall be granted without notice in the contingency specified, the matter of the issuance of a preliminary injunction shall be set down for a hearing at the earliest possible time and shall take precedence of all matters except older matters of the same character; and when the same comes up for hearing the party obtaining the temporary restraining order shall proceed with his application for a preliminary injunction, and if he does not do so the court shall dissolve his temporary restraining order. Upon two days' notice to the party obtaining such temporary restraining order the opposite party may appear and move the dissolution or modification of the order, and in that event the court or judge shall proceed to hear and determine the motion as expeditiously as the ends of justice may require.

Section 263 of an act entitled "An act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary," approved March 3, 1911, is hereby repealed.

Nothing in this section contained shall be deemed to alter, repeal, or amend section 266 of an act entitled "An act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary," approved March 3, 1911.

SEC. 16. That, except as otherwise provided in section 14 of this act, no restraining order or interlocutory order of injunction shall issue, except upon the giving of security by the applicant in such sum as the court or judge may deem proper, conditioned upon the payment of such costs and damages as may be incurred or suffered by any party who may be found to have been wrongfully enjoined or restrained thereby.

SEC. 17. That every order of injunction or restraining order shall set forth the reasons for the issuance of the same, shall be specific in terms, and shall describe in reasonable detail, and not by reference to the bill of complaint or other document, the act or acts sought to be restrained, and shall be binding only upon the parties to the suit, their agents, servants, employees, and attorneys, or those in active concert with them, and who shall, by personal service or otherwise, have received actual notice of the same.

SEC. 18. That no restraining order or injunction shall be granted by any court of the United States, or a judge or the judges thereof, in any case between an employer and employees, or between employers and employees, or between employees, or between persons employed and persons seeking employment, involving, or growing out of, a dispute concerning terms or conditions of employment, unless necessary to prevent irreparable injury to property, or to a property right, of the party making the application, for which injury there is no adequate remedy at law, and such property or property right must be described with particularity in the application, which must be in writing and sworn to by the applicant or by his agent or attorney.

And no such restraining order or injunction shall prohibit any person or persons from terminating any relation of employment, or from ceasing to perform any work or labor or from recommending, advising, or persuading others by peaceful means so to do; or from attending at or near a house or place where any person resides or works, or carries on business or happens to be, for the purpose of peacefully obtaining or communicating information, or of peacefully persuading any person to work or to abstain from working; or from ceasing to patronize or to employ any party to such dispute, or from recommending, advising, or persuading others by peaceful means so to do; or from paying or giving to, or withholding from, any person engaged in such dispute, any strike benefits or other moneys or things of value; or from peaceably assembling at any place in a lawful manner, and for lawful purposes; or from doing any act or thing which might lawfully be done in the absence of such dispute by any party thereto; nor shall any of the acts specified in this paragraph be considered or held unlawful.

SEC. 19. That any person who shall willfully disobey any lawful writ, process, order, rule, decree, or command of any district court of the United States or any court of the District of Columbia by doing any act or thing therein, or thereby forbidden to be done by him, if the act or thing so done by him be of such character as to constitute also a criminal offense under any statute of the United States, or at common law, shall be proceeded against for his said contempt as hereinafter provided.

SEC. 20. That whenever it shall be made to appear to any district court or judge thereof, or to any judge therein sitting, by the return of a proper officer on lawful process, or upon the affidavit of some credible person, or by information filed by any district attorney, that there is reasonable ground to believe that any person has been guilty of such contempt, the court or judge thereof, or any judge therein sitting, may issue a rule requiring the said person so charged to show cause upon a day certain why he should not be punished therefor, which rule, together with a copy of the affidavit or information, shall be served upon the person charged, with sufficient promptness to enable him to prepare for and make return to the order at the time fixed therein. If upon or by such return, in the judgment of the court, the alleged contempt be not sufficiently purged, a trial shall be directed at a time and place fixed by the court: Provided, however, That if the accused, being a natural person, fail or refuse to make return to the rule to show cause, an attachment may issue against his person to compel an answer, and in case of his continued failure or refusal, or if for any reason it be impracticable to dispose of the matter on the return day, he may be required to give reasonable bail for his attendance at the trial and his submission to the final judgment of the court. Where the accused person is a body corporate, an attachment for the sequestration of its property may be issued upon like refusal or failure to answer.

In all cases within the purview of this act such trial may be by the court, or, upon demand of the accused, by a jury; in which latter event the court may impanel a jury from the jurors then in attendance, or the court or the judge thereof in chambers may cause a sufficient number of jurors to be selected and summoned, as provided by law, to attend at the time and place of trial, at which time a jury shall be selected and impaneled as upon a trial for misdemeanor; and such trial shall conform, as near as may be, to the practice in criminal cases prosecuted by indictment or upon information.

If the accused be found guilty, judgment shall be entered accordingly, prescribing the punishment, either by fine or imprisonment, or both, in the discretion of the court. Such fine shall be paid to the United States or to the complainant or other party injured by the act constituting the contempt, or may, where more than one is so damaged, be divided or apportioned among them as the court may direct, but in no case shall the fine to be paid to the United States exceed, in case the accused is a natural person, the sum of $1,000, nor shall such imprisonment exceed the term of six months.

SEC. 21. That the evidence taken upon the trial of any person so accused may be preserved by bill of exceptions, and any judgment of conviction may be reviewed upon writ of error in all respects as now provided by law in criminal cases, and may be affirmed, reversed, or modified as justice may require. Upon the granting of such writ of error, execution of judgment shall be stayed, and the accused, if thereby sentenced to imprisonment, shall be admitted to bail in such reasonable sum as may be required by the court, or by any justice, or any judge of any district court of the United States or any court of the District of Columbia.

SEC. 22. That nothing herein contained shall be construed to relate to contempts committed in the presence of the court, or so near thereto as to obstruct the administration of justice, nor to contempts committed in disobedience of any lawful writ, process, order, rule, decree, or command entered in any suit or action brought or prosecuted in the name of, or on behalf of, the United States, but the same, and all other cases of contempt not specifically embraced within section 19 of this act, may be punished in conformity to the usages at law and in equity now prevailing.

SEC. 23. That no proceeding for contempt shall be instituted against any person unless begun within one year from the date of the act complained of; nor shall any such proceeding be a bar to any criminal prosecution for the same act or acts; but nothing herein contained shall affect any proceedings in contempt pending at the time of the passage of this act.

DEALING IN COTTON FUTURES.

Mr. ASHURST obtained the floor.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President——

Mr. ASHURST. I yield to the Senator from Georgia for a moment.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. The conference report on Senate bill 110, regulating the dealing in cotton futures, was presented to the Senate by me on July 24 and ordered to lie on the table and to be printed in the RECORD. I move that we now take it up for consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there any objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I ask for the adoption of the conference report.

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President, I presume that can be done without prejudice to the unfinished business. A conference report is in order at any time.

The VICE PRESIDENT. No; a conference report is not in order at any time, so far as taking it up is concerned.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. It is in order to move to take it up at any time. I desire to state that I do not think it will take 10 minutes to dispose of the report.

Mr. CULBERSON. The rule distinctly says that a conference report can be made at any time.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Yes; and it has been made; but the motion now is to take up the conference report, which is a different thing.

Mr. JONES. I simply wish to ask the Senator whether he knows of any opposition to the report.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I do not.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Georgia that the Senate take up the conference report.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to consider the conference report, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 110) to regulate trading in cotton futures and provide for the standardization of "upland" and "gulf" cottons separately, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House, and agree to the same amended as follows:

In section 3, line 4, of the amendment strike out "1 cent" and insert in lieu thereof "2 cents."

In section 5, seventh line of fifth page, of the amendment, after the comma following "thereof," strike out all the rest of the paragraph and in lieu thereof insert the following: "fixed, assessed, collected, and paid, in such manner and in accordance with such rules and regulations as may be prescribed by the Secretary of Agriculture."

In section 5, twenty-second line on the fifth page, of the amendment, after "heard," insert the following: "by him or such officer, officers, agent, or agents of the Department of Agriculture as he may designate."

In section 9 of the amendment strike out the sentence beginning "That," in line 10 of page 8, and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"That the Secretary of Agriculture is authorized, from time to time, to establish and promulgate standards of cotton by which its quality or value may be judged or determined, including its grade, length of staple, strength of staple, color, and such other qualities, properties, and conditions as may be standardized in practical form, which, for the purposes of this act, shall be known as the 'Official cotton standards of the United States,' and to adopt, change, or replace the standard for any grade of cotton established under the act making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1909 (35 Stat. L., p. 251), and acts supplementary thereto: Provided, That any standard of any cotton established and promulgated under this act by the Secretary of Agriculture shall not be changed or replaced within a period less than one year from and after the date of the promulgation thereof by the Secretary of Agriculture: Provided further, That, subsequent to six months after the date section 3 of this act becomes effective, no change or replacement of any standard of any cotton established and promulgated under this act by the Secretary of Agriculture shall become effective until after one year's public notice thereof, which notice shall specify the date when the same is to become effective."

At the end of section 10 of the amendment insert a new paragraph, as follows:

"This section shall not be construed to apply to any contract of sale made in compliance with section 5 of this act."

In section 11, line 8, of the amendment strike out "1 cent" and insert in lieu thereof "2 cents."

In section 11, first line on page 11, of the amendment strike out "quality" and insert in lieu thereof "quantity."

In section 20, line 9, of the amendment strike out "and" preceding "to."

In section 20, line 10, of the amendment strike out "permanent."

In section 20, line 12, strike out "and he shall" and insert in lieu thereof "to."

In section 20, line 13, of the amendment strike out "including" and insert in lieu thereof "to pay."

In section 20, line 13, of the amendment strike out "the employment of" and insert in lieu thereof "to employ."

In section 20, line 15, of the amendment, after the period, insert the following:

"The Secretary of Agriculture is hereby directed to publish from time to time the results of investigations made in pursuance of this act."

In section 21, line 5, of the amendment strike out "three" and in lieu thereof insert "six."

In section 21, line 6, of the amendment strike out the period and insert: ": Provided, That nothing in this act shall be construed to apply to any contract of sale of any cotton for future delivery mentioned in section 3 of this act which shall have been made prior to the date when said section 3 becomes effective."

And the House agree to the same.

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the title and agree to the same.

HOKE SMITH,
MORRIS SHEPPARD,
JAMES H. BRADY,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

A. F. LEVER,
GORDON LEE,
G. N. HAUGEN,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I move the adoption of the report.

The report was agreed to.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 15657) to supplement existing laws against unlawful restraints and monopolies, and for other purposes.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I gave notice one week ago to-day that I would address the Senate upon House bill 15657, which had been favorably reported from the Committee on the Judiciary some time prior thereto. When, however, the shipping bill came before the Senate I felt it to be my duty, important as the pending bill is, not to project myself and my remarks into the time which was needed for the discussion of the shipping bill, because of the crisis which presented itself at that time. Subsequently the matter of the treaties for the advancement of the cause of general peace came before the Senate in executive session, and my notice was still further continued for a couple of days.

I am pleased, indeed, that intervening between the present moment and a week ago, when I gave my notice, two great subjects of legislation have been consummated—the shipping bill and the ratification of the peace treaties. Both were especially important, in view of certain eventualities in Europe; and I venture to make the observation at this time, in reply to some who have criticized the administration's policy of "watchful waiting," what a pity it is that in some of the chancelleries of Europe there could not have been exercised some of that "watchful waiting" which we all now commend, but which, while the waiting was going on, some persons apparently did not favor.

I rise, Mr. President, as I stated, to speak in behalf of House bill 15657; and as the hour is obviously late and Senators weary, I shall proceed as rapidly as I may, but after I shall have concluded, if it appears obvious that there are any historical inaccuracies in my remarks, I shall be glad to have them corrected.

There is a general impression that section 7 is the labor section of the bill. While that is true, sections 15 to 23, inclusive, are also denominated as the labor sections of the bill.

Some time since I clipped from Collier's Weekly the following interesting and pertinent article, entitled "Labor and the trusts":

The country was horrified recently by the discovery that the Steel Trust, which had paid fabulous sums to promoters and stockholders, worked many of its employees 12 hours a day 7 days in the week—worked them, too, at such low wages that, even if a man toiled his 12 hours each of the 365 days in the year, he could not earn enough to provide a decent living for a small family. The doctrine of legalized monopoly threatens to perpetuate the cause which made such conditions possible and which must breed similar evils in the future. That cause is the huge overweening power of the great trusts, the inexhaustible resources of organized capital, which enable it to prevent the organization of labor and to make the term "ironmaster" a reality. America must breed only freemen. It must develop citizens. It can not develop citizens unless the workingman possesses industrial liberty; and industrial liberty for the workingman is impossible if the right to organize be denied. Without the right to organize, short hours, high wages, and the best of working conditions, whether introduced by legislation or by the welfare departments of great corporations, can do no more than make slavery luxurious.

The great trusts have made the extermination of organized labor from their own works the foundation stone of their administration. Read this resolution, passed by the Steel Trust in 1901:

"That we are unalterably opposed to any extension of union labor and advise subsidiary companies to take firm positions when these questions come up and say they are not going to recognize it—that is, any extension of unions in mills where they do not now exist."

Here is a Steel Trust advertisement:

"Wanted—Sixty-two house men, tinners, catchers, and helpers to work in open shops; Syrians, Poles, and Roumanians preferred; steady employment and good wages to men willing to work; fare paid and no fees charged for this work. Central Employment Bureau, 628 Pennsylvania Avenue."

The result is that about 80 per cent of the unskilled laborers in the steel and iron business are foreigners of these classes. This ability of the great combinations of capital to overcome combinations of workingmen is confidently relied upon by the advocates of trusts as one of the savings of combination. Montague, in his Trusts of To-day, in explaining the trusts' "improved position in dealing with labor," says:

"By its preponderant influence in the business, the trust has an enormous advantage in its dealings with combined labor. In 1899, during the smelters' strike in Colorado, the American Smelting & Refining Co. closed the mills in which the strikers had been employed and transferred the work to its other mills; the effect was immediately to break the strike. The United States Steel Corporation had similar success in 1901 with the Amalgamated Association of Iron and Steel Workers. Had the association been dealing with competing employers, each eager to keep his mills running and to get orders which his recalcitrant rivals could not accept, its demands would soon have been granted."

The success of the German Steel Trust appears to be due in part to this same ability to frustrate the aspirations of the workingman, as shown by the following passage quoted in President Van Hise's Concentration and Control:

"Another advantage obtained by the members from the existence of the cartel [trust] is in dealing with strikes and labor difficulties. Whenever a strike threatens the concern can transfer its quota to some other mill where there are no labor difficulties. Furthermore, the syndicate contract contains a provision releasing the mill from obligation to deliver goods whenever a strike is on. Such an arrangement would have been impossible under the competitive system, and losses growing out of strikes would undoubtedly have been much greater if the syndicate had not existed."

The italics in these quotations are ours. The labor policy of the Steel Trust is not exceptional. The Harvester Trust, the Beef Trust, the Smelter Trust, the Tobacco Trust, the Sugar Trust, and many others can all boast of their triumphs over organized labor. Denial to labor of the right to combine is a policy common to the great combinations of capital; and against that policy labor battles in vain. Its loosely banded, ill-provisioned forces, however valiant and self-sacrificing, are no match for the compact power of the huge trusts, with inexhaustible resources of money and of brains. Too great inequality in power is necessarily destructive of liberty—be it political or industrial. There is but one choice. We must keep democracy, or we must pass rapidly on to state socialism.

By the provisions of this bill United States courts are prohibited—

First. From issuing injunctions against persons on account of their ceasing to perform any work or labor.

Second. From issuing injunctions to prevent laborers from recommending, advising, or persuading others by peaceful means to cease work.

Third. From issuing injunctions enjoining laboring men from attending at or near a house or place where any person resides or works or carries on business or happens to be for the purpose of peacefully obtaining or communicating information or peacefully persuading any person to work or to abstain from work.

Fourth. From issuing injunctions enjoining laboring men from ceasing to patronize any party to a labor dispute.

Fifth. From issuing injunctions enjoining laboring men from recommending, advising, or persuading others by peaceful means so to do.

Sixth. From issuing injunctions enjoining laboring men from paying or giving to or withholding from any person engaged in any labor dispute any strike benefits or other moneys or other things of value.

Seventh. From issuing injunctions enjoining laboring men from peacefully assembling at any proper place in a lawful manner and for lawful purposes.

Eighth. From issuing injunctions enjoining laboring men from doing any act or thing which might lawfully be done in the absence of such labor dispute by any party thereto.

In other words, this proposed legislation purposes to place the laboring men upon the same equality under the law with every other citizen and requires an injunction in a case growing out of a labor dispute to be issued upon the same bill or cause of action and the same evidence as in any other case where a labor dispute is not involved. The injunction provisions of this bill give to labor a bill of rights on eight different propositions.

This legislation is rendered necessary by reason of the fact that some of the Federal courts have abused the writ of injunction, and in some instances have gone so far afield as to issue writs of injunction prohibiting laboring men from exercising the rights guaranteed by the Constitution of the United States to all persons in the United States.

SHERMAN ANTITRUST LAW.

The material advances in inventions, discoveries, transportation, and the mechanical sciences and arts during the nineteenth century were the cause of great increases in interstate commerce and in all its numerous ramifications and multiplications. These advances created, promoted, and enhanced opportunities for personal acquirement of disproportionate wealth, which opportunities, of course, strong and cunning men, as in every other age of the world, seized upon and employed to advance their own fortunes. Toward the close of the nineteenth century farseeing statesmen horoscoped the future and foretold that unless checked by law the then existing system would soon operate to put into the hands of a small minority of men in our Nation most, if not all, of the property which labor produced. Then arose a wide discussion as to the nature of the remedy to be applied. The discussion which took place was interesting and instructive, and it was pointed out that in the Governments of ancient as well as modern times grabbing and grasping monopolists sought by various ways and means and through various devices to acquire a disproportionate share of the wealth in the Nation.

In the examination of the various remedies proposed to curb monopoly there was pointed out and discussed the manner as to how in England the monopolies began to oppress the people during the reign of Queen Elizabeth, and we recall that in the colloquial debates in the English Parliament during the reign of Elizabeth on the bill introduced in Parliament for the purpose of checking and restraining her exercise of the royal prerogative with respect to granting monopolies to particular persons, Sir Francis Bacon delivered a speech, wherein he said:

With regard to monopolies, the case hath ever been to humble ourselves to Her Majesty and by petition desire to have our grievances remedied, especially when the remedy touched her so nigh in point of prerogative. I say, and I say it again, that we ought not to deal, to judge, or meddle with Her Majesty's prerogative. I wish, therefore, every man to be careful of this business.

This effusion by Sir Francis Bacon is precisely such a speech as we would expect to find the histories record of him. It was in keeping with his sycophantic and fawning spirit, which was always fearful, even to a fault, of offending the rich and powerful.

During the discussion of the bill Mr. Francis More said:

I know the Queen's prerogative is a thing curious to be dealt withal; yet all grievances are not comparable. I can not utter with my tongue or conceive with my heart the great grievances that the town and country for which I serve suffereth by some of these monopolies. It bringeth the general profit into a private hand, and the end of all this is beggary and bondage to the subjects. Out of the spirit of humiliation do I speak it, there is no act of hers that has been or is more derogatory to her own majesty, more odious to the subjects, more dangerous to the Commonwealth, than the granting of these monopolies.

Also, during the discussion of that bill, Mr. Martin said:

I do speak for a town that grieves and pines, for a country that groaneth and languisheth, under the burden of monstrous and unconscienceable monopolies of starch, tin, cloth, oil, vinegar, salt, and I know not what—nay, what not! The principalist commodities, both of my town and country, are engrossed into the hands of these bloodsuckers of the Commonwealth. Such is the state of my own town and country; the traffic is taken away; the inward and private commodities are taken away and dare not be used without the license of these monopolitans. If these bloodsuckers be let alone to suck up the best and principalist commodities which the earth there hath given us, what will become of us, from whom the fruits of our own soil and the commodities of our own labor shall be taken by warrant of supreme authority, which the poor subject dare not gainsay?

Thus we observe that the people of our Nation are not the only people that have suffered from the greediness of some members of the human family.

The history of the Sherman antitrust law is instructive, and a short review of the parliamentary history of that law is pertinent to the present discussion.

On February 28, 1890, Fifty-first Congress, Senator Sherman, of Ohio, introduced his antitrust bill in the Senate. It was referred to the Committee on Finance. On March 22, 1890, the Committee on Finance introduced a substitute for the Sherman bill. On March 25, 1890, Senator Morgan, of Alabama, moved to commit the bill to the Judiciary Committee; it failed to carry on a vote of 16 yeas to 28 nays. On March 25, 1890, Senator Sherman offered a proviso to be added at the end of the first section of the bill, as follows:

Provided, That this act shall not be construed to apply to any arrangements, agreements, or combinations between the laborers, made with a view of lessening the number of hours of labor or the increasing of their wages; nor to any arrangements, agreements, or combinations among persons engaged in horticulture or agriculture, made with a view of enhancing the price of agricultural or horticultural products.

The amendment was agreed to in the Senate without any opposing votes.

On March 26, 1890, Senator Stewart, of Nevada, made the following comprehensive statement:

The original bill has been very much improved, and one of the great objections has been removed from it by the amendment offered by Senator Sherman (for Senator George), which relieves the class of persons who would have been first prosecuted under the original bill without the amendment.

Senator Stewart then added:

The bill ought now in some respects to be satisfactory to every person who is opposed to the oppression of labor and desires to see it properly rewarded.

During the debates in Congress on the Sherman antitrust law it was not suggested nor even hinted, so far as may be ascertained from the debates that have come down to us in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, that the exemption of labor organizations from the provisions of that law was improper class legislation. I do not assert that the contrary does not appear. I simply say, so far as I have been able to ascertain from the debate in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, that it does not appear. It was not the intention of the legislators to apply the Sherman antitrust law to labor organizations, although the courts, by strained and harsh constructions, have sought to apply it to labor organizations.

By judicial interpretations and legal precedents, and especially by the decision of the United States Supreme Court in the Danbury Hat case, the terms of the law intended to apply to persons dealing in commodities were interpreted to apply to the energies and activities of associated laborers. Thus under the Sherman antitrust law labor organizations may be dissolved, their members fined or imprisoned, and the labor organizations mulcted by damages in civil suits.

In order, therefore, to secure to the workers the legal right to organized existence it is necessary by substantive law to remove and exempt the organizations of labor from the provisions of the antitrust laws, and section 7 and sections 15 to 23, inclusive, of the Clayton bill, H. R. 15657, provide for such exemption.

The proper energies and reasonable activities of labor organizations have been greatly injured and hindered by the improper use and the abuse of the injunction, because some courts have proceeded upon the hypothesis that labor power is property, such as mechanical and electrical contrivances, cattle, horses, and so forth. Some courts of equity have usurped jurisdiction and power to restrain laborers from doing the things they had a lawful right to do, and which in many instances it was necessary for them to do to promote their own interests and rise above the conditions of serfdom; for instance, injunctions have forbidden laborers to use the public highways and have forbidden them peacefully to consider their own condition. Laborers have been forbidden by injunction to pay strike benefits or to exercise the right of free speech. Therefore, in order to prevent any further abuse of this judicial power, these provisions of sections 7 and 15 to 23, inclusive, of the Clayton bill have been written in this proposed legislation, and are known as the "laborers' bill of rights."

In this pending bill, disguise it as we may, dodge and evade as we may, there is one great question we must meet and settle, and that is the question as to whether this proposed law shall be directed against the combinations of capital that the Sherman antitrust law was designed to be directed against or whether the antitrust laws shall be shifted, partially at least, and turned as an engine of oppression and destruction against some of the very people they are designed to protect.

A vast deal of discussion has occurred regarding what class of people the antitrust legislation was directed against, but those who search the records with even a moderate degree of diligence will be rewarded by complete freedom from any doubt upon the subject. The statesmen who framed this legislation—the Sherman law—had no doubt as to whom the legislation was directed against.

Senator Sherman, the nominal author of the Sherman law, had no doubt as to this question, and in the debate in the Senate, on March 24, 1890, he said:

Now, let us look at it. The bill as reported contains three or four simple propositions which relate only to contracts, combinations, agreements made with a view and designed to carry out a certain purpose which the laws of all the States and of every civilized community declare to be unlawful. It does not interfere in the slightest degree with voluntary associations made to affect public opinion to advance the interests of a particular trade or occupation. It does not interfere with the Farmers' Alliance at all, because that is an association of farmers to advance their interests and to improve the growth and manner of production of their crops and to secure intelligent growth and to introduce new methods. No organizations in this country can be more beneficial in their character than farmers' alliances and farmers' associations. They are not business combinations. They do not deal with contracts, agreements, and so forth. They have no connection with them. And so the combinations of workingmen to promote their interests, promote their welfare and increase their pay, if you please, to get their fair share in the division of production, are not affected in the slightest degree, nor can they be included in the words or intent of the bill as now reported.

Notwithstanding the disclaimer on the part of Senator Sherman and many others in the Senate at that time as to the class of people designed to be reached by that legislation, Senator George introduced an amendment at that time as follows:

Provided, That this act shall not be construed to apply to any arrangements, agreements, or combinations between the laborers, made with a view of lessening the number of hours of labor or the increasing of their wages; nor to any arrangements, agreements, or combinations among persons engaged in horticulture or agriculture, made with a view of enhancing the price of agricultural or horticultural products.

Although Senator Sherman and many others at that time emphatically stated that the language of the bill was plain without such an amendment, the amendment was finally incorporated in the bill as it passed the Committee of the Whole in the Senate. The bill was thereupon sent to the Judiciary Committee, and when it returned from the Judiciary Committee it was passed without this amendment, which had been stricken out in the committee as unnecessary. I assert that it was the contemporaneous opinion of Senators at that time that the amendment was unnecessary.

When the bill was being debated in the Senate Senator Hoar expressed the general attitude of the students of the question at that time in the following words which remove all doubt. Speaking in the Senate on March 27, 1890, Senator Hoar said:

When you are speaking of providing to regulate the transactions of men who are making corners in wheat, or in iron, or in woolen or in cotton goods, speculating in them or lawfully dealing in them without speculation, you are aiming at a mere commercial transaction, the beginning and end of which is the making of money for the parties, and nothing else. That is the only relation that transaction has to the State. It is the creation or diffusion or change of ownership of the wealth of the community. But when a laborer is trying to raise his wages or is endeavoring to shorten the hours of his labor, he is dealing with something that touches closely, more closely than anything else, the Government and the character of the State itself.

The maintenance of a certain standard of profit in dealing in large transactions in wheat or cotton or wool is a question whether a particular merchant or a particular class of merchants shall make money or not; but the question whether the standard of the laborer's wages shall be maintained or advanced, or whether the leisure for instruction, for improvement shall be shortened or lengthened is a question which touches the very existence and character of government of the State itself. The laborer who is engaged lawfully and usefully and accomplishing his purpose in whole or in part in endeavoring to raise the standard of wages is engaged in an occupation the success of which makes republican government itself possible, and without which the Republic can not, in substance, however it may nominally do in form, continue to exist.

I hold, therefore, that as legislators we may constitutionally, properly, and wisely allow laborers to make associations, combinations, contracts, agreements for the sake of maintaining and advancing their wages, in regard to which, as a rule, their contracts are to be made with large corporations who are themselves but an association or combination or aggregation of capital on the other side. When we are permitting and even encouraging that, we are permitting and encouraging what is not only lawful, wise, and profitable, but absolutely essential to the existence of the Commonwealth itself.

When, on the other hand, we are dealing with one of the other classes, the combinations aimed at chiefly by this bill, we are dealing with a transaction the only purpose of which is to extort from the community, monopolize, segregate, and apply to individual use, for the purposes of individual greed, wealth which ought properly and lawfully and for the public interest to be generally diffused over the whole community.

These are the words of the late Senator Hoar, a distinguished Senator from Massachusetts, a statesman of untarnished public and private character and of highly cultivated mind, yet conservative withal.

Mr. KERN. And who wrote every word of the Sherman antitrust law as it was finally passed.

Mr. ASHURST. And, as is suggested to me, the man who wrote every word of the Sherman antitrust law as it is now on the statute books.

Senator Edmunds, Senator Stewart, Senator Teller, Senator Reagan, Senator George, and others—all without any question agreed that the bill as it was presented to the Senate for final passage left no doubt as to the fact that it was not intended to include fraternal orders, labor organizations, or farmers' alliances. I will insert these views of Senators in the RECORD.

[Senate, page 2720, March 27, 1890. Mr. Hoar.]

I said the object of this bill was to prevent the speculation in and engrossing of wheat and similar commodities. I did not speak in that connection of corporations. I said, in speaking generally of the lawfulness and propriety of laborers combining in the matter of wages, that the persons with whom they were to contract were very largely the corporations which were themselves nothing but a combination or aggregation of capital for that purpose. I made no such suggestion as that corporations were the persons aimed at by this bill. That was in a different connection.

[Senate, page 2606, March 25. Mr. Stewart.]

Again, suppose that the employers, railroad companies, and manufacturing establishments should say that labor should be put down to two bits a day. Suppose that capital should combine against labor, as it is very much inclined to do, and there should be a combination among the laborers which would increase the cost of production and increase the cost of all articles consumed. Suppose there should be a combination among the laborers to protect themselves from grasping monopolies; they would all be criminals for doing it.

I know that nobody here proposes to interfere with the class of men I have mentioned. Nobody here intends that by any of these provisions, either in the original bill or in any amendment, and I have only called attention to it to see if the efforts of those who have undertaken to manage this subject can not in some way confine the bill to dealing with trusts, which we all admit are offensive to good morals.

I want to repeat that I am exceedingly anxious myself to join in anything that shall break up and destroy these unholy combinations, but I want to be careful that in doing that we do not do more damage than we do good. I know how these great trusts, these great corporations, these large moneyed institutions can escape the provisions of a penal statute, and I know how much more likely they are to escape than the men who have less influence and less money. Therefore I suggest that the Senators who have this subject in charge give it special attention, and by a little modification it may be possible to relieve the bill of any doubt on that point.

Mr. President, I stated a moment ago that harsh and unreasonable constructions had been placed upon the Sherman antitrust law so as to bring labor organizations within its purview, and in making that statement I am not alone in sounding a danger signal as to the drastic and harsh injunctions that have proceeded from some of our Federal courts against the laboring men of the country.

In October of 1907 Justice Moody, late of the Supreme Court of the United States, said:

I believe in recent years the courts of the United States, as well as the courts of our own Commonwealth (Massachusetts), have gone to the very verge of danger in applying the process of the writ of injunction in disputes between labor and capital.

Hon. Thomas M. Cooley, sometime president of the American Par Association, said:

Courts with their injunctions, if they heed the fundamental law of the land, can no more hold men to involuntary servitude for even a single hour than can overseers with a whip.

Judge M. F. Tuley, of the appellate court of Illinois, used these words:

Such use of injunction by the courts is judicial tyranny, which endangers not only the right of trial by jury, but all the rights and liberties of the citizens.

Gov. Sadler, of Nevada, said:

The tendency at present is to have the courts enforce law by injunction methods, which are subversive of good government and the liberties of the people.

Prof. F. J. Stimson, of Harvard University, in his new work on Federal and State Constitutions, after citing many authorities, says:

These are sufficient to establish the general principle that the injunction process and contempt in chancery procedure, as well as chancery jurisdiction itself, is looked on with a logical jealousy in Anglo-Saxon countries as being in derogation of the common law, taking away the jurisdiction of the common-law courts and depriving the accused of his trial by jury.

Judge John Gibbons, of the circuit court of Illinois, declared that—

In their efforts to regulate or restrain strikes by injunction they (the courts) are sowing dragons' teeth and blazing the path of revolution.

In order that I may not be deemed to have overshot myself and allowed an intemperate or imprudent statement to escape my lips on this subject, I will insert in the RECORD at this point a few samples calling attention to some of the harsh and unreasonable decisions of the courts on this subject.

LABOR DECISIONS AND INJUNCTIONS.

Refusing to haul cars a conspiracy (T., A. & N. M. Ry. v. Pennsylvania Co., 54 Fed. Rep., 730, Apr. 3, 1893).

Quitting work is criminal (same, Apr. 3, 1893).

A workman considered "under control" (T., A. & N. M. Ry. v. Pennsylvania Co. et al., 54 Fed. Rep., 746, Mar. 25, 1893. Ricks, circuit judge).

Serving of injunction notice unnecessary (In re Lennon, 166 U. S., 548, Brown, judge).

Constitutional to require men to leave union (People v. Harry Marcus, 185 N. Y., 257, May 25, 1906).

Union labor has no right to conduct a strike (Alfred W. Booth & Co. v. Burgess et al., 65 Atl. Rep., 226, Nov. 26, 1906).

Unlawful to induce nonunion men to quit work (Enterprise Foundry Co. v. Iron Molders' Union, 112 N. W., 685, July 1, 1907).

The unfair list forbidden (Wilson et al., 232 Ill., 389, Feb. 20, 1908).

Employer has right to bar out unions (Flaccus v. Smith, 199 Pa. St., 128).

Antitrust act applies to labor unions as well as to combinations of capitalists (U. S. v. Workingmen's Amalgamated Council, 54 Fed. Rep., 994; Loewe v. Lawlor, 208 U. S., 274).

The boycott is unlawful (Loewe v. Lawlor, 208 U. S., 274).

Members of labor unions liable to threefold damages for injuries in business or property sustained by individuals or firms by reason of a boycott (Loewe v. Lawlor, 208 U. S., 274).

A combination of men to secure or compel the employment of none but union men is unlawful (U. S. v. Workingmen's Amalgamated Council, 54 Fed. Rep., 994).

Unlawful to threaten a strike (John O'Brien v. People ex rel. Kellogg Switchboard & Supply Co., 216 Ill., 354, June 23, 1905).

Effort to unionize a house is unlawful (J. L. Purvis et al., Local No. 500, U. B. of Carpenters and Joiners, 214 Pa. St., 348, Mar. 19, 1906).

The boycott is unlawful (Shine et al. v. Fox Bros. Mfg. Co., 156 Fed. Rep., 357, Oct. 19, 1907).

Unions liable to suit for damages (Leucke v. Clothing Cutters and Trimmers' Assembly, 77 Md., 396, Mar. 16, 1893).

The closed shop is illegal (A. R. Barnes & Co. et al. v. Berry et al., 156 Fed. Rep., 72, Oct. 21, 1907).

Unlawful to ask reasons for discharge (Wallace v. Georgia, Carolina & Northern Ry. Co., 94 Ga., 732, June 18, 1894).

Blacklisting can not be prohibited (Wisconsin ex rel. Theodore Zilliner v. Louis Kreutzberg, 58 L. R. A., 748, May 18, 1902).

Maintaining a picket is unlawful (A., T. & S. F. Ry. Co. v. Gee et al., 139 Fed. Rep., 152, July 10, 1905).

Can not limit hours of labor by law (Holden v. Hardy, 169 U. S., 366, Feb. 28, 1898).

Payment in checks legal (Kentucky Court of Appeals, Avent-Beattyville Coal Co., appellant, v. Commonwealth of Kentucky, Dec. 1, 1894).

Employer has right to discharge a union man (Wisconsin Supreme Court, State of Wisconsin ex rel. Theodore Zilliner, plaintiff in error, v. Louis J. Kreutzberg, 58 L. R. A., 748, May 19, 1902).

Eight-hour day unconstitutional (Nebraska Supreme Court, Charles G. Low, plaintiff in error, v. Rees Printing Co., 24 L. R. A., 702-708).

Eight-hour law illegal (Ohio Supreme Court, City of Cleveland, plaintiff in error, v. Clements Bros. Construction Co., 59 L. R. A., 775).

Protection of laborers illegal (Colorado Supreme Court, re Thomas A. Morgan, 47 L. R. A., 52, July 17, 1899).

Limiting check payment unconstitutional (Indiana Supreme Court, Nathan G. Dixon, appellant, v. James H. Poe, 60 L. R. A., 308, Nov. 25, 1902).

Unlawful to fix wages by law (New York Supreme Court, People ex rel. William J. Rodgers, respondent, v. Bird S. Coler, appellant, 166 N. Y.; 52 L. R. A., 814).

Protection of labor not required (New York Court of Appeals, Sarah Knisley, respondent, v. Pascal P. Pratt et al., appellants, 148 N. Y., 362; 32 L. R. A. 367).

No extra pay for extra hours (New York Court of Appeals, People, respondent, v. James H. Phyfe, appellant, Jan. 17, 1893).

Employer not responsible for death of employee (Circuit Court of Appeals, Eighth Circuit, Mar. 19, 1900; Westland v. Gold Coin Mines Co., 101 Fed. Rep., 59, 64, 65, and 66).

Labor check payments are legal (Massachusetts Supreme Judicial Court, Commonwealth of Massachusetts v. Josiah Perry, 14 L. R. A., 326).

No remedy for labor except personal suit (Massachusetts Supreme Judicial Court, Dianah Worthington et al., appellants, v. James Warring et al., 157 Mass., 421).

Employers need not furnish doctor to injured (Massachusetts Supreme Judicial Court, Alexander Davis, by next friend, v. William H. Forbes, 171 Mass., 548).

Employers not liable for injuries (Massachusetts Supreme Court, William O'Maily v. South Boston Gaslight Co., 158 Mass., 135).

Altering contract is legal for employers (Illinois Supreme Court, Richard Pemsey appellant, v. People of Illinois, 17 L. R. A., 853).

Employers need not recommend satisfactory employees (Illinois Supreme Court, C., C., C. & St. L. Ry. Co., appellant, v. Charles Jenkins, 174 Ill., 398).

Legal to jail a man a month without trial (Oregon Supreme Court, Longshore Printing & Publishing Co., appellant, v. George H. Howell et al., 26 Oreg., 527).

The right to blacklist upheld (Kentucky Court of Appeals, John Hundley, appellant, v. L. & N. Ry. Co., 105 Ky., 162).

Any willful attempt of employees of a railroad in the hands of a receiver to impede or hinder the operation of the road is contempt of court (Thomas v. C., N. O. & T. P. Ry. Co., 62 Fed. Rep., 803).

To instigate a strike on a road in the hands of a receiver is unlawful and a contempt of court (Thomas v. C., N. O. & T. P. Ry. Co., 62 Fed. Rep., 803).

A boycott is an unlawful conspiracy (Thomas v. C., N. O. & T. P. Ry. Co., 62 Fed. Rep., 803).

A sympathetic strike is an unlawful conspiracy by reason of its purpose whether such purpose is effected by means usually lawful or otherwise (Thomas v. C., N. O. & T. P. Ry. Co., 62 Fed. Rep., 803).

Any obstructing or retarding the mails by strikers is an unlawful conspiracy in violation of section 3975, Revised Statutes, although the obstruction is effected by merely quitting employment (Thomas v. C., N. O. & T. P. Ry. Co., 62 Fed. Rep., 803).

A law forbidding discrimination against an employee because of his membership in a labor union and making it a misdemeanor for an employer to discharge an employee because of membership in a labor union is unconstitutional (Adair case, 208 U. S., 161).

I also insert in the RECORD a copy of a final decree issued in June of this year by Judge Humphrey, of the United States District Court for the Southern District of Illinois, which is as follows:

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA, SOUTHERN DISTRICT OF ILLINOIS, SOUTHERN DIVISION—IN THE UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT, JUNE TERM, A. D. 1914.

American Steel Foundries, a corporation, complainant, v. The Tri-City Central Trades Council, Harry McKenny, Ted Ishmann, Earl Galloway, William Thornburg, C. Holmes, C. L. Burton, Eddie Roach, John Aldridge, Isaac Cook, Benjamin F. Lamb, J. P. McDonough, and C. E. Gerlich, defendants. In equity for injunction.

FINAL DECREE.

This cause came on to be heard at this term on the 9th day of June, A. D. 1914, and was argued by counsel; and thereupon upon consideration thereof it was ordered, adjudged, and decreed as follows, viz:

That the restraining order heretofore issued on May 18, 1914, and which on May 28, 1914, was continued in force as a temporary injunction, be and is hereby made permanent as to all of said defendants, with the exception of the defendant C. L. Burton, and as to the said C. L. Burton the said restraining order and temporary injunction be and is hereby vacated.

It is further ordered, adjudged, and decreed by the court that the said defendants the Tri-City Central Trades Council its officers and agents, and Harry McKenny, Ted Ishmann, Earl Galloway, William Thornburg, C. Thornburg, Tom Churchill, Clay Holmes, Eddie Roach, John Aldridge, Isaac Cook, Benjamin F. Lamb, J. P. McDonough, and C. E. Gerlich and each of them and all persons combining with, acting in concert with or under their direction, control, or advice, or under the direction, control, or advice of any of them and all persons whomsoever be and are hereby perpetually restrained and enjoined from in any way or manner whatsoever by use of persuasion, threats, or personal injury, intimidation, suggestion of danger or threats of violence of any kind, from interfering with, hindering, obstructing, or stopping any person desiring to be employed by said American Steel Foundries in its said tion with its business or its foundry in the city of Granite City, county of Madison, State of Illinois, or elsewhere, and from interfering by persuasion, violence, or threats of violence in any manner with any person desiring to be employed by said American Steel Foundries in its said foundry or plant; and from inducing or attempting to compel or induce by persuasion, threats, intimidation, force, or violence or putting in fear or suggestions of danger any of the employees of the American Steel Foundries or persons seeking employment with it so as to cause them to refuse to perform any of their duties as employees of the American Steel Foundries; and from preventing any person by persuasion, threats, intimidation, force, or violence, or suggestion of danger, or violence, from entering into the employ of said American Steel Foundries; and from protecting, aiding, or assisting any person or persons in committing any of said acts, and from assembling, loitering, or congregating about or in proximity of the said plant or factory of the American Steel Foundries for the purpose of doing or aiding or encouraging others in doing any of the said unlawful or forbidden acts or things, and from picketing or maintaining at or near the premises of the complainant or on the streets leading to the premises of said complainant, any picket or pickets and from doing any acts or things whatever in furtherance of any conspiracy or combination among them, or any of them, to obstruct, or interfere with said American Steel Foundries, its officers, agents, or employees, in the free and unrestrained control and operation of its plant, foundry, and property, and the operation of its business, and also from ordering, directing, aiding, assisting, or in any manner abetting any person committing any or either of the acts aforesaid and also from entering upon the grounds, foundry, or premises of the American Steel Foundries without first obtaining its consent, and from injuring or destroying any of the property of the said American Steel foundries.

It is further ordered, adjudged, and decreed that the complainant shall cause not less than 100 printed copies of this final decree to be posted in conspicuous places about and in the vicinity of its said plant at Granite City, Ill.; that the affidavit of the agent of the complainant so posting said notices shall be filed in the clerk's office, stating when and where such notices were posted, and such affidavit shall be prima facie proof of the posting of such notices at such time and places as shall be therein stated.

It is further ordered, adjudged, and decreed that this injunction shall be binding upon each and all of the above-mentioned defendants and upon all other persons from and after the date of this decree.

It is further ordered, adjudged, and decreed that the defendants pay the costs of the above-entitled cause to be taxed by the clerk.

OTIS HUMPHREY,
Judge United States District Court for the Southern District of Illinois.

It will be seen from reading this final decree that this judge believes that the American Steel Foundries should be protected from certain individuals, who are named therein, against the use of "persuasion," which that "downtrodden" corporation fears some person may exercise, and thus do it an injustice. The very reading of this decree, if nothing further were called to our attention, makes necessary this substantive labor legislation in this Clayton bill, which has passed the House of Representatives, and, indeed, Mr. President, in my judgment, it is our duty to enact the labor provisions of the Clayton bill as they came to the Senate from the House of Representatives.

I now submit and include in the RECORD a list of over 100 decisions of Federal courts on labor cases where injunctions were issued, conspiracies charged, and allegations set up that the antitrust law was violated.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it will be so ordered.

Mr. ASHURST. Thus, Mr. President, we see that the very law that was intended to be used to curb monopolies and to preserve equality of opportunity among the American people has been used as a means of annoying, harassing, vexing, and in many instances oppressing a large number of the very people the makers of the law declared it should not be used against—the laborers.

I feel confident that in this presence I may call attention to the Democratic national platform adopted at Baltimore in 1912, which contains the following provision:

Questions of judicial practice have arisen, especially in connection with industrial disputes. We believe that the parties to all judicial proceedings should be treated with rigid impartiality, and that injunctions should not be issued in any case in which an injunction would not issue if no industrial disputes were involved.

The expanding organization of industry makes it essential that there should be no abridgement of the right of the wage earners and producers to organize for the protection of wages and the improvement of labor conditions, to the end that such labor organizations, and their members, should not be regarded as illegal combinations in restraint of trade.

I believe the same plank was in the platform of 1908.

Mr. KERN. It was copied from the 1908 provision.

Mr. ASHURST. Yes; the 1912 provision on the subject was copied from the 1908 provision.

The observation has been made that it is beyond the constitutional power of the National Legislature to exempt any persons from the operation of this law. A mere reference to the case of the International Harvester Co. of America against State of Missouri, decided by the Supreme Court of the United States June 8, 1914, upholding the constitutionality of the Missouri antitrust law, which, by omission, removed labor organizations from its provisions, is a definite answer to those who assert the unconstitutionality of the labor provisions of this proposed law. In that case Mr. Justice McKenna, delivering the opinion of the court, inter alia, said:

* * * * * * *

The assignments of error necessarily involve a consideration of the statutes. The relevant provisions are contained in section 10301 of the Revised Statutes of the State of 1909 and section 8906 of the Revised Statutes of 1899.

Section 10301 provides "that all arrangements, contracts, agreements, combinations, or understandings made or entered into between two or more persons, designed or made with a view to lessen, or which tend to lessen, lawful trade or full and free competition in the importation, transportation, manufacture, or sale" in the State "of any product, commodity, or article, or thing bought or sold," and all such arrangements, etc., "which are designed or made with a view to increase, or which tend to increase, the market price of any product, commodity, or article or thing, of any class or kind whatsoever, bought and sold," are declared to be against public policy, unlawful, and void, and those offending "shall be deemed and adjudged guilty of a conspiracy in restraint of trade, and punished" as provided.

* * * * * * *

In State v. Standard Oil Co. (218 Mo., 1, 370, 372) the supreme court held that the antitrust statutes of the State "are limited in their scope and operations to persons and corporations dealing in commodities, and do not include combinations of persons engaged in labor pursuits." And, justifying the statutes against a charge of illegal discrimination, the court further said that "it must be borne in mind that the differentiation between labor and property is so great that they do not belong to the same general classification of rights or things, and have never been so recognized by the common law or legislative enactments."

* * * * * * *

We said in Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe Railway Co. v. Matthews (174 U. S., 96, 106), by Mr. Justice Brewer: "The very idea of classification is that of inequality, so that it goes without saying that the fact of inequality in no manner determines the matter of constitutionality." Therefore it may be there is restraint of competition in a combination of laborers and in a combination of purchasers, but that does not demonstrate that legislation which does not include either combination is illegal. Whether it would have been better policy to have made such comprehensive classification it is not our province to decide. In other words, whether a combination of wage earners or purchasers of commodities called for repression by law under the conditions in the State was for the legislature of the State to determine.

* * * * * * *

And so in the case at bar. Whether the Missouri statute should have set its condemnation on restraints generally, prohibiting combined action for any purpose and to everybody, or confined it, as the statute does, to manufacturers and vendors of articles and permitting it to purchasers of such articles; prohibiting it to sellers of commodities and permitting it to sellers of services, was a matter of legislative judgment, and we can not say that the distinctions made are palpably arbitrary, which we have seen is the condition of judicial review. It is to be remembered that the question presented is of the power of the legislature, not the policy of the exercise of the power. To be able to find fault, therefore, with such policy is not to establish the invalidity of the law based upon it.

It is said that the statute as construed by the Supreme Court of the State comes within our ruling in Connelly v. Union Sewer Pipe Co. (184 U. S., 540), but we do not think so. If it did, we should, of course, apply that ruling here. * * *

I have received a number of letters and telegrams from various persons stating that the labor provisions of this bill were unjust and without precedent—and many of these communications stated that this proposed law, to use Thomas H. Benton's pleonastic phrase, "stood out solitary and alone"—and was without parallel in the history of parliamentary enactments. Some of these letters have especially inveighed against that provision of the bill which is as follows:

"And no such restraining order or injunction shall prohibit any person or persons from terminating any relation of employment, or from ceasing to perform any work or labor, or from recommending, advising, or persuading others by peaceful means so to do; or from attending at or near a house or place where any person resides or works, or carries on business, or happens to be, for the purpose of peacefully obtaining or communicating information, or of peacefully persuading any person to work or to abstain from working."

In truth and in fact, however, the language just above quoted is really a rescript of paragraph 2 of chapter 47 of an act to provide for the regulation of trade-unions and trade disputes, enacted by the Parliament of Great Britain December 21, 1906, and is to be found on pages 246 to 247 of volume 44 of the law reports of the statutes passed during the reign of King Edward VII. I here quote that act in extenso:

Be it enacted by the King's Most Excellent Majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the Lords Spiritual and Temporal, and Commons, in this present Parliament assembled, and by the authority of the same, as follows:

1. The following paragraph shall be added as a new paragraph after the first paragraph of section 3 of the conspiracy and protection of property act, 1875:

"An act done in pursuance of an agreement or combination by two or more persons shall, if done in contemplation or furtherance of a trade dispute, not be actionable unless the act, if done without any such agreement or combination, would be actionable."

2. (1) It shall be lawful for one or more persons, acting on their own behalf or on behalf of a trade-union or of an individual employer or firm in contemplation or furtherance of a trade dispute, to attend, at or near a house or place where a person resides or works or carries on business or happens to be, if they so attend merely for the purpose of peacefully obtaining or communicating information, or of peacefully persuading any person to work or abstain from working.

(2) Section 7 of the conspiracy and protection of property act, 1875, is hereby repealed from "attending at or near" to the end of the section.

3. An act done by a person in contemplation or furtherance of a trade dispute shall not be actionable on the ground only that it induces some other person to break a contract of employment, or that it is an interference with the trade, business, or employment of some other person or with the right of some other person to dispose of his capital or his labor as he wills.

4. (1) An action against a trade-union, whether of workmen or masters, or against any members or officials thereof on behalf of themselves and all other members of the trade-union in respect of any tortious act alleged to have been committed by or on behalf of the trade-union, shall not be entertained by any court.

(2) Nothing in this section shall affect the liability of the trustees of a trade-union to be sued in the events provided for by the trades-union act, 1871, section 9, except in respect of any tortious act committed by or on behalf of the union in contemplation or in furtherance of a trade dispute.

5. (1) This act may be cited as the trade disputes act, 1906, and the trade-union acts, 1871 and 1876, and this act may be cited together as the trade-union acts, 1871 to 1906.

(2) In this act the expression "trade-union" has the same meaning as in the trade-union acts, 1871 and 1876, and shall include any combination as therein defined, notwithstanding that such combinations may be the branch of a trade-union.

(3) In this act and in the conspiracy and protection of property act, 1875, the expression "trade dispute" means any dispute between employers and workmen or between workmen and workmen, which is connected with the employment or nonemployment or the terms of the employment or with the conditions of labor of any person, and the expression "workmen" means all persons employed in trade or industry, whether or not in the employment of the employer with whom a trade dispute arises; and, in section 3 of the last-mentioned act, the words "between employers and workmen" shall be repealed.

This parliamentary enactment gave legislative relief against the judicial theory of criminal conspiracy under the common law, under which the oppressors of labor took refuge behind the doctrine of civil conspiracy.

Neither in England, France, Germany, nor in any other enlightened government, except in the United States, may laborers be arrested and punished for unitedly asking an increase of wages or for combining to do any lawful thing which means the bringing about a betterment of their condition; and it is a painful commentary upon the vicissitudes of our country to realize that the laborers must look, in some instances, to monarchical forms of government for light and hope in leadership on this particular subject rather than to the Members of Congress here in our elective Republic. From a study of labor leaders, I am convinced that the labor leaders in America are the ablest, the most conservative, and the most experienced which the world affords. They are much less radical than the labor group in the English Parliament, the Chamber of Deputies in France, or the German Reichstag.

Labor demands, and is on tenable ground in demanding, that we recognize a fundamental difference between labor power and real, personal, and mixed property. Labor power is not, strictly speaking, property, but labor power creates property. Labor power is not property, because it can not be separated from the laborer. Labor power can only be exerted and applied during the worker's life, and it ends with his death; hence it will be seen at a glance that labor power is not to be treated as property.

The statute against monopolies in England was enacted as a rampart against the greed of rapacious men who desired to acquire a disproportionate share of property, and for a like reason the Sherman antitrust law of 1890 was enacted for the purpose of curbing the rapacity of the selfish ones in our Nation, as I have pointed out in the beginning of this address; for it is a truth demonstrated to us and illustrated by the history of the world that some men are disposed to avail themselves improperly of the property of their fellow men, and in availing themselves improperly of the property of other men they also resort to availing themselves of the services, efforts, energies, and labors of their fellow men without rendering an equivalent.

Martin, at page 2 of his book, Modern Law of Labor Unions, defines labor unions as follows:

Perhaps as good a definition or description of a labor union as any is an association of workingmen of the same or of allied trades or occupations, the usual purposes of which are the regulation of their relations with their employers, the securing of better terms of employment, the elevation of their moral, social, and intellectual condition, and the assistance, financially or otherwise, of members in time of sickness, poverty, and distress.

Until recent years—that is to say, about the time of the trade-union act in 1871—laboring men in England were treated with much severity for combining to enforce their demands for higher wages. In Rex again Mawbey, decided in 1796, it was said that combinations of workingmen to raise wages constituted an indictable conspiracy at common law.

As late as 1834, in England, six agricultural laborers were convicted and sentenced to seven years' penal servitude for unitedly asking for an increase in wages of 1 shilling per week. Under the laws in force in England at that time this was treated as a conspiracy and these men were promptly convicted and transported to Australia. They became famous in history as the "six men of Dorset." One of these, George Lovelace, wrote in his diary a vivid description of the horrors they underwent while being transported. Then arose in England a tremendous agitation for their release, and 50,000 workingmen, in a procession, marched by the official residence of the then premier, Lord Melbourne, to present a petition in behalf of the "six men of Dorset." Their release finally came in 1837, and in May of last year a monument was erected in their native village in Dorsetshire to these martyrs in the cause of industrial liberty. I digress long enough to say that the very ship which took those men from England to Australia was recently in the harbor of Washington City. I refer to the ship Success.

I again quote from Martin on the Modern Law of Labor Unions, pages 9, 10, 11, 12, and 13, as follows:

Whatever may have been the law in England in respect of combinations of workmen, it never obtained much foothold in America and was expressly repudiated in a Massachusetts decision of a comparatively early date, in which a very exhaustive opinion was written by Chief Justice Shaw. * * *

In some jurisdictions where there are statutes authorizing it, and in others, in the absence of statutory authorization, it is now well settled that workmen may combine and associate themselves together for the purpose of bettering their condition either financially or socially by legitimate and fair means. Such a combination or association, it has been held, is not a monopoly or in restraint of trade; personal service—an occupation—can not be the subject of a monopoly. The right of workmen to form unions is expressly conferred by statute in many jurisdictions, and in a majority of the States the right is impliedly recognized by legislation enacted for the protection of unions from infringement of their labels, for it is obvious that where statutes expressly create or recognize the right of labor unions to be protected in the use of labels for labor union purposes, any suggestion that the union is an unlawful association falls of itself. It has also been held that the right to combine into unions has been raised to the dignity of a constitutional right by State constitutional provisions; that all men are born free and equal and have certain natural, essential, and inalienable rights, among which is the right of acquiring, possessing, and protecting property. But aside from any constitutional or statutory provision, the better view is that the right of laborers to organize into unions is an exercise of the common-law right of every citizen to pursue his calling, whether of labor or business, as he in his judgment thinks fit, and the law not only permits but encourages combinations of this character. An underlying law of human society, it is said, moves men to unite for the better achievement of a common aim, and this social principle justifies organized action. Organization or combination is a law of human society. It is open to all orders of men who desire to accomplish some lawful purpose through the greater strength and effectiveness which organization offers over individual effort. A very strong reason for permitting labor combinations is this: In an age when vast combinations of capital and the number of individual employers of labor are common, and in consequence competition for labor by employers enormously reduced, combination on the part of labor is an absolute necessity if the wage earner is to obtain his fair share in the distribution of the earnings which are the joint product of capital and labor. Combination on the part of capital is powerful. Combination on the part of labor is the necessary and desirable counterpart if the battle is to be carried on in a fair and equal way. The natural tendency of combined capital is to seek to obtain the cheapest labor, and unless resisted by combination on the part of the wage earner it would inevitably result in oppression and injustice. As was said by Attorney General Olney: "Today, the mass of wage earners can no longer be dealt with by capital as so many isolated units. The time is passed when the individual workman is called upon to pit his feeble strength against the might of organized capital."

Mr. President, we might as well now as hereafter bid adieu to our antiquated ideas of the "law of supply and demand" doctrine regulating the price of labor, the hours of labor, and the conditions under which labor must be performed, for this "supply and demand" idea is a twin brother of the "might makes right" doctrine. Many, if not most, thoughtful persons are now beginning to realize and frankly admit that as a general rule the economic position of the individual employee is too weak for him to hold his own in the unequal contest he is obliged to wage with capitalism. The individual employee is frequently unable to insist upon the "square deal"; that is to say, he may be able to insist upon the "square deal," but he is without power to galvanize and translate his insistence into full life and realization unless he act in concert with his brother employees. In many instances the power of the employer to withhold a subsistence is a more effective weapon than the power of the employee to refuse to labor. Under such circumstances the law of "supply and demand" doctrine as applied to labor should really be called "despotism in contract." In other words, the relative position of the employee and the capitalist is not the same. The worker is sometimes in the position occupied by Esau when he surrendered his birthright for a mess of pottage, except the workingman is sometimes called upon to surrender his birthright and not get the pottage either.

The humanitarian spirit that is pervading our Nation and the demand for social justice which has taken hold of the hearts of men and women declare that the doctrine of the brutal Manchester school which held that human labor is a commodity to be bought and sold at the lowest possible market price, as machinery, oil, coal, wheat, flour, wool, and oats, and used until its supply is consumed or its efficiency exhausted, is vicious in morals and unsound in economics. The modern thinkers take exactly the opposite view, to wit, that labor can not and ought not be treated as a commodity, such as coal, wheat, flour, oil, machinery, broadcloth, raisins, lemons, and so forth, and insist that laborers are as much a human element in our civilization as bankers, lawyers, clergymen, merchants, or any other persons. Therefore, Mr. President, I take my stand for the humanitarian policy of dealing equitably and with strict justice toward those whose grime and sweat, blood and toil have built up our splendid civilization.

"Labor has, and ought to have, the right to organize." That is an expression we hear very often, and I doubt if there may be found any dissentient thereto.

Many years ago I visited this Capitol; I sat in the gallery of the Senate and looked down into this historic Chamber with a fevered ambition, hoping the evolution of politics would some day bring me to a seat in the Senate. While sitting in the gallery, I heard fall from the lips of a distinguished Senator a sentence I never have and probably never will forget, which was: "It is idle and vain to give a man a right unless you also give him the power to enforce that right." This sentence lived because it was true, and it might be applied to-day to the labor situation in our country. It is idle merely to say labor has the right to a living and decent wage unless we supplement that assertion by granting labor the power to enforce its demand for a living wage. When I use the term "living wage," I do not mean a wage which affords "bread alone," but I mean a wage which will afford proper food, clothing, shelter, some leisure time to devote to the family, to books, music, philosophy, and, in general, an opportunity to have sufficient respite from exacting toil to enjoy some of the idealistic, æsthetic, and spiritual side of life which adds zest, grace, and beauty to human existence.

It has been asserted that it is dangerous for laborers to possess the power to compel a compliance with their demands for a living wage. I reply that such power is indeed dangerous—to monopoly, oppression, tyranny, avarice, and greed—but is wholesome to the general welfare and to public tranquillity. Internal dangers to a State need never be apprehended from a general desire and effort on the part of the creators of wealth to promote their own efficiency, improve and exalt their own station, for if laborers were to refuse to try to improve their own condition it would be tantamount to their seeking wantonly their own self-destruction.

Let us inquire, for what persons do the labor provisions of this bill seek "social justice" and industrial liberty? The reply to this question is that the proposed law is not especially solicitous as to those persons who might aptly be compared to the drones described in Maeterlinck's "Life of the Bee." We all remember how interestingly and with what vivid genius Maeterlinck wrote of the drones in the hive. He said:

> These (the drones) comport themselves in the hive as did Penelope's suitors in the House of Ulysses, wasteful, sleek, and corpulent, fully content with their idle existence * * * they feast and carouse, throng the alleys, obstruct the passages, and hinder the work, jostling and jostled, fatuously pompous, swelled with foolish, good-natured contempt for the workers * * *. For their pleasant slumbers they select the snuggest corners of the hive; then, rising carelessly, they flock to the open cells where the honey smells the sweetest, and soil with their excrement the combs they frequent. The patient workers, their eyes steadily fixed on the future, will silently set things right. From noon till 3, when the purple country trembles in blissful lassitude beneath the invincible gaze of a July or August sun, the drones will appear on the threshold. They have a helmet made of enormous black pearls, two lofty, quivering plumes, a doublet of iridescent, yellowish velvet, an heroic tuft, a fourfold mantle, translucent and rigid. They create a prodigious stir, brush the sentry aside, overturn the cleaners, and collide with the foragers as these return laden with their humble spoil. These drones have a busy air, the extravagant, contemptuous, supercilious gait of indispensable gods who should be simultaneously venturing toward some destiny unknown to the vulgar. One by one these drones sail off into space, irresistible, glorious, and tranquilly make for the nearest flowers, where they sleep till the afternoon freshness awakes them. Then, with the same majestic pomp, and still overflowing with magnificent schemes, they return to the hive, go straight to the combs, plunge their heads up to the neck in the vats of honey and fill themselves as tight as a drum to repair their exhausted strength; whereupon, with heavy steps, they go forth to meet the good, dreamless, and careless slumber that shall fold them in its embrace till the time for the next repast.

No, Mr. President, the labor provisions of this bill do not especially demand "social justice" and industrial liberty for such persons unless they be willing to leave off their slothful, wasteful habits, but do demand "social justice" and industrial liberty for those persons without whose industry, resoluteness, patience, sacrifices, physical strength, cool heads, skillful hands, and unremitting toil we never could have mastered the mechanical arts and the physical sciences. This bill secures a measure of "social justice" and industrial freedom for those who amid the thud of the drill and the rising and falling of picks and shovels in the mines dig our copper ore and convert it into watch movements, magnetoes, wire, and electric lamps; for those who dig the coal which transports the commerce of the Nation; for those who dig our iron ore and convert it into railroad steel, machinery, cutlery, and all the ingenious mechanical and electrical contrivances that make life broader, more useful, and beautiful; for those who convert our crude oil into lubricants and gasoline; for those who convert our forests into houses, chairs, desks, tables, and bookcases; for those who cultivate and fructify our land; for those who produce; for those who transform the wool into clothing, the hides into boots and shoes, harness and saddles; for those who make engines, reapers, locomotives, and the thousands of other forms of manufactured commodities; for those who with good cheer face the rising morn, are loyal to their day's work, and are constantly pouring forth costly sacrifices—their time and strength—for the common good of all; for those who uncomplainingly meet danger on the trains, in the mines, in the smelters, and in the foundries; for those who with high but baffled ambition invincibly face the isolation and monotony which comes when poverty has deprived life of its sublimity and ideality and reduces it to a remorseless and deadly grind for a subsistence.

This bill recognizes that labor power is the noble force for the great social and industrial achievements of our Nation's future.

We need not suffer ourselves to be misled with any delusions. No nation will truly be great—indeed, no nation will survive—if it oppresses its own producers. The workers of our Nation have built up a surpassingly great fabric of mechanical industry, and history teaches us that powerful nations of ancient times fell prone and helpless not because of invasions or external barbaric strength but because of social injustices. If danger ever comes to us it will not come from abroad; it will rise up from among ourselves.

The American people have accomplished more salutary reform and progress than any other nation in the files of time. Let us add one more great achievement to the long list of American achievements by adopting this bill.

I thank the Senate for its attention, and ask that as an appendix to my remarks I may include a letter written by Gov. George W. P. Hunt, of Arizona, to the Popular Government League.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, that may be done.

The matter referred to is as follows:

ARIZONA'S GOVERNOR TELLS OF STATE'S GREAT PROGRESS UNDER POPULAR GOVERNMENT BANNER.

At a meeting of the popular government conference held at Washington the purposes of the meeting were stated as follows:

"To present the necessity for the proposed 'gateway amendment,' which will afford an easier method of amending the Federal Constitution; to discuss the dangers which now threaten the movement for the initiative, referendum, and recall; to consider the preferential ballot; to emphasize the need of the public school as a civic center; to organize the national popular government league."

Gov. Hunt had been invited as the representative of the "most advanced State in the Union," but was unable to attend. Under these circumstances Gov. Hunt wrote the following address, which was read by the secretary:

"Fellow friends of popular government: History continues an insistent repeater—an institution of parallels and similitude.

"Since the dawn of time humanity has been struggling toward the light—in philosophy, science, religion, and government. And in every age and every field this irresistible movement, always gaining toward the shining goal, has been combated, retarded, temporarily defeated by a self-constituted, self-loving, self-interested aristocracy.

"Sometimes an aristocracy of blood, insolently assuming the dynastic right of perpetual dominion; sometimes an aristocracy of learning, solemnly averring itself the sum and substance, the beginning and the end, of knowledge and wisdom; sometimes of force, brutally proving its claim with bow, battle-ax, and sword; sometimes of charlatanic virtue, proclaiming from gilten temples the possession of all excellence.

"Sometimes it is an aristocracy of wealth—but of that, a word later.

"At all times and in all places an aristocracy of selfishness, of greed, egotism, and intolerance; of indifference to the rights of the many, deafness to the voice of humanity.

"Ever and everywhere it has first ignored, then derided, then crushed—if it could—those who dared question its absolutism, its ends, or its means.

"Its weapons? The weapons of evil, always. Ancient, medieval, modern, they have varied little. The first to hand, good enough—none too base, none too cowardly, none too cruel, and it would serve their purpose.

"Scheming, conniving, when need be; slaughtering to retain their grip of power, the resources and weapons of these self-appointed rulers have ever been turned against those who dared stand forth for the right, for equality, for justice, for progress. In the struggle valiant leaders have often succumbed, the battle been turned aside, victory delayed. But ever the cause has lived and revived and grown, and to-day, as never before, humanity is marching forward. Where for long it groped it is now making its way swiftly, surely, steadily toward the light.

"Arizona has played and is playing her part in the latest act of this ages-old drama. Here we had, for many years and in almost unlimited power, the aristocracy of wealth, with all that it implies—government for the people but not of them; boss-ridden political parties, corrupted legislatures, burdensome laws, unequal taxation, special privileges for the few.

"The system has been changed; not, I must admit, absolutely revolutionized, but decisively, effectively.

"The new order came with statehood, not of slow growth, varying fortune, and gradual success, as great reforms usually come, but with suddenness—surprising, startling, almost wholly unexpected suddenness. The people, aroused into an activity to which, under the prevailing system, they had long been strangers, became quickly prepared for a change in their interest. But the political parties, run as all aristocracies of wealth run political parties—by machines—were not ready. The popular government was a thing too remote, too different from the old Arizona plan, too entirely out of joint with the existing order, to be of a sudden feared. A cloud out of a clear sky for the aristocracy of wealth, it looked ominous, but it simply would not, could not, open and let fall its flood. That's how the bosses—the old-time, always successful, self-satisfied bosses—sans reason, reasoned it out, and their masters, the aristocracy, took their word for it. There wasn't time for much of anything else.

"But the movement swept the Territory, soon to become a State. The people, charged with the making of a constitution, first became alive to their responsibility, and then awakened to the possibility. There was opportunity to become their own masters, and they felt qualified to assume the sovereignty. One old-time machine—the Democratic—was captured by assault; another run over and crushed—crushed out of all recognition, and to this day it lies a broken, shapeless mass, a testimonial to the persistence, the stubbornness, the insatiable greed of the aristocracy of wealth.

"The constitutional convention was held, and popular government reserved and defined in the organic law became an assured fact in Arizona.

"Do not think this brilliant achievement was unaccompanied by a struggle, or that the struggle ended with the constitutional reservation to the people of the right to control their own affairs. When has anyone heard of an aristocracy of anything, and particularly of wealth, surrendering its prerogatives calmly, amiably, or at all if possible to prevent, or of suffering their continued loss while a chance of regaining any portion of the lost ground remained?

"On the contrary, the fight for a people's constitution in Arizona, unexpectedly as it came up, suddenly as it flared into life, was probably as fierce, as bitter, as uncompromising, as sensational, and, metaphorically speaking, as sanguinary a contest as has occurred in the United States for many a long year. Nor is the reference to its bloodiness so very far-fetched, for when the smoke of battle had cleared away many a political corpse lay stretched upon the field.

"One beauty—the beauty—of the contest was its clear-cutness. There was no doubting the issue which divided the forces. 'Shall the people rule?' was the paramount question. Of course, both sides answered, 'Yes'; but while one side said, 'through us,' the other said 'through themselves.' And the people proceeded to equip themselves to rule, not through the machines of the aristocracy of wealth, but through and by and for themselves.

"In the campaign out of which came a 'people's rule' constitution the machine, by its agents and instruments, vilified, abused, and denounced the advocates of popular government as advocates of all movements for progress, of all movements to reduce the aristocracy to a position of political equality, have been vilified, abused, and denounced—and frequently executed—in times and ages past.

"The proposed initiative, referendum, and recall were violently assailed as something totally impractical, subversive of republicanism, anarchistic—that was a favorite term—and most frequently by men who to be confounded needed only to be asked to explain what these terrible triplets were. They actually could not explain, literally they did not know. The three-headed monster had come upon them so suddenly that they had no time to identify the species. But that it was an insatiable, devouring beast they were certain, for their masters had so advised them, and in the battle for extinction, 'Theirs not to reason why; theirs but to do and die.'

"Other essential features of popular government were not forgotten by the people's advocates, but the battle waged about the initiative, referendum, and recall.

"And the initiative, referendum, and recall, if the opponents of reform were to be believed, would strike at the very foundation of our republican form of government; they were unconstitutional, unwieldy, impossible; they were weapons of the mob, the resort of anarchists. The champions of them were held up to ridicule and scorn, loaded with all the epithets that hatred and malignity might suggest or invent—Socialists, demagogues, bogus reformers, ranting hypocrites, blatherskite orators, blithering idiots. No appellation too vile, no charge too nasty, no means too low if aimed toward undoing the efforts of those who upheld the people's fight and toward defeat of the people's fight. And in this history, for the thousandth time, was repeating.

"Then, too, the most direful results, if this monstrous calamity should befall, were predicted—aye, prophesied as of a certainty and finally threatened as an awesome bugaboo is held before a naughty child. That the Government would fall to pieces was the least of the terrible results that might be looked forward to. Business would be paralyzed, development would cease, capital would withdraw and never come again, the name of the State would be a byword and a scorn. On the contrary, if the safe and sane rule of the aristocracy of wealth were continued, prosperity would abound, capital would pour in, the industries would forge ahead, there would be universal plenty. The prophecies and representations, arguments, threats, and promises all were borrowed from the oft-copied pages of history—from the pages of history reciting other attacks upon the castles of tyrant rulers.

"But neither abuse, ridicule, threats, nor cajolery served the purpose of the machine. The people won—that is, so far as the returns went.

"Then the machines went to work upon the members-elect of the constitutional convention. They were bound by solemn pledges; they were instructed to insure the people's rule, but, argued the insidious agents of the aristocracy of wealth, what of that? Often before platform pledges had been ignored; in fact, it was generally understood that platforms were merely to get in on; now they were in, a good political trick had been turned let's get down to brass tacks—down to good, hard practical common sense. So the machine, as always, worked upon the weak-kneed and faint-hearted, the timid, the susceptible, and the corrupt. Abuse and vilification somewhat continued, but largely gave way to subtler methods—to plausible representations, to the well-known ways of the lobbyist, to entreaties and to threats.

"As indicative of the methods employed, an incident may be related. A member-elect of the convention—a young man, with the promise of a political career before him—was approached by an agent of the machine. If the young man, with a future so full of hope, persisted in his unreasonable course, he would be crushed. He and his intemperate cause might triumph for a day, but it would not be long before he would be ground under the wheels of the aristocracy. It is indicative of the spirit which brought the convention to complete fulfillment of its duty that the young man replied: 'It may so so. Socrates was forced to drink the hemlock, but his philosophy survives the centuries; Columbus, ridiculed, reviled, and scorned, died a pauper's death, but he opened the door of a new world, and the glory of his name can never be dimmed. I am neither a Socrates nor a Columbus, but I can do my best.'

"The threat was freely used that unless the radical demands of the reformers were abandoned, there would be no statehood. No constitution containing the initiative, referendum, and recall—and particularly the recall—could run the gantlet of Congress and the President. It was boldly asserted, on authority of the President, and confirmed by his spokesmen in the territory.

"But the people of Arizona are a courageous, determined race; and their representatives in that convention were largely of them—really and truly of them. In spite of every effort of the opposition, in spite of all obstacles, there was little hesitation in the carrying out of the people's instructions.

"Then came the most dangerous period. When it became certain that the initiative, referendum, and recall would be features of the proposed constitution—when it was definitely known that the platform pledges were to be in some manner and measure redeemed—many were the schemes concocted to nullify their effects. The jokers proposed would fill a respectable volume—that is, they would fill a volume respectable in size.

"Among those it was proposed that, inasmuch as the details would be purely legislative, only a mandate to the legislature should be placed in the constitution. Or the question should be submitted to the people at the first State election. To the first proposal it was pointed out that the failures, refusals, and weaknesses of legislatures were responsible for the demand for direct legislative powers; to the latter reply was given that the people had already most emphatically spoken. Next appeared suggestions of the high and unworkable percentages, of requirements that petitions should come from a majority of counties, of a dozen things designed simply to reduce popular government, as it should be provided for in Arizona's constitution, to an empty phrase.

"Every scheme was bared, every proposal to restrict the power of the people was brushed aside. That convention did its duty. The initiative, referendum, and recall, in self-executing, workable detail, were placed in the constitution, and along with them the instrument was made most easily amendable, and practically all features known to the modern system of popular government were provided. Oregon's advisory vote for United States Senators was borrowed, provisions for the prevention and prohibition of trusts and monopolies and the regulation of public-service corporations were embodied, the proper safeguarding of the rights of labor was attended to. As a people's victory, it was quite complete.

"The scene changed to Washington, but the fight against popular government in Arizona did not cease. The proposed constitution, ratified by 85 per cent of Arizona's electorate, was attacked from within and without. It was a national struggle, with which all friends of popular government are familiar. An incident of the fight, local both in its purposes and effect, was a declaration, addressed to the President and Congress, and signed by something like 50 of the old machine Democrats of the State, acting on behalf of the aristocracy of wealth, to the effect that the proposed constitution was not the work of the Democratic Party, and petitioning for its disapproval. That document is still occasionally exhumed and the signers asked to explain.

"After a protracted struggle Arizona was admitted, its constitution unimpaired except for a concession insisted upon by President Taft to save his face—the excepting of the judiciary from the recall's provisions—and the rectification of that alteration constituted the electorate's first application of its constitutional powers.

"And what of the disaster—civil, political, industrial disaster—that was to follow the inauguration of these "innovations," these radical, impractical, anarchistic notions of the mob?

"It has not happened. Mines are running, farms are spreading, herds are increasing, homes are multiplying, towns are building; there is more prosperity to the square inch in Arizona than ever before, and the future's promise is rosette.

"Not a dollar of capital, as far as I know, has retired; rather, it has accepted many of the conditions imposed, and while still fighting for the domination to which it has been accustomed, is prepared to accept the legitimate return which the laws do not, by any means, deny. Business activities have shown no sign of abating, and, altogether, industrial conditions are pursuing to an even and far more normal tenor.

"The initiative, referendum, and recall have demonstrated their practicability, their utility, their success. The intelligence of the voters has been demonstrated and their interest in legislation illustrated in a most practical manner. Perhaps I can no more clearly set this forth than to quote from my message of last February to the legislature:

"'Of particular and extraordinary interest at this time is the splendid and convincing vindication of the principle and as well the practice of direct legislation as embodied in the results of the election held November 5, but also by other occurrences of recent months. Notable among these may be mentioned the somewhat curious fact that whereas during the period in which the framing of Arizona's constitution was an issue, the Democratic Party was forced to make a single-handed fight for the direct-legislation cause, so well established has this principle now become that during the last campaign every political party, young or old, represented in the State, made platform indorsement of the initiative and referendum.

"'The legislature submitted to the people four proposed amendments to the constitution, while the people, taking advantage of the power reserved to them under the constitution, initiated an amendment to the suffrage and elections article providing for woman suffrage. All of these proposed amendments were of the greatest importance and elicited the interest they deserved. The vote on them was as follows:

"'Recall of judicial officers: For, 16,272; against, 3,705.

"'Right of State to engage in industrial pursuits: For, 14,928; against, 3,602.

"'Permitting greater latitude in the enactment of taxation laws: For, 15,967; against, 2,283.

"'Permitting the additional bonding of incorporated towns and cities for municipal water and light plants and sewers: For, 15,358; against, 2,676

"Equal suffrage: For, 13,442; against, 6,202.

"'In addition to these constitutional amendments, the referendum was invoked on eight measures enacted by the legislature. It is worthy of consideration in estimating the absolute fairness and practicability of this method of legislation that in all of these cases save two resort to the people, which should always be the court of final appeal, was had by and at the instance of corporations which were, while Arizona's constitution was being framed and during the period when its fate, with that of statehood, hung in the balance at Washington, in bitter opposition to the initiative and referendum features of the charter. Not only were these corporations first to invoke the referendum, but they took occasion, in the literature forming a part of an elaborate campaign made to defeat the measures to which objection was had, to commend the "wise provision" of the constitution permitting the people to pass judgment on all laws enacted by the legislature.

"'Never could the interest of the people in legislation affecting their welfare or the welfare of any class of citizens, or their ability to judge of the merits or demerits of proposed measures, be more strikingly illustrated or more definitely settled than was done in this instance. On one hand certain powerful interests, violently objecting to the measures enacted by the legislature, after invoking the referendum, entered upon an elaborate, exhaustive, systematic, and, doubtless, very expensive campaign to defeat the measures at the polls. Speakers were employed to tour the State; printed literature in large quantities and personal letters signed by prominent and influential officers of the corporations chiefly concerned flooded the mails; personal workers were interested, and such employees as could be influenced were advised as to what were for the 'best interests of the company,' while great spaces were used in many newspapers in the State, not only in the advertising columns, but in the news columns, and very frequently in the editorial departments. Nor did any political party champion the cause or lend its moral support. As required by law, publicity pamphlets were sent out by the secretary of state; a few speeches were made in the larger towns by advocates representing the labor organizations; and the people, alive to every phase of the situation, discussed it among themselves. That was the extent of the affirmative campaign. And in spite of the efforts put forth to convince them to the contrary, the people decided that the measures were good ones.

"'The favorite claim made by the opponents of direct legislation, that the people will not take an interest in measures referred to or instituted by them, is here totally disproved, since an average of 18,887 votes were cast on the constitutional amendments and 17,884 on the referred laws, as against an average vote of 23,483 for presidential electors and 23,545 for all candidates for Congress.

"'It were difficult to conceive of a more emphatic demonstration of the thorough utility of Arizona's direct-legislation provision than has thus been afforded at its first trial.'

"Altogether Arizona is wonderfully satisfied with her trial of popular government. It has not proved that perfection has been reached, and perfection is by no means claimed, but it has generously shown that the people may be safely intrusted with the management of their own affairs. They may make mistakes—who does not?—but they are quick to see, and with the power to do so, quick to remedy them. They are not rash, impulsive, or unfair, as the opponents of popular government would endeavor to make the people themselves believe, but, on the contrary, may be depended upon to treat fairly with all interests and classes.

"Not yet are they, with this weapon of self-government in their hands, out of danger from the exactions of the aristocracy of wealth, for at all times, day and night, early and late, under all conditions and circumstances, the machinery of that vast organization is working, if not to hold its unwarranted dominion, to regain that which it has lost. It is not quite sufficient that the people shall have the means to control and direct their government; they must be alert to do so. Thus far the people of Arizona have been watchful and alert and have proved their capability and intelligence. With the power at their command, reserved to them by the constitution they framed, they have only to continue so.

"Arizona will welcome the day when all the States of the Union shall respond to the demand for this genuinely democratic system of government, when the United States Government itself shall, through the medium of salutary reforms, become more sensitive to the majority's will. To this latter end the proposed "gateway" amendment constituted a highly commendable movement. No question could be of greater importance at the present time than the breaking down of the ancient barriers interposed between the people and their organic law. That done, and many needed reforms will follow. That done, and it will be a question of but a few years when the Government of the United States will become in fact as well as in theory an example of genuine popular government.

"Consecrated to such a cause, the National Popular Government League may well be proud of its mission. My heartiest support is hereby pledged."

RECESS.

Mr. CULBERSON. I move that the Senate take a recess until 11 o'clock to-morrow morning.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 44 minutes p. m., Thursday, August 13, 1914) the Senate took a recess until to-morrow, Friday, August 14, 1914, at 11 o'clock a. m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, August 13, 1914.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O Lord and Master of us all, through whose infinite wisdom, power, and goodness we live and resolve, hope and aspire, and pray; yet we realize that while the spirit is willing the flesh is weak, and we ever fall short of our desires. Help us to control our thoughts, direct our ways, and make straight our paths, that through Thy influence we may unfold and develop our character as individuals and as a Nation unto the ideals taught and exemplified in the life and character of the Christ. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

ASSAY OFFICE, NEW YORK CITY.

Mr. CANTOR. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill S. 3342, for the enlargement, and so forth, of the Wall Street front of the assay office in the city of New York, and consider it at this time. It is precisely the same bill that passed this House in April.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill S. 3342 and consider it at this time. The Clerk will report the bill for the information of Members.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I am quite familiar with the bill, and I shall not consent to its passage at this time without reference to the committee. I think that a bill involving the use of appropriations should be referred to the committee.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois objects.

Mr. CANTOR. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman kindly withhold his objection? There is a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury stating that it is very important that this be done now, on account of the gold supply in New York, in order that the vaults may be completed as soon as possible.

Mr. MANN. The committee can report upon it at once.

Mr. CANTOR. It has reported on precisely the same bill.

Mr. LOGUE. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will yield, we have had this bill on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent for some time.

Mr. MANN. I remember the bill in the House and in the Senate also.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois objects.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

The SPEAKER announced his signature to enrolled bill of the following title:

S. 1644. An act for the relief of May Stanley.

SENATE BILL REFERRED.

Under clause 2, Rule XXIV, Senate bill of the following title was taken from the Speaker's table and referred to its appropriate committee, as indicated below:

S. 3342. An act for the enlargement, etc., of the Wall Street front of the assay office in the city of New York; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

WATER POWER ON THE PUBLIC DOMAIN.

The SPEAKER. Under the rule the House will automatically resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 16673) to provide for the development of water power and the use of public lands in relation thereto, and for other purposes.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman's point of order comes too late to make it in the House. He can make it in the committee.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 16673, with Mr. FITZGERALD in the chair.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Washington makes the point of order that there is no quorum present. The Chair will count. [After counting.] Seventy-six Members are present, not a quorum. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify the absentees, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

The committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. FITZGERALD, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee, having under consideration the bill H. R. 16673, had found itself without a quorum; that he had directed the roll to be called; that 245 Members had answered to their names, a quorum, and he handed in a list of the absentees.

The committee resumed its sitting.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] is recognized for 25 minutes.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, in my opening remarks on this bill on Tuesday I called attention to the fact that the water-power development contemplated by it can only be secured under water rights granted by the respective States under certain terms and conditions and that subject to compliance with these conditions those rights are perpetual. I called attention to the further fact that the only interest or control that the Federal Government has over this development arises out of its ownership of lands that may be necessary, to a greater or less extent, for the diversion, development, or distribution works connected with the water-power development. I stated further that, taking advantage of the Government ownership of such lands, the bill proceeded on the assumption that such ownership or proprietorship vested in the Federal Government authority to delegate to the Secretary of the Interior the right to levy and collect an excise tax. That this excise tax will not be uniform among the States because applicable only to certain States, and not uniform within these States because applicable only to projects in whole or in part on public lands, and clearly not expected to be uniform even among the projects effected.

The bill further proceeds on the assumption that by reason of the fact of proprietorship of lands within certain States the Federal Government may exercise municipal right of sovereignty and eminent domain within the limits of a State.

LEGISLATION CENTRALIZING AND FEDERALISTIC.

I do not raise these questions or call attention to these features of the legislation which challenge the sovereign and reserved rights of the people in the States out of any spirit of captious criticism or with a desire to prejudice legislation by raising an issue as to the relative jurisdictions of the States of the Federal Government. I do so rather for the purpose of suggesting that legislation relative to these matters, to be fair, to be just, to be useful, to be in the public interest, to be permanent under the decisions of the courts, should and eventually must recognize the kind of government which our fathers established and which it is our duty to help maintain.

Alexander Hamilton is generally given the credit of being the foremost champion and ablest exponent and defender of the federalistic view of our system of government. He not only believed in a strong central government but he was willing to vest very considerable power and authority in the officials and functionaries of that Government. I venture, however, to assert, without fear of successful contradiction, that Mr. Hamilton in his most centralizing and federalistic moments would not have dreamed of proposing or promoting so bureaucratic, centralizing, and federalistic a plan as that now presented for our consideration.

PUBLIC CONTROL NECESSARY.

Let us have no misunderstanding of our position. I desire to have it clearly understood that I and those who hold similar views with regard to those matters are wholly in accord with certain avowed and announced purposes of those who stand sponsor for this legislation. We earnestly desire to encourage water-power development in the public-land States. We believe that in any event, and particularly in the present attitude of the Government bureaus having to do with these matters, some legislation is necessary. We realize the great and permanent importance of hydroelectric development. We appreciate the fact that this development, in certain of its important aspects and phases, has, to a greater or less extent, the elements of a natural monopoly. We realize, therefore, to the fullest extent, that this development must and should be under proper public control, with power to determine as to rates, terms, and conditions of service. More than two years ago I introduced a bill providing for uniform legislation on the subject of rights of way for power development and other purposes, fully protecting the public interest and assuring the complete control of the people to be served—the public interested—over service and charges, which I shall offer at the appropriate time.

We come from a part of the country where the foundation for such public control is firmly fixed and bottomed on the fact that the water, which is the one essential element in all this contemplated development, is under the complete and unquestioned control of the people. I desire to emphasize this feature of the controversy because it has become the habit of those who take the centralizing bureaucratic and federalistic view of these matters to assume, some of them at least, an air of superior virtue, as though they alone were the friends of the people, who proposed to give the people interested and affected the least to say about their own affairs. It has become the chronic habit, unintentional no doubt, of a certain class of people to proclaim their special interest in and service of the people when proposing plans under which the people, even as represented by the Congress, would have virtually nothing to say.

One of the peculiarities of a certain view, which gentlemen assume to be advanced and altruistic, is that it always leads to the multiplication of the agencies of control, the increasing of the difficulties of operation and the addition of burdens on the theory that in some mysterious way out of the maze of regulation and through added difficulties and burdens may come benefits to the people, who in the long run must pay the bills.

We oppose this legislation in its present form because it is federalistic, bureaucratic, centralizing, inequitable, and burdensome. We oppose it because we do not believe that any considerable development would be possible under it. As a representative of the people of a western Commonwealth, whose development will be affected by the legislation, my viewpoint is that of the people to be served by the energy which may be developed from our falling waters. It is true that in a reasonable and proper way the interests of those who may make investments in enterprises of the character contemplated should be safeguarded. But they may in the main be depended upon to safeguard their own interests and not engage upon enterprises which do not give promise of fair returns and reasonable security.

The people of these Commonwealths, however, have a twofold interest: First, in having development keep pace with demand, and, second, to secure the benefits of development under the most advantageous conditions and on the most favorable terms. It is almost superfluous to say that these objects can not be accomplished by legislation under which the people affected would have practically no voice in the regulation and control of development, nor can I conceive how the public interest anywhere can be served by placing in the hands of one individual far removed from the scene of enterprise and operation autocratic control over the inauguration and operation of vast enterprises.

THEORY OF BILL ERRONEOUS.

In the time allotted me it is impossible to take up in detail the many objectionable features of the bill before us. As I have indicated, the primary fault of the bill lies in the fact that it approaches and deals with the subject matter from an altogether erroneous viewpoint, and its provisions are based on an altogether mistaken notion of the respective powers and interests of the Federal Government and of the States within which the contemplated enterprises are to be located and of the people to be served by them. The interest of the Federal Government grows out of the proprietorship of certain lands. The duty of the Federal Government is to see to it that out of this ownership no additional burdens shall be laid upon the communities to be served, and, on the other hand, that no opportunities shall rise to hamper complete public control over the agencies established. Government ownership of the lands utilized should not be made the means of retarding development or the excuse for increasing the cost of the power developed. Neither should it afford opportunities for those who utilize these lands to escape complete public control of the enterprises they establish. This legislation proceeds apparently on the theory that only by assuming a jurisdiction the Government does not possess and vesting that jurisdiction in the hands of a single individual can the Commonwealths affected or their people be protected.

If, as a matter of fact, we have reached that condition or ever could reach that condition under our form of government, we certainly would be in a bad way, a condition under which the Federal Government must protect the people from themselves, under which the Federal Government must assume the control of purely local operations on the theory that the people are going to allow themselves to be robbed.

Starting out on this theory, the bill in its first section places in the hands of one official of the Government complete authority over all the public lands reserved or unreserved which individuals, corporations, or municipalities may desire to utilize in any way for the development or transmission of power created by the forces of gravity acting upon water.

DANGEROUS GRANT OF POWER.

This power and authority delegated to the Secretary of the Interior includes the power to either grant or withhold. He may grant as much as he desires or withhold all rights and privileges in his discretion. His prohibition may be absolute and without reason given, or it may be exerted indirectly by applying to all applications or any particular application terms and conditions which the applicant can not meet. Favoritism may be exercised either by preferring one applicant above another under the same terms or by requiring impossible conditions of one and making practically a donation of opportunities to another. Assuming for the sake of argument that Congress has the power to so delegate its functions without rule or guide, which I doubt, all human experience attests the unwisdom of such a grant of authority.

But gentlemen will say we must lodge a certain amount of discretion somewhere. That is very true, but there is a great deal of difference between reasonable discretion within certain well-defined lines and practically unlimited authority to grant or withhold, to burden, or to donate. As a logical corollary to this grant of unbridled authority to the Secretary of the Interior is the entire absence of any provision containing any grant, right, or privilege on anyone. No individual, association, or municipality has any assurance under this legislation that it can ever secure any of the opportunities which the bill contemplates. The possession of a water right gives no such assurance, and no act or application, however much it may demonstrate the good faith, equitable right, or financial ability of an applicant can assure the opportunity for development which the Secretary may for any reason or without reason see fit to deny.

It is true that at this time we have a Secretary of the Interior in whom most people have confidence. There have been times when men occupied that office who suffered from lack of public confidence. What a howl of protest would have gone up if under different circumstances and conditions than now exist a bill had been brought in proposing to lodge in the Secretary of the Interior the powers this bill confers. Yet Secretaries come and go, but the authority, once conferred, continues. Most men want to do the right thing, I think, but there are great differences of opinion as to what constitutes the right thing to do. Ours is a Government of law, not of discretion or of personal judgments, and there is no place under our system of government for the unrestrained authority which this bill proposes to confer.

There are many details of the bill that are objectionable, details that grow out of the erroneous basis of the legislation. The effect of its provisions are inconsistent with our form of government, not likely to encourage development, and certain in the long run to breed scandal if extensive operations were attempted under it.

Mr. BOWDLE. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. MONDELL. I will.

Mr. BOWDLE. Is there any radical departure in this bill from the principle laid down in the reclamation act?

Mr. MONDELL. I think a very radical departure, I will say to the gentleman, because the reclamation act very wisely provides that the Secretary of the Interior, acting for the Federal Government as a proprietor, shall proceed to do what any other proprietor might do, and no more. There is nothing in the act that invokes the sovereign power of the Federal Government. It is simply a legislative direction on behalf of the United States, the proprietor of certain lands, to its agent, the Secretary of the Interior, to do those things, and those things alone, under the laws of the States and Territories which any individual who had the lands and the means could do.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. I will.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Is there not this difference also? Does not the reclamation act contemplate that ultimately the land shall go into private ownership and shall be subject to taxation, whereas——

Mr. MONDELL. I am glad my friend called attention to that. The reclamation law provides for the construction, regulation, and control of certain enterprises by the Secretary of the Interior, acting as agent for the United States as proprietor, until upon the completion of the works they become the property of those who live upon the land and automatically pass into their absolute control, except as to the control which the Government retains of certain great storage works. On the other hand this is a proposition of a perpetual, never-ending lease of Government land and a charge, the amount of which no man can measure, entirely within the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior as to amount, and in no wise based on any value that the Federal Government contributes to the enterprise in the way of land or any other property. As great a charge might be made for the use of one acre of public land under this bill as for a million.

Mr. J. M. C. SMITH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. I will.

Mr. J. M. C. SMITH. I want to inquire whether or not there are not now a number of quite large dams capable of creating and generating a great deal of water power that are not in use by the Government?

Mr. MONDELL. Well, we have a large one in my State which, I regret very much to say, has never found any customers since it was built. I suppose there are others of that sort. We favor legislation, we want legislation; but we insist it is not necessary to tear down the pillars of the Constitution, uproot the foundations of the Government, ignore the character of the Government under which we live, in order to accomplish those things, to secure development, and protect the people in their rights.

Mr. RAKER. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. MONDELL. I will.

Mr. RAKER. Will the gentleman explain what difference there is in the Government leasing this land for water-power purposes and leasing it for raising cattle upon, so far as the right of the Government to deal with its property is concerned.

Mr. MONDELL. I have raised no question as to the right of the Government to lease its land. I do not make any such claim. There is a question of the wisdom of doing it. It has been questioned, but I am not now discussing the right of the Federal Government to permanently retain and lease its lands. That is simply a question of policy.

Mr. RAKER. What I was getting at is that the gentleman has not any doubt but that the Government could lease its lands, if it desired, for grazing purposes?

Mr. MONDELL. Oh, I think the Government could. Some people think it should, but it never has.

Mr. RAKER. And we hope it will not?

Mr. MONDELL. You and I do.

Mr. RAKER. Some gentlemen have sought legislation for leasing of Government land for stock-raising purposes. If that is the fact, why can it not lease its land for power-plant purposes?

Mr. MONDELL. As I said to the gentleman a moment ago, I am not denying the power of the Government to lease its lands for those purposes. I do, however, insist that if it is to be a lease instead of a right of way or easement that the Government is to provide, it should not be made the means or excuse for laying burdens on the use of water which is the property of the State.

What we should have is a grant or easement, not a lease. The only charges paid to the Federal Government should be for property or benefits received from the United States, based on uniform provisions fixed by statute. The States should be fully protected in their control over rates and charges rather than deprived of their control. Any taxes or charges above reasonable payments for public lands used should be laid and collected by the States and communities, not by the Federal Government.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Washington [Mr. JOHNSON].

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Chairman, conservation is a word to conjure with. In the name of conservation the most iridescent dream is accepted as fact. Proper conservation, of course, is sound and proper, and has come to stay. But why destroy the far Western States in order to conserve them?

The people of the far West have had about as much conservation thrust upon them as one generation can bear up under, and yet under the hypnotic and beneficent name of conservation we now have thrown at us in one lump four more conservation propositions. All summer we have been told that these bills were coming—four bills, so we were told—designed to end the stagnation in the development of the West. It is something, of course, to have secured an admission from the dream-book conservationists that their earlier schemes of holding up and hog tying the resources of the West had resulted in stagnation—literally to the starving point in many cases.

So now, after an all-summer wait, the Democratic Rules Committee loosens up, and on August 11 throws four intricate so-called conservation bills at us in one chunk, and calls for immediate action and limited debate.

No one knew which particular bill of the quartet was to come up first, but it turned out to be one disguised under the alluring title "A bill (H. R. 16673) to provide for the development of water power and the use of public lands in relation thereto."

Notice the optimistic and enthusiastic words of the title, "development" and "use." We of the West hope the words mean something, but I have yet to find a western Member who likes this bill. Even the members of the committee, so far as I can learn, shy off and say, "Well, it was this or nothing." "It is in the cards," and the like. Some of them accept the fact, but ease their consciences by opposing the principle.

Debate on this bill has been limited to two hours a side, in spite of the fact that the hearings on April 30 and May 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, and 8—nine days—produced a printed volume of 772 pages.

The distinguished chairman of the Public Lands Committee, the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. FERRIS], opened the debate and received the close attention of from 25 to 50 Members of Congress—which is remarkable when it is considered that this bill makes full and final provision for the handling of more than 20,000,000 horsepower located in the 11 far Western States, and a few million more horsepower in the other public-land States. See page 14812, RECORD for August 11.

I consider it unfortunate that it was twice necessary on that day to call in a quorum in the hope of interesting a few of the Representatives in Congress of all the people as to how it is proposed to handle the water power and the public domain of all the people, for these bills take it for granted that the 11 Western States have no possible concern in the matter, even though 72.6 per cent of all the potential water power in the United States lies within their boundaries, and six States, I believe, have public-service commissions; and, under this bill, most of it is to be taxed by the United States, while the water power of Massachusetts, Delaware, and Oklahoma, if it has any, is to pay no Federal tribute.

The debate is so limited and my time is so short—20 minutes—that I can do no more than call your attention to a few pages in the 772-page volume of hearings on House bill 14893.

On page 499 of the hearings you will find the resolution of the western governors adopted at Denver April 9, 1914, as follows:

Resolution of western governors at Denver conference April 9, 1914, re conservation and water powers.

At their conference at Denver on April 9, 1914, the governors of the States of Utah, Nevada, Colorado, Washington, Oregon, Idaho, Wyoming, New Mexico, and North Dakota adopted the following resolution:

"Whereas Congress has declared the water of all lakes, rivers, and other sources of water supply upon the public lands and not navigable shall remain and be held free for the appropriation and use of the public for irrigation, mining, and manufacturing purposes, we insist the Federal Government has no authority to exercise control over the waters of a State through ownership of public lands:

"Resolved, We maintain the waters of a State belong to the people of the State, and that the State should be left free to develop water-power possibilities and receive fully the revenues and other benefits derived from said developments.

"We believe in conservation—in sane conservation. We believe the all-wise Creator placed the vast resources of this Nation here for the use and benefit of all the people, past, present, and future; and while we believe due consideration and protection should be given to the rights of those who come hereafter, we insist that the people of this day and age should be given every reasonable opportunity to develop our resources and put them to beneficial use."

Mr. Chairman, the hearings contain also a brief memorandum in support of that resolution.

The 11 Western States included in the committee's group of Western States are California, Oregon, Washington, Arizona, Nevada, Idaho, Montana, Wyoming, Utah, Colorado, and New Mexico.

Nine of the 11 governors put forth the resolution. Two were unable to attend the conference.

Mr. RAKER. Will the gentleman yield right there?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I will gladly yield for one question.

Mr. RAKER. The gentleman is not in favor of the present water-power acts, is he?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I am not in favor of any act that taxes the Western States through a Federal process.

Mr. RAKER. Through the present law you only get a revocable permit.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I have not time to go into detail as to that now.

Mr. RAKER. Do you not think it is a beneficent change to give them a definite period of 50 years?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I do not. One of the reasons for saying so is that there arrived in my mail a week ago a paper—the Camas (Wash.) Post—printed in one of the counties of the district which I have the honor to represent, that told of the failure of one of these power plants. This paper says:

If we remember rightly, we were promised that a great wave of prosperity would start spreading itself out over the country about July 1. Here it is along in August and we fail to notice anywhere where the wave has struck with any considerable force, but we have noticed within the week that the Washington-Oregon Corporation, operating power, light, water plants, and street car systems in this State and Oregon, has been placed in the hands of receivers, to say nothing of the army of employees dropped by the Pacific Power & Light Co. from their several propositions in the Northwest, within a short period, and the hundreds of woodworking plants throughout this State that have closed down.

Now, it failed, so far as I can learn, because it had met with some disastrous fires and had a few bad accidents. These things happen to corporations. It does not take much, where they are paying a heavy rate of interest, to put them out of business.

That electric company furnished the cities and towns of Centralia, Chehalis, Winlock, Vader, Toledo, Castle Rock, Kelso, Kaloma, Woodland, Vancouver, and other places in southwestern Washington with light, power, street car, and suburban road service, as well as Rainier and many other places in Oregon. It was engaged in great development work; and——

Mr. BOWDLE. Will the gentleman permit a question for the benefit of one who comes from the rain belt? Can you tell us something of what the objectionable features are of conservation that has been thrust on you?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Yes, indeed I can; if I can get the time to do so, but my time is very limited. I will take pleasure in sending to you copies of my speeches on "The sad side of conservation" and "Facts about the forest reserves."

Mr. Chairman, let me make it clear that while other States are slightly affected by this bill, the 11 far western ones within round numbers have one-half of all their vast territory locked up in forest reserves, national monuments, or other reservations—public domain, and yet not public domain—and are the States that have to pay the United States for the privilege of being States.

Practically one-half of each one of these States—my own State of Washington being the least conserved, with only 40 per cent of its area hung up—the half, I say, of 11 Western States are not governed by their governors.

Half of each State is not represented by the Senators and Members of Congress sent here by the voters.

Mr. Chairman, the half that is not governed by the governors gets a sort of hydra-headed government, divided between two members of the Cabinet, subject to change every four years or even oftener. They are subject also to an occasional Executive order, but, as a matter of fact, they are governed by a great bureau. That bureau gets its appropriation from the great Committee on Agriculture. It is proposed in this bill to take away some of the control of that bureau, now in the Agriculture Department, and pass it over to the Interior Department—more battledore and shuttlecock. Fifty or sixty Members of Congress are interested enough to listen to the chairman's explanation of the bill. About 200 Congressmen are out of town, and the rest are willing to let this go, simply because it is "in the cards." What do they care if this legislation bears down on the West, as has other legislation in the past?

Mr. BOWDLE. May I ask the gentleman this, whether these faults have grown up under the reclamation act?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. No; the reclamation act is an entirely different proposition. But, in my opinion, this bill provides a sort of sop for the Reclamation Service. You will find that in section 8—a scheme to turn some of the State's own money through Federal collection back to its irrigation propositions a long time hence.

Mr. RAKER. Will the gentleman yield right there?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Yes.

Mr. RAKER. So that the House may not be misled, the gentleman stated that the Committee on the Public Lands was composed of eastern men. There are 21 men on that committee, and 14 are from Western States.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I beg your pardon. I do not think I made any statement about the Public Lands Committee, or where the members come from. I will say, however, that in view of the earnest resolution of the western governors I can not but feel—and I say this with all due respect to the chairman of the Committee on the Public Lands and all the members of that committee—that this hypnotic and wonderful word "conservation" must have done its work in the committee room.

I want to say here, parenthetically, that, in my opinion, that committee has been heavily overworked. Here are these four bills and other great public bills, to say nothing of very many private-land bills. That committee has had a long, hard siege, and this bill is the result.

I contend that this bill is imperfect. The committee wants to do something and is afraid to do it.

I would like to ask the Members who are interested to read the remarks on conservation made by the chairman of the committee, Hon. SCOTT FERRIS, at the Dry Farming Congress at Tulsa, Okla., in October last year, printed in the RECORD of November 29, 1913, by Hon. CLAUDE WEAVER. There is a splendid statement from the chairman of that committee as to what conservation has done to the West. I stand on what Mr. FERRIS said on that occasion.

Let me refer to section 8 again for a minute. I have not time to read it, but if you will glance at it you will agree that it needs explanation. I asked one member of the committee what section 8 meant. That is the section in regard to the collection of the revenues and covering them back in the Reclamation Service. The reply I received was, "Oh, it is a little matter of bookkeeping; a case of fifty-fifty. See?" Do you see? I do not see. What does it mean?

Seventy-two and six-tenths per cent of the potential water powers of the United States lie within the boundaries of 11 Western States, and 6 of those States, as shown by the printed report, have public-service commissions to regulate them. The other States in that group will soon have commissions, which can handle these things more advantageously, and far better than the United States Government can.

Mr. Chairman, these experts who figure the potential hydroelectric power of the 11 Western States at 20,000,000 horsepower have missed their guesses by thousands upon thousands. Mere dope. Dream-book stuff, worth while only to keep the wheels in the Government Printing Office and in the heads of the library theorists going around.

The State of Washington, according to these hearings, page 651, has 2,825,000 horsepower running to waste, which it is proposed to capture by this bill. You may capture it, but you can not guarantee capital to finance it or any part of it. When you consider that the experts have allowed us nearly 3,000,000 horsepower, do you not think they have drawn it a little fine to limit the rancher to 25 horsepower? He can use his little 25 horsepower for his sawmill or his dairy. He can use his 25 horsepower, but the other millions of horsepower will go to waste until some fellow comes along, with millions of money loose in his pocket which he wishes to expend in the development of gigantic horsepower, under such restrictions as this bill proposes.

Now, if you know what 10,000 horsepower means—if you know that in 1912 our State of Washington had, in plants of 1,000 horsepower or over, developed 300,510 horsepower, you will gain some idea of the worthlessness of these gigantic figures in these statistics. "Millions, billions, or trillions, it is all the same," as I once heard one of our famous Washington statesmen say in regard to the tariff. He is still a statesman of great ability and prominence, but now a resident of Illinois. Millions, billions, or trillions, it is all the same when you are writing a conservation dream book.

I said that my State had hydroelectric horsepower developed and used to the amount of 300,510. Massachusetts, a great manufacturing State, has 129,589, or much less than one-half. Why talk about 20,000,000 unused in the far West? Why not talk about some money with which to make it usable. Investors on the public domain must pay toll to the Government and then compete against the great amount of power which we now have working and which we sell as low as one-fourth cent per kilowatt hour. Can it be much cheaper?

Let us quit sitting up nights thinking about 20,000,000 horsepower in the 11 Western States and get down to figures one can think about seriously and——

Mr. CLINE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Yes.

Mr. CLINE. Do I understand it to be the gentleman's position that the State governments have the exclusive and absolute power and control over the waterways of the several States?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Yes; within the States.

Mr. CLINE. No matter whether they are on Government land or not, so long as they are nonnavigable rivers?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Yes. Every western man knows that you must interest capital, including local bankers, in such projects when they are undertaken, and——

Mr. CLINE. I was trying to get the gentleman's proposition as to where the jurisdiction lies with reference to the control of these water powers.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. The States were given the rights in the acts which organized them. Of course, my most serious objection is that this bill provides for the collection of money for the United States Government from what these Western States expected to be their own resources with which to build up their States and from which they expected to obtain revenue by taxation.

Mr. CLINE. If the authority is exclusive in the mountain States—and I assume that arises out of the theory of prior appropriation, does it not—then where does the Federal Government gets its right and power to dictate upon what terms it shall be used?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I wish I knew; and I wish I knew where the army of map makers, investigators, special agents, rangers, experts, and others who run all over western country get their power.

Mr. CLINE. It is the gentleman's theory, is it not, that the State itself, without any regard to the Federal Government, should develop this water power?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. The States should control the development of it. We have seen bureaucracy work out in the Forest Service. We were promised moneys which we never got, and will not get in this generation. We are told now that it will take at least 30 years to work some practical forestry scheme, and we hate to see anything of that kind coming in reference to these millions of horsepower.

The report, No. 842, to accompany this bill consists of 13 pages for the enlightenment of Members who have not time to read the hearings or pay any attention to the debate, and contains this illuminating paragraph:

The report of the Commissioner of Corporations for March, 1912, shows that at that time we had a possible 25,000,000-horsepower capacity capable of economic development by water power, whereas we had only 6,000,000 horsepower actually developed. According to this estimate, if we exercised proper diligence and economy we should have 19,000,000 horsepower per year more than we now have. Allowing 15 tons of coal for the development of one horsepower a year, the failure to develop our available hydroelectric energy would represent the unnecessary handling and consumption of 285,000,000 tons of coal per year, if the hydroelectric energy could be distributed over the whole country where needed, which, of course, is not quite practicable.

Not quite practicable! I suppose some one thinks that under the limitations of this bill we can find the millions necessary to develop the 20,000,000 of potential hydroelectric current out our way, conduct it along high-tension wires along a privately owned right of way for 2,000 miles for the purpose of running a churn in Oklahoma.

The State of Washington is somewhat interested in this bill, inasmuch as that State, at the time the report of the Commissioner of Corporations was issued in 1912, shows us to be third in rank of hydroelectric power, being exceeded only by New York and California.

Mr. Chairman, in the State of Washington we are supposed to have nearly 3,000,000 horsepower in the forest reserves. We know something about conservation. We have had some experience, and here in these 772 pages of hearings there has been placed by some hocus-pocus a little table that shows why we are a little squeamish when a conservation bill comes up. The Forest Service is allowed under the Agricultural bill to spend 10 per cent of the sales of Federal timber in the State for the construction of roads in the reserves.

Under that law there has been built up to December, 1913, in the eight great forest reserves of the State of Washington, road mileage of the following stupendous figures:

	Miles.
District No. 1	1.50
District No. 6	11.80
Total	13.30

Gentlemen, that is going some. There are 11,660,660 acres of forest reserves in Washington—eight reserves in all—and under the 10 per cent system the United States Government has built 13 miles of road, or a little more than a mile per million acres.

Ten per cent! That is what was promised to those people out there to make them feel good and be patient a little while longer.

The shelves of the Library of Congress are piled up with books on conservation, and in one of those books a few years ago Mr. Gifford Pinchot, the great conservation expert, gave his estimate of all the standing timber in the United States; and a few years later, without making the slightest allowance for what had been cut, he increased his estimate a thousand million feet. Think of it—a thousand million feet! That is exactly the way these tables go when you get down to brass tacks on them.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Mr. Chairman, will my colleague yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Washington yield to his colleague?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I yield.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. On that point I might state to my colleague that when I was first elected as a Member of Congress there was more standing timber in what is now the first district of the State of Washington—the old district that I now represent—more standing timber in that district than the forestry experts estimated in the whole United States.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Yes; and in my own county—in the one-half of it which lies outside the forest reserve—there is more timber than can be cut in 125 years at the present rate of cutting.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman again yield to me?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Certainly.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. The gentleman spoke about it taking 125 years at the present rate to cut the timber in his own county. I think the gentleman ought to add that the timber there will reproduce itself in half that time.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Yes; and the timber is not being sold and can not be sold. We see conservation employees, who are paid by the great timber interests that have the greatest interest in the conservation propaganda, keeping up the agitation.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Before the gentleman leaves the matter of the Forest Service and the estimate of timber, I would like to call his attention to what he probably remembers very well, that an estimate was given by the so-called conservationists in the Forest Service 25 years ago, in which they estimated the standing timber at one-half less than they estimate it now.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. FERRIS. Will the gentleman from Washington yield a little more of his time? We are still considerably ahead in the use of time.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I should like one minute more.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I yield one minute to the gentleman from Washington.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I am going to leave this small map, taken from the report, where Members can see it, and those who are really interested can see from the facts that the State of Washington now is the third user of developed horsepower. In their order, I believe the States are California, New York, and Washington. Members can see from that why we are especially interested, from the fact that we have already great developed horsepower.

Mr. BOWDLE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. With pleasure.

Mr. BOWDLE. I understand the gentleman approves of the statement of his colleague [Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington] that it will take 125 years to remove the timber from his Commonwealth?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. That is my statement—not my Commonwealth, but in one-half the county in which I live.

Mr. BOWDLE. Does not the gentleman understand that the East has been so far stripped of its timber now that the first fleet to come through the Panama Canal will be a fleet bringing timber to the East from the gentleman's own State?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. I hope you will be able to discover something of that kind. We have not.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I hope the statement of the gentleman from Ohio will come true.

Gentlemen, I thank you for your attention. [Applause.]

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLY].

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, the avowed purpose of this bill is to prevent private monopoly of water power. The monopoly of such power is dangerous and injurious to the public, because it would give those holding it the power to tax every industry which is or which will be dependent upon hydroelectric power. That power in private hands would mean the highest price possible and would in turn enter into the cost of producing the commodities necessary to the existence and comfort of American citizens.

In other words, the cost of living is the real issue underlying this measure, just as it is of every other economic question before this country. The cost of living has wrought revolutions in American history, and it may cause others in the future. The Revolution through which this Nation was founded was due to the attempt of George III to add to the cost of living in the Colonies. It brought about a political revolution in 1912, when the people commissioned a new administration and party to make war on the system of exploitation that had meant excessive prices for the necessaries of life.

In obedience to that commission the party in power has undertaken certain reforms. The revision of the tariff, the income tax, and other measures were calculated to shear some of the power from those who, through special privileges, preyed upon the people. But no tariff revision or income tax will prevent the pillage of dollar brigands as long as they have power to corner the food supplies of the Nation and manipulate their values in arbitrary fashion.

Year after year there have been exposures of the outrages of these insolently confident powers. Their slimy trail has been seen in political, financial, industrial, and social wrongs. Still, in spite of outbursts of public indignation, they have continued their course of exploitation and despoliation until the latest and most brazen disregard of right and decency and exhibition of despotic power—that of creating practically a food famine in the midst of crops greater than the world has ever seen.

Since the first breath of the European war, the prices of foodstuffs have been mounting skyward. With every natural reason why they should be lower, since the supply was abundant, with no chance for exportation, prices were sent soaring by artificial methods until they have reached a point which means an almost unbearable tax upon every necessary of life.

I have taken the list of 15 articles declared by the Bureau of Industrial Statistics to be the principal foodstuffs of the average American family. This list includes steak, rib roast, pork chops, bacon, ham, lard, flour, corn meal, eggs, butter, potatoes, sugar, and milk. The market quotations on these articles in a dozen large cities of the country show that there has been an average increase in price amounting to 22 per cent. Such an increase is wholly unjustified, but it has been planned and carried ont in systematic manner. Here is a statement from the Pittsburgh Leader of August 12 which is typical:

In Pittsburgh market yesterday the agents of beef houses and packers went among the retailers, calling the butchers aside and telling them prices must go up higher to-day. It is only fair to the retailers to say that they are as angered over the situation as the consumers. However, the retailer has no recourse; he must boost along with the food barons and the people must pay the freight.

"Boiled hams are up 3 cents a pound," said one agent.

"Do they feed the European armies boiled hams?" asked a retailer.

"Why don't they raise the price of sweetbreads, frog legs, pate de foie gras, and ice cream because of the war?" asked another.

With war 3,000 miles away and with an oversupply of foodstuffs on hand, prices have been skyrocketed to such a point that a continuance at the same rate would mean a depopulating famine within 30 days. Every newspaper tells the same shameful story, and I have received scores of letters from constituents telling of the unwarranted advances in prices of articles of food, alleged to be due to the war across the globe.

That food cornerers have the effrontery to do any injustice that will serve their rapacity, is clearly proven by the history of the past 10 years. That they have the power to-day, in such a time as this, is to the everlasting shame of the Nation. To end such power now and for all time is the sacred duty of every American citizen and every representative of the people.

Wherein lies the power to levy tribute upon every table in this land as has been done within the past two weeks? To my mind it rests upon monopoly and gambling in foodstuffs. The sure test of monopoly is the power to fix prices, and that power is held by the great packing interests of America. Through vast corporations, working together like clockwork, they control the supply of meat products. They have immense storage houses, in which they keep their products indefinitely, letting them out at such times and in such quantities as will maintain the top prices. At the first signal of European war they began hoarding meat in storage. They forced the prices up and up, building on the knowledge that the war would, some time in the future, mean a great demand, which would enable them to exact extortionate prices abroad.

Because of a perfect understanding and unity of greedy interest, these great packing companies have the power to control the market. Through their storage facilities they perfect their hunger hold upon the people, compelling the payment of excessive prices.

That is one element in the situation. The other is the gambling in foodstuffs on the Chicago Board of Trade and at other grain and produce exchanges.

If any Member of Congress doubts the effect of this gambling on prices, I hope he will read the hearings before the Rules Committee on the Manahan resolution asking for an investigation of these exchanges. They are worthy of careful reading and study. There appeared before the committee members of the Chicago Board of Trade and other grain exchanges, as well as representatives of the great grain growers of the country. I attended those hearings and was convinced, as I believe any fair-minded man who reads the hearings will be convinced, that these great centers of gambling are injurious to the best interest of every American. They are worse than private gambling hells, for these latter affect only the few who engage in it, but gambling in foodstuffs affects every man, woman, and child. The average man does not speculate on the exchanges and knows nothing about it, but he feels the result when flour goes up $1.60 a barrel, as it has within 10 days.

Samuel Greeley, of Chicago, a member of the board of trade of that city for 28 years, testified to some interesting facts before the Rules Committee. He stated that the gambling in wheat on the exchange amounts to more every day than is received in Chicago in a year's time. In other words, in a year between seven and eight billion bushels of wheat are bought and sold on the Chicago exchange, while only 25,000,000 bushels of wheat are brought to the city. The buying and selling of futures at this one exchange amounts to ten times the entire yield of wheat in the United States.

Mr. Greeley further said:

The crops of this country, the aggregate of the wheat, corn, and oats, is about 5,000,000 bushels annually, and every cent per bushel fluctuation in the market value of grain on the Chicago Board of Trade sets the price in this country either up or down $50,000,000. Every one-eighth of a cent per bushel fluctuation in the price of grain futures created by the Chicago Board of Trade creates a difference in the values of grain of this country of over $6,000,000.

If that statement be true—and it was not denied by officers of the board of trade who followed Mr. Greeley at the hearings—what has been the fluctuation in prices caused by these gambling price makers within the past few days?

I have in my hand copies of the Chicago Tribune, a paper recognized as accurate in all its statements. In the Tribune of July 29 I find the following:

GRAIN TRADE IN A TURMOIL—AUSTRIAN WAR CAUSES PANIC IN WHEAT PIT—PRICES UP 5 TO 9½ CENTS—LAST VALUES HIGHEST.

The wheat market was of the wildest description possible yesterday, and prices wound up at levels which made the quotations of the previous day ridiculously cheap. At the close values were 8½ to 9½ cents higher, the most sensational advances on general market conditions in many years. Except when there has been manipulation in some one month or another, such fluctuations as were witnessed have been seldom seen.

The upward trend did not end there, but continued. In the Tribune of August 3 I note the following:

GRAIN MARKETS MAKE HISTORY—WAR SCARE CAUSES SENSATIONAL PRICE UPTURN—WHEAT MART ON THE RAMPAGE—CHECKS EXPORT TRADE.

Last week will go down in grain-trade history as one of the most memorable ever known. The outbreak of war in Europe, while not unheralded, was unexpected, and for a time panic conditions prevailed, with all other news considerations swept aside as prices advanced to levels undreamed of a few days ago.

That is the system in operation. Prices have been manipulated upward until a fluctuation of 15 cents has been made. Taking that as a basis for computation, it is probable that these price makers by gambling have changed values to the amount of more than half a billion of dollars within 10 days.

The law of supply and demand has had nothing to do with this remarkable fluctuation in price. The crops are the greatest ever produced in the country, and the United States has food for all the world. We could export 200,000,000 bushels of our wheat without a legitimate advance of a cent a bushel. It is a gambling proposition pure and simple.

Brokers, representing a combination of interests, go upon the floor of the exchange and offer to sell wheat which they do not have or expect to have. Others offer to buy at the date fixed, betting on the market price at that date. No wheat exchanges hands, but the manipulation forces the price up or down, and the price at closing of exchange becomes the market price, and is telegraphed to the world through special telegraph service. This price becomes the basis of business everywhere.

When certain great combinations, controlling warehouses, transportation facilities, elevators, and so forth, manipulate the market by fake buying and selling at constantly increasing prices, they may fix a fictitious value, far above real value, and reap a rich harvest through their rapacity, although their stealings come from the defenseless public.

Now, the farmer does not get the benefit of these gambler-made prices. He is as helpless as the laborer in the city who buys a loaf of bread at the grocery. The system has safeguarded that by absolute control of warehouses, elevators, and transportation facilities. Mr. Greeley, in testifying to this condition, said, page 31 of the hearings:

I make the statement, without fear of contradiction, that the ownership of public warehouses in the city of Chicago by a combination of men, acting in concert—or, at least, on similar lines—that four men, acting in harmony, trading in futures, selling quantities of futures day by day, do more at the present time—and for years during the course of our markets have done more—to reduce the price on the farm than all the concerted actions of the world taken together, outside of panics and severe crop-damage reports.

Now, who are these four men whose influence regulates the price of the grain to the world, to both producer and consumer. One of them is J. Ogden Armour, head of the great packing interest, which has a hunger hold upon the people through beef products. The Armour Grain Co. controls public warehouses with a capacity of 7,000,000 bushels and private elevators with a capacity of 4,700,000 bushels. Five concerns control every public elevator except one and private elevators with a capacity of 13,600,000 bushels.

Representatives of these concerns fix the price which is to be paid to farmers at the elevators. Mr. Marcy, manager of the country line elevators for the Armour company, testified before the Interstate Commerce Commission some time ago. He was asked:

How is the price determined which will be paid by your country elevators?

He answered:

By myself largely. I make up the prices at the close of 'change for our bids and everything.

Mr. Williams, of Madrid, Iowa, owner of an independent elevator at that place, in sworn testimony before the Interstate Commerce Commission declared that he had been requested by the general freight agent of the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Railroad to go to Chicago to meet Mr. Marcy in the Armour company's office. The purpose of the meeting was to arrange the prices to be paid the farmers of Madrid and adjacent territory and to divide the business at that point.

It is impossible to give all the ramifications of this throttling control of monopolists and gamblers upon the food supplies of the country. It is a system that robs both producer and consumer and subjects all the people to a tribute levied by unbridled rapacity. It means that the prices of the necessaries of life are fixed by a system of chalk marks in great gambling centers. It means that the law of supply and demand, which is rigorous enough to most Americans, has been supplanted in price making by the decree of cold-blooded conspirators.

There are many to deny my conclusions, but no one should deny that it is time to learn the truth. The advancing of prices on articles of food in such flagrantly unjust fashion as has been seen in the past 10 days should compel action. I have introduced the following resolution with that purpose in view:

Resolved, That the Secretary of Commerce be, and he is hereby, requested to furnish the House of Representatives information as to whether the prices of articles of food necessary to the health and well-being of the American people have been arbitrarily advanced in the home markets on the pretext that the high prices of such articles are the result of the European war.

Second. Whether the manipulation of values by speculators on the Chicago Board of Trade and elsewhere is resulting in unjust and unwarranted advances in the prices of foodstuffs, in spite of record-breaking crops in this country and the fact that there has been little or no exportation of food supplies to the countries at war in Europe.

I urge that such action be taken at once, either by Congress or Executive authority. The challenge thrown down by these traitors to the common good must be taken up at once, before long-continued misery and privation have resulted. The cost of living under such circumstances as these is a fuse, and it is burning dangerously near the explosive. If gamblers and food monopolists have the power to raise prices of the necessaries of life 22 per cent in 10 days, they have a power which threatens the safety of the Nation. It is time to shear them of such power, even if the grain exchanges and produce exchanges should be forced to follow the wake of their sister institutions, the Louisiana Lottery and race-track gambling.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. Chairman, I yield 20 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN].

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, in a general way I am in favor of the provisions of this bill, although I do not find that I can vote for it unless it is amended in some particulars so that we can know what it means. The first provision of the bill to which I direct attention is authority to the Secretary of the Interior to lease "any part of the lands and other property of the United States" for the term of 50 years for hydroelectric purposes. In other words, if the Government of the United States has constructed locks and dams anywhere upon a river for purposes of navigation, this bill gives to the Secretary of the Interior authority to lease any of the land or property owned by the United States. I see the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. FERRIS] shakes his head. Why does it not do it? That is what it says.

Mr. FERRIS. Because it merely applies to the nonnavigable streams and on the public lands of the United States.

Mr. MANN. Where is that provision in the bill?

Mr. FERRIS. It is all through the bill.

Mr. MANN. Oh, no. I have looked all through the bill, and it is not all through the bill. That is the difficulty about it. It covers all of the land and other property of the United States, and that is the language of the bill. It plainly authorizes the leasing of property, which leasing is also covered in certain cases by the Adamson bill which passed the House the other day; but if this bill should become a law, it gives the same power to the Secretary of the Interior without any action by Congress, and in many cases in the Adamson bill the passage of a special act by Congress is necessary before that law becomes operative.

Then, this bill authorizes the issuance of a temporary permit, either at the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior or else he is required to issue a temporary permit. For what purpose? So that somebody who conceives that somewhere there is a chance for the development of hydroelectric power and who wishes to make an investigation of that matter may do so, to see whether he will apply for a lease under the terms of the bill. He applies for a temporary permit for the purpose of making an investigation, and the Secretary of the Interior under the terms of this bill must issue a temporary permit in order that the applicant may ascertain whether he wishes to develop the power. Under the terms of the bill, if the applicant wishes to develop the power upon the terms named he has a preference right under the lease.

One would suppose that some one would ascertain in reference to the probability of the power and its value at that point before determining the terms upon which the Government would grant a lease. There may be one case where a small amount of power can be developed not of great value, and there may be another case where a very large amount of electric power may be developed and the franchise be of great value. But without any investigation on the part of the Government, without any knowledge of the situation, so far as the Government is concerned, when the temporary permit is granted to authorize somebody else to investigate, the Secretary of the Interior must fix the charges and the rentals in his temporary permit—without having investigated as to the chance for the power or the value of the power, without any knowledge on his part in advance. I read from the bill:

The tenure of the proposed lease and the charges of rent or rentals to be collected thereunder to be specified in said preliminary permit.

I appeal to the gentleman to inform us what that means.

Mr. FERRIS. Will the gentleman permit an answer right now?

Mr. MANN. I am trying to get information.

Mr. FERRIS. The committee studied long over that, and we had the advice of the best engineers and departmental officers in both departments, and their thought was simply this: A going water-power concern does not consist of two hills and flowing water alone, but of water rights, of money to finance it, and all the private property that has to be purchased, all State water rights that have to be taken over, all collected together, and no one can tell whether he can finance a proposition of that kind until he has some time in which to try. The time prescribed—one year—is thought to be the correct time.

Mr. MANN. But the gentleman has not answered the question I asked him.

Mr. FERRIS. I am coming to that.

Mr. MANN. Do not take up too much of my time, for I have not very much.

Mr. FERRIS. I will not. A further objection of the gentleman is that the department knows nothing about what it is going to do. In the first place, all of these powers were withdrawn so that before they were withdrawn the department knew something about them; and, second, they have a going force now that can go and investigate and that does investigate, and they know what the Government's rights are to start with before they issue any lease or permit.

Mr. MANN. All of the information that the department has is public information, secured from the Geological Survey or some other place. The applicant can get all of that information, and he will have the same information in advance that the Government has, but you give the applicant a year's time or more in which to ascertain the possibilities at this point, but the Government has to fix the terms of the rental, the charges for the lease, in advance of any knowledge whatever.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman permit a suggestion?

Mr. MANN. If it is to this point.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. The idea of that is that the people have to know the terms upon which they can get the permit before they can finance the proposition.

Mr. MANN. I know, but that is a matter for the permanent lease. Why do they need to know the terms before they make an investigation?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. It is purely discretionary.

Mr. MANN. It is not discretionary. It is a chance to permit a wildcat adventurer to obtain terms in advance for sale. That is what it is. I do not suppose that was the thought in the mind of the committee, but that is what it amounts to. It is the greatest chance for preference and fraud that I have seen in a bill in many years. Here is Tom, Dick, or Harry, who comes in, and he thinks there is a chance for the development of water power at some place. He does not know anything about it, and neither does the Government—not in detail. He applies for a temporary permit, and the Secretary of the Interior, in his temporary permit for the purpose of making an investigation, is required to fix the term of the lease and regulate and fix the charges and rentals. Well, the man who makes the rentals, if he finds it is soft, he takes the lease, but he is not obliged to do so. If he finds it is not a soft mark, he throws it up, but, having obtained his permit lease, he goes onto the market and sells it to whoever he pleases, to whoever he can get to buy him out. Nobody else can come in; he has the preference right, and he has a permit obtained in advance of any knowledge either on his part or the part of the Government.

Mr. CLINE. Will the gentleman yield for a brief question?

Mr. MANN. I will.

Mr. CLINE. Are these rates to be uniform?

Mr. MANN. No; they are not to be uniform.

Mr. RAKER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. For information, not for a speech.

Mr. RAKER. In reference to the question of regulation. Is it not a fact under the bill this permittee can not sell if he wants to without the permission of the Secretary of the Interior?

Mr. MANN. Oh, that is true.

Mr. RAKER. That being a fact, how can he speculate?

Mr. MANN. Of course he can go to any Secretary and he can speculate as far as that is concerned even without selling. How is it possible for a Secretary of the Interior in advance, without investigation on his part, to determine what length of lease ought to be granted or what rentals should be charged?

Mr. RAKER. Will the gentleman yield for a question there?

Mr. MANN. I will yield for an answer to that question.

Mr. RAKER. I will answer it in this way, that the testimony shows that on some of these plants they have spent almost a million dollars to determine whether or not to proceed. Now, you would not want to allow the permittee to be in a position that some third party could come in and, as it were, kiss him off the slate.

Mr. MANN. I was asking a direct question. Here are vast water powers throughout the United States. No one knows, the Government has not investigated, but they have been withdrawn from the public domain on the theory that they present possible water power. No one knows the possibility at those places. No investigation has been made as to that, and yet you propose to have the Secretary of the Interior, without investigation, say in advance that a man may speculate in a thing. He does not have to take it if he does not want to. You give him the right without investigating it, and the Government is bound without any investigation. If he goes in, he can take it, but he does not have to take it. I do not see anything in such a proposition. Then I am unable to understand what is meant exactly by sections 3 and 9. Section 3 provides that where any power transmitted is in two or more States that the Secretary of the Interior shall control the charges. Section 9 provides that where the power is not wholly within a State—and I use the term "public-utilities commission"—the Secretary of the Interior shall control the charges, excluding by inference the power of the Secretary of the Interior in those States which have public-utilities commissions. I think that was the design of the bill. Well, there is water power located in a State usually on those streams where this applies which will not be navigable waters and not be boundary waters between States. Usually the power will be developed in the State. Well, suppose, for instance, the power is developed by a dam in a State which has a public-utility commission? Who has control over the charges, the Secretary of the Interior or the public-utilities commission?

Mr. FERRIS. If the gentleman will permit me to answer, the intention of the bill is to the section referred to where the power is generated and used within a State, wholly an intrastate matter, the local public-utilities commission have control.

Mr. MANN. I know, but I was asking a reasonable question.

Mr. FERRIS. And I was trying to answer the gentleman.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman perhaps did not quite understand it.

Mr. FERRIS. Perhaps not.

Mr. MANN. Suppose a dam is constructed wholly within a State for the generation of hydroelectric power and that State has a public-utilities commission; does the Secretary of the Interior control the charges or does the public-utilities commission?

Mr. FERRIS. The public-utilities commission.

Mr. MANN. Suppose in the course of time they run a line out of the State carrying electricity; then who controls?

Mr. FERRIS. The State loses jurisdiction, and the Secretary of the Interior performs a function similar to that of the Interstate Commerce Commission in fixing the rate.

Mr. MANN. Then, to-day it is under the Secretary of the Interior and to-morrow it is under the public-utilities commission, or to-day it is under the public-utilities commission, which fixes the rate, and to-morrow it is not; or, in other words, if the company finds it is to their advantage to deal with the public-utilities commission they may suspend a line, or if they find it to their advantage to deal with the Secretary of the Interior they may extend the line across the State?

Mr. FERRIS. The principle is identical with that of a railroad. The gentleman knows as to interstate railroads the Interstate Commerce Commission applies, and when it is intrastate the State commission applies, so there is no difference.

Mr. MANN. No; the gentleman is mistaken about that. The Interstate Commerce Commission only has control over roads between the States——

Mr. FERRIS. That is true.

Mr. MANN. And this takes away the power of the secretary of the public-utilities commission in a State over the transfer of a power in a State the moment the company runs a line beyond the border of the State.

Mr. FERRIS. Does the gentleman think water powers ought to be without any regulation at all?

Mr. MANN. I do not. I believe they ought to be properly regulated.

Mr. FERRIS. The gentleman is arguing that fact.

Mr. MANN. I beg the gentleman's pardon; I am not arguing that question at all. I believe in regulation, but not having it so that no one can tell whether it should be regulated by the Secretary of the Interior or by a commission; neither am I in favor of leaving it so that by the extension of a few miles of line the control can be transferred from the Secretary of the Interior to a public-utilities commission or vice versa, as may suit best their proposition. It ought to be definite one way or the other.

Mr. FERRIS. How does that differ with railroads crossing State lines?

Mr. MANN. I will tell the gentleman how it differs. It is absolutely different. This bill gives to the Secretary of the Interior, wherever there is any line that crosses the State, full control over all the rates fixed by the company, whether they are interstate or intrastate, but the interstate-commerce law gives to the Interstate Commerce Commission only interstate rates and not intrastate rates. Now, the Supreme Court has intimated that we have the power to control intrastate rates, rates wholly within the State, but Congress has never thought for a moment of taking the power away from the State of Texas, say, to control the rates on the railroads between points in the State of Texas. But under this bill, if there should be a water-power company, say, in Texas, that had a thousand miles of transmission wire in Texas, and they would run over the line into Oklahoma 1 mile, the public-utilities commission of Texas would no longer have any control over the rates to be charged by that company. It would be wholly within the power of the Secretary of the Interior. The gentleman admits that. I do not think that is the wise thing to do.

Mr. FERRIS. The committee had not intended to do more with water power than we do in railway rates, but I call to the gentleman's attention the fact that there may be necessity for going even further with the transmission of hydroelectric power; that is more delicate and intricate and difficult to ascertain, when they are doing an interstate business, how much interstate business they are doing, and so forth, than it is to check up freight taken from one State or another. That is a question for debate.

Mr. MANN. That is what I am doing. I am debating it.

Mr. FERRIS. I meant it is a question to think about. I did not mean to cast any reflection on the gentleman.

Mr. FERGUSSON. Can the gentleman point out the language there which makes the control of the Secretary of the Interior different in the case of the water user from what the railroad commission has in controlling interstate and intrastate commerce?

Mr. MANN. I have pointed it out. All the gentleman needs to do is to read section 3. It is perfectly plain.

Mr. FERGUSSON. I do not understand it.

Mr. MANN. There is no doubt about the meaning of it.

Mr. RAKER. I want to call the gentleman's attention to this language on page 4, where it says:

> Is hereby conferred upon the Secretary of the Interior or committed to such body as may be provided by Federal statute.

The committee realize that there is considerable difficulty in this, and I hope some time in the future there will be somebody authorized to handle this matter so that it would not be in the control of one man.

Mr. MANN. I think that alternative provision in the bill is a very good one. We would have the power through commission to maintain these rates whether mentioned in the bill or not. I think the utility commission in the States where they have commissions that regulate rates ought to have some control over the rates within their States. Under the terms of this bill, if a company furnishes power or electric power for light in a city, the Secretary of the Interior has control of the charges which the company may make in a municipality for light, whereas under the public-utility laws the public-utility commission of the State would have power, and in my judgment have it properly, because it has to regulate the power of the cities all over the State, whereas this may be only one city out of a good many in the State.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] has expired.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER].

[Mr. RAKER addressed the committee. See Appendix.]

Mr. FERRIS. Will the gentleman from Washington [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] yield some time?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I yield to the gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN] five minutes.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, I do not doubt that the committee believes this bill will do a world of good. It is a great improvement on the existing law which has handicapped the development of hydroelectric power, especially in the West. Personally I doubt, however, that the proposed bill will bring into being a single new hydroelectric power plant. The report of the Committee on the Public Lands on this bill itself confesses that in Montana the Montana Power Co. owns 97 per cent of the developed water power in that State and controls nearly as much undeveloped water power as it now has developed. Most of that power was developed at a time when the conservation question had not been taken up by Congress. The men who invested their money in that enterprise got their power sites without any strings attached to them. They are owners of those sites in fee simple, under patents obtained from this Government. They have been able to sell, and are now selling, power without any opposition from any competing company. They have practically a monopoly on the sale and delivery of hydroelectric power. The same is true in nearly every Western State. Take the State of California, for instance. It was in that State that long-distance power transmission was developed. Electric power was generated in the Sierra Nevada Mountains, or the foothills of the Sierras, and carried a distance of 190 miles to the coast cities where it was sold. A great many people have an idea that there are enormous fortunes made by these power companies. Probably some of them have made, and are still making, large returns on the amounts invested. But I know as a positive fact that there are several companies in California that were in existence 10 or 15 years before they were able to declare a single dividend.

I suppose the same is true in other sections of the West. To my mind the legislation for the regulation of these hydroelectric companies should be of the most liberal character. A company should be allowed to start its operations with as few restrictions as possible. I believe they should be regulated; but to tie them up with all kinds of rules and regulations made by the Secretary of the Interior will simply result in failure, so far as the formation of new enterprises is concerned.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield to me right there?

Mr. KAHN. In a moment. The committee admit the law of February 15, 1901, is a failure, and therefore they have brought in this bill in the hope that new enterprises will be started. I now yield to my colleague.

Mr. RAKER. I think that the gentleman has practically answered the question that I was about to put to him.

Mr. KAHN. No new enterprises to speak of were started under that law. And yet the ultraconservationists believed they had achieved a great triumph for their cause when it was enacted in 1901. It simply resulted in the intrenchment of monopoly. We of the West, familiar with conditions out there, did not at any time take any stock in the legislation. We felt it would be a failure, and now the Committee on the Public Lands concedes it to be a failure. This present proposed legislation is intended to ease up the situation, but everyone who knows anything about the water-power problem in the West knows that it is practically impossible for a new concern to compete with an existing concern, if the new concern at the very outset is compelled to pay into the Treasury of the United States certain sums of money for its right of way and its privileges, which the companies already in existence do not have to pay. It can hardly be otherwise.

The existing hydroelectric power companies have in almost every instance a perpetual franchise. They own the power sites outright. They are not hampered by leases and rules and regulations formulated by the Secretary of the Interior. They do not have to pay a single cent into the Treasury of the United States on account of some privilege or permission contained in a lease limited to 50 years. They are in a position to cut the price of power so low that a new competing company, hampered by rules and regulations of the Interior Department and compelled to pay large sums into the United States Treasury for its lease and privileges, would quickly become bankrupt in its efforts to compete. It seems to me that must be self-evident to every Member of this House. It is simply common sense. It takes considerable capital to organize, construct, equip, and operate one of these companies. Does anyone seriously believe that men of means will invest large sums where the risks are so great? I for one can not bring myself to believe anything of the kind.

In my humble judgment the legislation that should be enacted in regard to water-power development should be liberal. It should not be hedged around with all kinds of conditions. There should be a provision to prevent combinations for the purpose of fixing the selling price of hydroelectric power with companies already established or companies subsequently organized. There should be a provision against limiting the output of power by agreement with other companies. There should be a provision against agreements with other companies as to the area to be served by the new company. Violations of these provisions ought to work a forfeiture of the grant. But I doubt the wisdom of hampering proposed new enterprises by compelling the latter to pay into the Treasury of the United States sums of money that will be a burden to those new enterprises which the existing companies will escape.

Mr. Chairman, what we need in the West is development. There are unlimited opportunities in the great States of Colorado, Wyoming, Utah, Montana, Idaho, Washington, Oregon, Nevada, Arizona, New Mexico, and my own State of California for the profitable investment of capital. It is considered the proper thing in some quarters to rail at the pioneers whose enterprise and capital and courage brought into existence some of the hydroelectric companies that are operating in the West.

I believe the men who conceived them, who put their money into them and took a gambler's chance on their proving successful, ought to be commended. In most of the Western States laws have been enacted which regulate the business of the companies. That is proper. None of them can object to honest regulation. And in that respect we have made considerable advance over the hysteria about conservation that swept over the country 8 or 10 years ago.

Why, Mr. Chairman, when the doctrine of conservation of the natural resources of this country was first enunciated it was hailed with such acclaim one was almost led to believe that a new gospel had been proclaimed. As a matter of fact, conservation in some form or another has always challenged the attention of mankind. The Hebrews had such a high regard for trees that they were forbidden to cut them down even in the land of their enemies. And we find in the Book of Deuteronomy, xx, 19, this injunction of the Lawgiver: "When thou shalt besiege a city a long time, in making war against it to take it, thou shalt not destroy the trees thereof by forcing an ax against them;" etc.

There has come down to our own times a tradition that centuries ago, when the "bow of yew" was the weapon of offense and defense of the people of England, a wave of "yew tree conservation" swept over that land. It was feared, even in those early days, that if the indiscriminate cutting of the yew trees of England was not prevented the inhabitants of the British Isles and their descendants would be deprived of their weapons of defense, and they would become in consequence easy victims to the hordes of assailants from the mainland who were constantly fitting out expeditions and attacking the inhabitants of the "tight little island." Of course, the proponents of that kind of conservation could not foresee the invention of gunpowder and our modern weapons of war. They groped along in the belief that the bow and arrow were essential to their very existence, and were doubtless just as greatly concerned about the conservation of their yew trees as our modern American conservationists are concerned about our supply of coal.

Many years later—in fact, a few years subsequent to the great naval battle of Trafalgar—an English admiral feared the time was rapidly approaching in the affairs of his country when the supply of oak trees would be exhausted. Oak was absolutely necessary for the construction of frigates and sloops and brigs of war. So this doughty old admiral was wont to equip himself with pocketfuls of acorns and a long cane with a sharp ferrule and start off on a tramp through the country districts. At every few paces he would jab his cane into the soil and quietly drop an acorn into the hole he had made. Thus he hoped to replenish the supply of oak timber then so necessary for the construction of Britannia's fleet of warships. He probably felt he was doing a great work in the cause of conservation. And even in our own country in the early part of the nineteenth century there was a great controversy over the cutting of white-oak trees, on the score that the timber was needed for the American Navy.

Neither the British admiral nor those in the United States who feared an oak-wood famine could foresee the success of the ironclad fighting ships. They did not know and probably would not have been able to realize that inside of threescore years from their day and generation not alone the vessels of the world's navies but also the vessels of the world's merchant marine would be constructed out of iron and steel.

Mr. Chairman, a sensible policy of conservation is a good thing. Willful waste should always be avoided, and, if persisted in, properly punished. If the great natural resources have been placed upon earth as a blessing to man, they should be used by man; but man should use them rationally. Personally, I do not fear what will happen in the future. I remember having read a doggerel many years ago about a "scientific gent" who had made a very careful computation as to when the world would come to an end. His figures were convincing to himself, at any rate. They foretold the end of this mundane sphere in about 95,000,000 years—and he worried about it.

I do not think we need worry about hoarding the great natural resources. If they should ever be in danger of becoming exhausted, Yankee ingenuity will devise some article that will not only be just as good as the original resource, but will be a whole lot better. It has been well said that "necessity is the mother of invention." My friends, whenever the necessity has arisen in this country the American inventor has always been on hand with his little patent to minister to our wants and bring just a little more creature comfort to his admiring countrymen; and, judging by the past, he always will be.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. TAYLOR].

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, at the time this bill was reported to the House by the Committee on the Public Lands, of which I am a member, I voted against the bill and reserved the right to file a minority report and also to oppose it upon the floor of the House when it came up for consideration.

I have not filed a minority report specifically against this bill, but I did file a minority report against the companion bill, H. R. 16136, for the general leasing of coal, oil, and gas lands—report No. 668, part 2. In that minority report I referred at length to this bill and to the leasing principle involved in this legislation.

I regret that these so-called conservation measures are being considered in this manner, under special rule, with only four hours being allowed for general debate, when it has such a tremendous and far-reaching effect upon the western half of this country, and when there is such a comparatively small attendance of the membership of this House.

I want to say at the outset that I do not want to be understood as criticizing the Public Lands Committee or any of my colleagues upon that committee. Moreover, I have the most profound respect for the ability and patriotic motives of the Secretary of the Interior, the Hon. Franklin K. Lane. I not only thoroughly believe in his honesty and ability and utmost good intentions for the upbuilding of the West, but I think he is the greatest Secretary of the Interior this country has had since Colorado's grand old man, Senator Henry M. Teller, held that distinguished and powerful office.

But I feel that I would be recreant to the people of Colorado who have three times honored me by election to this distinguished body, if I did not earnestly protest against this bill and to this class of legislation. I am and always have been opposed to having the resources of the West withheld from private ownership and put into a general Federal leasing system, and I can not reconcile myself to believe that it is for the welfare or development of our Western States to have our internal affairs governed by Washington bureaus. I earnestly feel that that is an un-American policy. We of the West do not like absentee landlordism, and we can not look with favor upon a large part of our country being occupied by renters who pay little or no taxes and who are on a tenant-at-will basis, with comparatively little interest in or allegiance to our State, and I feel that that is what this system of perpetually leasing our resources means to our States. I am therefore opposed to the passage of this bill—

First. Because, in my judgment, it is in violation of the moral, legal, and constitutional rights of the Western States, and is in contravention of the enabling acts by which they were admitted into the Union, and to that extent unconstitutional. I look upon this bill and its companion bill as absolutely and ruthlessly taking from the people of the arid West some of the most sacred property and political rights they have; not only reversing the position of this Government for over a hundred years, but violating the very constitutional guaranties upon which those States were admitted into this Union.

Second. Because if the bill is intended to prevent monopoly and extortion, that can be accomplished by granting a conditional and revocable title, subject to control by the Federal and State public-utility authorities, as to the amount of land that any company can hold, and also as to the rates and service. If we have not sufficient Federal laws for that purpose, let Congress enact them; and if the States have not sufficient laws at this time to safeguard the interests of the public, the Interior Department should continue its present withdrawal and excessive classification policy until such time as the States shall adopt such measures as will effectually protect the people.

Third. If the bill is intended by anyone as a systematic attempt to capitalize and exploit the West and convert into an enormous and permanent Federal revenue-producing proposition practically all of the remaining natural resources upon the public domain in the Western States, then it is an outrageous discrimination against those States and an infamous perversion of the taxing power, and at the same time depriving those States of their legal right of taxation of the property within their borders.

Fourth. Because if there is any one thing that the West is and has always been bitterly opposed to, it is the prevention of settlements and permanent withdrawal and withholding of our lands and other resources from entry and sale, and the capitalization of them into the production of Federal jobs and Federal revenue and bureaucratic rule 2,500 miles away. This system will be no benefit to the National Government, and it will very seriously retard the development of our Western States.

It is only fair to the Public Lands Committee and to the House for me to say that my objection to this bill is to the leasing and royalty system, and not so much to any particular items in the bill. I think the Secretary is given too much power, and other provisions are unwise. But I am not now protesting so much against the details as against the principle. If Congress has determined to enact any water-power leasing law, the terms of this bill are, in the main, not unfair. I earnestly and conscientiously worked with the committee for many weeks to make it as good a bill as possible, and there are many provisions in the bill that I earnestly hope will be retained if the measure is to be enacted into law.

Section 14 of the bill, specifically respecting, protecting, and reserving from the operation of this law all the vested irrigation, domestic, and other water rights of the West, is my individual amendment to the measure as originally introduced, and it is of very far-reaching and vital importance to the West that that section should remain in the bill; otherwise we will have interminable litigation and hardships. The provision authorizing the granting to municipalities all water power without any royalty charge is also my individual amendment, which should by all means be retained, and if it is, it will ultimately be of tremendous benefit to the public generally. And I earnestly supported other beneficial features of the bill, of which I was not the author, and I want to see as good a bill passed as possible, if our country has determined to embark upon this leasing policy. This is not a question of individuals or of political parties. It is a question of the constitutional right as well as the justness and advisability of a governmental policy.

Ninety-five per cent of the over 800,000 population of Colorado have always been against the policy of the Government going into a general business of the perpetual withdrawal and leasing of the natural resources of our State. And my protest is directed not only against this bill and its companion bill providing for the withholding and leasing of all the coal, oil, gas, phosphate, and other substances of our State without recognizing the moral and constitutional rights of the people of those Western States to have this property ultimately and according to law go into private ownership, but against what seems to me a part of an impending program and determination to take all of our resources, including gold and silver and other precious and valuable metals, and capitalize for Federal revenue everything that is now upon or in the public domain.

It is largely true, as stated in the report, that many of the natural resources of the West are to a certain extent in a state of nonuse; that is, they have never been opened up and developed. But we feel that it is not necessary for the Federal Government to go into all of these different kinds of business and adopt a general leasing policy of all of those resources in order to open up and develop the West. If the Government will open them to entry and reserve the right to control the rates and service and guard against monopoly, they will all be developed expeditiously and capital will feel safe in investing.

I am fully aware that a large number of good people throughout the West have become discouraged and sick and tired of the dog-in-the-manger policy that has been pursued in recent years by the Interior Department in relation to water-power development. They want the country developed during this generation, and it is admitted by all concerned that the present policy is an absolute prohibition against any development, and many of our citizens are apparently willing to accept almost anything that gives even a delusive hope of opening up development. Possibly they should not be blamed, because they have evidently come to the conclusion that it is better to fly to the evils that they know not of, rather than further endure those that they have.

There is a very general and widespread desire throughout the West to in some way raise the present unjust and unnecessary governmental embargo on the development of our resources located upon the public domain. The people want to in some way secure the expeditious development and maintenance and operation of our resources under suitable control and regulations in the interest of the general public. Every right-thinking person is in favor of those objects. The question is how best to secure them. The West heartily welcomes any wise regulation as well as any thorough prevention of any monopoly or waste. But for the accomplishment of that we emphatically deny that it is at all necessary or right or fair for the Government to permanently withhold our resources from private ownership, and, in addition, to tax us for the use of them. We have been reared to believe that perpetual bureaucratic control in our States is a flagrant violation of governmental procedure under our theory of government.

No matter how loudly and vigorously and repeatedly it may be proclaimed that these lands "belong to all the people," the fact remains that when those States were admitted into the Union the United States Government entered into a solemn compact with each of them that the lands within their borders should be expeditiously and in an orderly manner disposed of to settlers and be allowed to go into private ownership, to help build and maintain the State government; and Congress has no moral, legal, or constitutional right to repudiate or violate that agreement, much less to wantonly authorize the Secretary of the Interior to impose excise duties upon our development.

It is probably true that existing laws need overhauling. If so, Congress should overhaul them; and in the meantime the West would be wonderfully benefited by a more liberal construction of the existing laws. We have had government by suspicion and Federal agents too long in former years, and that is one of the main reasons why the West has not developed faster.

It is not right or necessary for Congress to put the Western States upon the same basis as the Territory of Alaska in order to assist in their development or to prevent monopoly. If there is a general demand for better laws to encourage development and prevent speculation and monopoly, let us enact them. We of the West want development more than anyone else does, and we will heartily join in the enactment of any reasonable measures that will prevent speculation and monopoly and safeguard the public interests, and prevent extortion and waste. But we deny that it is necessary to adopt a permanent leasing policy, thereby putting ourselves into a perpetual Federal tenantry class, to bring about these most desirable results.

To me these paternalistic and centralizing tendencies appear little short of national bureaucracy run mad. With some people conservation has become a mania. I hope I may be mistaken, but this policy looks to me like a bold trampling upon the principle which lies at the foundation of our republican form of government. It appears to me as a brazen denial of the "equal footing" upon which the Western States entered this Union. American citizens do not take kindly to absentee landlordism. We do not like the idea of perpetual bureaucratic rule. We prefer to be governed by the law and by our own people, instead of by rules and regulations promulgated from the city of Washington, ofttimes by people who have no personal knowledge of our local conditions. We feel that these measures forever fasten upon the people of the West and the resources of our States the bureaucratic grasp of the Federal Government. We know that bureaucracy grows on what it feeds upon. We want the laws intelligently framed, in the light of the welfare of the governed as well as the governing bodies. Let us western people develop the resources in our States under whatever reasonable restrictions you may deem proper, and we will soon become a storehouse of wealth to this Nation.

This law may, as the majority report says, "do with Government property what has been done by the foremost countries of the world," and may be entirely suitable to a monarchy, but I confess that I can not make myself believe that it will ultimately be beneficial in our form of government. I do not relish the idea of Uncle Sam going into 57 varieties of business on our money.

No one can honestly deny the statement that any general scheme for the leasing of any of the public domain practically withdraws those lands from settlement or entry by those who wish to acquire them and make them productive by individual enterprise; and any system which prevents lands or resources from going into private ownership prevents their becoming subject to State and local taxation and relieves them from their just proportion of the maintenance of the State government.

I believe all history will bear me out in the statement that it is not in the interest of the people or the welfare of the Western States to have large bodies of land and valuable resources withheld from taxation and perpetually managed and controlled at long range from the city of Washington; and every step taken by Congress in the direction of withholding from actual settlement and ownership by local citizens tends to the centralization of power and strengthening of the bureaucratic grasp of the Federal Government upon the resources and control of our States.

This bill will affect the welfare of the entire population of the western half of this Republic now and for generations to come. The question is not only as to the effect of these so-called conservation measures upon the present development of our water power, coal, oil, gas, and so forth, but the question is whether or not the welfare of this Republic, and the West in particular, will be benefited by this general program of putting all of our natural resources on a Federal leasehold-royalty basis, and thereby permanently withdraw for all time and withhold them from private ownership and prevent them from going onto the tax rolls, no matter what the object or pretext may be or how laudable the alleged purpose may be. Will the West be benefited by putting a large and permanent and perpetual tax upon our consumers and burden the development of our States for the purpose of building more reclamation projects or for any other purpose?

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Certainly.

Mr. KAHN. In the final analysis does not the gentleman think that these charges which the companies will have to pay under this bill will be footed by the ultimate consumer?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Certainly, the ultimate consumer will foot the bill. It will just add that much more tax, that much more unnecessary burden on the people.

We must not look at this merely for the present, but for the future, and the ultimate welfare of the people of those States in particular and our country in general. Is it wise to put a perpetual and increasing Federal tax upon our development and upon every fireside and citizen of our State; upon every horsepower that is hereafter generated and used by the farmers or anyone else; and upon every ton of coal hereafter mined in our State and used by any of our citizens, even if some of the money is used—which it probably will not be—for the laudable purpose of getting some more money with which to build reclamation projects? Is it a sensible or fair business policy to tax the general consuming public approximately $100 for the sake of giving back to some locality $1? Moreover, is it an equitable or sensible business policy for the Government to withhold all of this enormous wealth forever from private ownership and deprive the States of hundreds of millions of dollars of taxes, which they would derive from it, and give them back in lieu thereof, if it does, a few thousand dollars in reclamation projects?

There is no question in my mind but what this policy is and for some time will be very popular in the East and North and South. Those sections are not affected by it, and the Representatives from those portions of our country honestly believe that they see an opportunity of ultimately getting some money into the Federal Treasury by this program.

They really believe that now, but they will be greatly disappointed. They have the power and the Members in Congress to force this policy upon us of the West, and it looks as though they may possibly do so. But because they have the vote to do it does not make it right or fair, and because they have the power to force this imperialistic, crown-land, bureaucratic policy upon us can not make me welcome it or advocate it when I am profoundly convinced that it is not right and when I believe that it is a high-handed outrage upon us. Do the Members of this House feel that it is fair to authorize the present Secretary of the Interior, or any other Secretary or bureau chief or clerk, to grant 50-year leases on our resources, and to revoke them at will, cancel them, for the violation of any regulation he may make? Think of the enormous power that is being placed in the hands of one man. We have no fear of our present Secretary of the Interior. But Secretaries come and Secretaries go, and who can tell what the conditions in our country will be 20 years or even 10 years from now?

Why this unseemly haste to reverse the entire public domain's history of our country and inflict this burden upon the next generation, and jam it through this Congress with only four hours' debate, when neither of the great political parties have ever indorsed it? It does seem to me that as far-reaching and vital a proposition as this is ought to be considered by all the national parties and the people generally before it is rushed through Congress and put upon us. All political parties in Colorado have uniformly denounced this leasing system, and neither the national Republican nor Democratic Parties have ever given one word of approval of it. The parties indorse conservation, but not leasing. In my judgment this leasing policy is contrary to the principle upon which this Republic was founded—that the Government has no right to embark in a great many kinds of business in competition with its citizens. This dual form of government in the West, which the enactment of these bills will necessarily bring about, is a bad policy, and I prophesy that it will prove one of the most gigantic failures and expensive fiascos that the Government has ever undertaken.

It will be a tremendous success in creating Federal jobs, but no net receipts from these royalties will ever get into the Federal or State treasury. History will repeat itself, and our States will never receive one dollar from this source. But the people will have to bear an enormous burden for its salaries and expenses. The cost of administration will consume it all. It is the most gigantic scheme for the increase of Federal employees and enormously augmenting the power and influence of these bureaus in Washington that this Nation has ever witnessed. The boldness of it is astounding, and the complacency with which it is received is an evil omen for our country.

It is not necessary for honest conservation to have our domestic affairs conducted from Washington. It never was the policy of this Government to engage in business to make money or to provide offices, and conservation ought to include something more exemplary than constantly enhancing the power of these bureaus. It should embrace something more worthy than creating more positions, imposing upon the people additional burdens and additional expenses upon the Federal Treasury.

BILL UNCONSTITUTIONAL.

Every State in this Union has an inherent right to develop the resources within its borders and receive the benefits of that development. That is not only a natural and necessary but a sovereign and constitutional right; and the Federal Government has no constitutional authority to deny or interfere with that right.

These bills, if passed, ought to be declared unconstitutional, because they are in bold and defiant violation and denial of the sovereignty of the Western States. While the United States has full authority to protect its proprietary interest in the public lands, it has no right to exercise local "municipal sovereignty" over those lands, or interfere with their development, or deprive the States of the proceeds of their own natural resources.

The Western States were admitted into the Union upon an equal footing with, and they were guaranteed authority equal in all respects to, that of the original States. Section 3 of Article IV of our Constitution declares that:

> The Congress shall have power to dispose of and make all needful rules and regulations respecting the territory or other property belonging to the United States.

But the section does not stop there. It declares in the same sentence—> and nothing in this Constitution shall be so construed as to prejudice any claims of the United States, or of any particular State.

I can not believe that a system of laws like these leasing bills, which deny the Western States their sovereign authority and deprives them of their control of their own development, and places beyond the reach of the authority and jurisdiction of the body politic of those States their principal resources, the vital and necessary agent of their own social and industrial progress, can be construed otherwise than as prejudicial to the claims of those particular States.

The constitutional right of the Federal Government to make rules and regulations concerning the public lands defines its proprietary right to make rules and regulations for the protection of its proprietary interest in such lands, and its right to ultimately dispose thereof, but conveys and implies no sovereign powers or power to interfere with the development of the resources of the State or to impose unequal or unusual excise charges in any such State, or assume therein any police power or regulation, or authority over any of the inhabitants thereof or the industries therein that it might not exercise under its constitutional grant of powers independently of any public lands.

The people of the West have already suffered so much at the hands of the misstyled conservationists that they are exceedingly apprehensive of the danger of this most bold and far-reaching Federal encroachment upon the public-land traditions of the Nation.

I feel that the West is in honor bound to resist to the utmost of its ability these imperialistic aggressions upon our public-land heritage, which threaten to deprive the West of its population and rightful opportunities. Many of as patriotic citizens as there are in this Republic look upon this leasing policy as the last act in the effort of the East to overthrow all the traditions of our Government affecting the disposition of the public domain and the permanent establishment of bureaucratic control over the western lands and resources, and the forcing of the Western States into subjection to the intense industrialism of the East. The Government has no moral right to hold these lands in perpetuity and lease them. The innumerable natural obstacles in the way of the development of the West are so arduous and almost insurmountable that they require the utmost heroic courage and endurance and persistence to overcome, and I appeal to Congress and to our other governmental officials not to inflict these additional and unjust burdens upon us and our children and our children's children.

The Eastern, Northern, and Southern States do not have to surrender 10 cents a ton for their coal. That coal land had no value until we went there and settled the country and made it valuable. Why should the Government get this unearned increment? This whole leasing system is wrong in every way. It is unwise, impractical, and unprofitable. It is economically and morally unfair, legally unjust, and a grievous and irritating political imposition upon the western people, because, forsooth, they are not sufficiently strong to prevent it. This policy compels us to pay an enormous tribute that will grind into our States a tyranny that will be intolerable. It is utterly unnecessary, and it can not be defended upon any grounds of equity or fair dealing.

To my mind, these leasing bills add insult to injury. They not only deprive us of our constitutional rights and at the same time impose outrageous taxes and royalties upon us, but, in addition, they deny both our honesty and capacity for self-government. These bills in their present form are nothing more nor less than a formal declaration by Congress that the Western States are incompetent and that their acts and purposes are subject to suspicion; that the Government is distrustful of the good faith of the people of the West; that Congress is of the opinion that those States, their citizens and their legislatures, are not competent to control, regulate, and develop in the public interests the resources within their borders.

I can not believe that this House will ever approve of or tolerate any such unprecedented imposition, and if it does I know the United States Senate never will.

The Federal Government might with equal justice, and with no more pointed accusation of incompetency, deprive the Western States of all their other sovereign powers. This leasing system will create on the one hand a dangerously powerful and undemocratic bureaucracy, and on the other hand a servile and brow-beaten tenantry. It will constantly emphasize the assumed superiority of Federal over local government, and progressively, during the passage of years, wear down and render subordinate the structures and effectiveness of the State governments.

These so-called conservation bills are but another large wedge which, reenforced by later measures of similar character now pending and in contemplation, will finally cleave and ultimately disintegrate practically all local authority. I earnestly appeal to and warn my colleagues that this leasing system is an insidious policy that will in the near future rise to plague you. It will accomplish nothing beneficial, but will inflict untold burdens, hardships, and aggravations upon the people, bring about the subjugation of local authority and the centralization of tremendous and unwarranted powers in the Federal Government. If these bills are killed, as I hope they will be, there will then be some fair and suitable constructive legislation enacted for the opening up and developing of the West.

I regret to be compelled to dissent from the opinion of my colleagues on the committee. But I am unable to bring myself into that peculiar quiescence of mind in which I can avoid resenting the imputations that the people of the West are incompetent to wisely administer their internal affairs.

I certainly will never even tacitly admit or believe that any of the Western States can not manage their own development much better than any outsiders can. I will never acquiesce in the surrender of our western sovereignty. I have an abiding conviction that there are enough brains, honesty, and patriotism in the West to wisely regulate and control these public-service corporations; and if there is any question about it in any State at the present time, and until such time as suitable laws shall be enacted, the Federal Government can and should retain control over them; and probably should permanently reserve the right to exercise a supervisory regulation of them whenever the local utility commissions do not perform their duty. But in order to retain such control it is utterly unnecessary to impose a Federal tax upon our development and at the same time prevent the going into private ownership and onto the tax rolls of hundreds of millions of dollars' worth of property. I look upon it as neither right nor necessary but humiliating for Congress to put the Western States upon the same basis as the Territory of Alaska, and thereby force many of our present and a large proportion of our future population into a perpetual Federal tenantry class, under the guise of regulating our development. I repeat that this is not a question of individual or of political parties, but one of governmental policy.

I am not intentionally criticizing anybody. I am merely giving a few reasons why I personally believe that the adoption of this leasing policy is unnecessary, unwise, and unjust to the West.

I look upon it as presaging the leasing of our gold and silver, lead and zinc, and all metalliferous mines, and all our other resources, including scenery and climate.

Bureaucratic control never has been and never will be good for either the people or the property so controlled. I object to the West being exploited as a province or insular possession of the United States, with a permanent system of tenantry fastened upon us. We of the West do not relish carpet-bag government any more than you of the South did. Why are you from below the Mason-Dixon line so soon forgetful of those hardships and so ready to inflict them upon us?

What honest or fair-minded man can justify putting a Federal tax upon the water power of our nonnavigable streams, which cost the Government nothing, and putting no tax on the water power generated by the navigable streams that cost the taxpayers of the entire country hundreds of millions of dollars?

I have not the slightest fear of Secretary Lane individually being unfair. But he can not personally attend to the tens of thousands of matters that this policy will involve, and no one can prophesy what royalties may be imposed by future Secretaries or bureau chiefs or 10,000 clerks and agents. But whatever they are, and no matter how fast or how slow they are increased, they are an unnecessary tax imposed upon the consumers and an unjust burden upon our development. It is a bad economic policy without a redeeming feature. I firmly believe that when these measures are thoroughly understood the public conscience of the Nation will wake up to discover that this wholesale leasing proposition is a gigantic bureaucratic scheme whereby the West is being compelled to barter away its birthright for a mess of Federal pottage, without any assurance of ever getting the pottage—at least during this generation.

Aside from the principle of surrendering our States' constitutional rights and looking at it only from a commercial standpoint, it looks to me too much like taking $20 out of one pocket with the hope of ultimately putting 50 cents back into the other.

I can not believe that these bills will ever be enacted into law. If, however, they are, I confidently predict that history will repeat itself and that these laws will sooner or later be again indignantly repudiated and repealed. But it will be after hundreds of millions of hard-earned dollars have been wrung from the pockets of the common people and consumed in undeserved salaries, needless expenses, and useless waste of our substance. It will be after our resources have been wantonly exploited and the Federal Treasury ruthlessly looted for many years by an army of utterly unnecessary Government employees. I therefore hope that this Sixty-third Congress will avoid that unwarranted burden upon every hamlet and fireside in the West by refusing to pass these most unwise and unjust measures. [Applause.]

The decision of the Supreme Court of the State of California, filed January 20, 1914, In re Deseret Water, Oil & Irrigation Co. v. The State of California, so clearly and forcibly states the legal and constitutional rights of the Western States in relation to the public domain that I will quote from the decision, as follows:

> But on the general argument we think that the true interests of the State are quite the opposite of those declared in the brief of the attorney general. One familiar with the constitutional history of the United States need not be reminded of the jealousy with which, before the adoption of the present Constitution and during the sessions of the Continental Congress and the existence of the Articles of Confederation, the original States, and particularly Virginia, in their cessions of lands to the United States guarded their own rights and limited the powers of the United States over them; until in October, 1780, Congress resolved that the lands which may be ceded to the United States by any particular State shall be disposed of for the common benefit of the United States and be settled and formed into distinct republican States, which shall become members of the Federal Union, and have the same rights to sovereignty, freedom, and independence as the other States.
> The fundamental proposition assented to by the United States upon which these cessions were based was that the public lands within new States, existing or to be created, should be disposed of, sold, for the benefit of the United States, for the reason that the States believed it would be injurious to their sovereign rights that any large areas of land within their boundaries should be permanently beyond their taxing power and control and within the sovereign jurisdiction of another power. Further, it is to be remembered, that all new States were to be admitted to the Union upon terms of exact equality with all other States, and the act of admission of the State of California declared that "the State of California shall be one and is hereby declared to be one of the United States of America and admitted into the Union on an equal footing with the original States in all respects whatever. The people of said State shall never interfere with the primary disposal of the public lands within its limits." In the case of Pollard's Lessee v. Hagan (3 How., 212) the Supreme Court of the United States with great learning discusses these contracts between the several States and the United States and the meaning and force of the constitutional provisions thereafter passed. It is there declared as to the Government lands within such States that the United States never held any municipal sovereignty, jurisdiction, or right of soil in and to their territory, or in and to the territory of any of the new States, excepting the right over them of executing the trust, which trust was to provide for their disposition by cessions or sale. It is further held that every new State comes into the Union upon terms of equality with all other States, and such an equality can not exist if in any one State it exercises sovereign powers over the lands, while in another it has disposed of such lands, or in the execution of its trust must dispose of them. In Coyle v. Smith (221 U. S., 559) these doctrines are reasserted and affirmed, and the power of the United States to pass any law which will create inequality between the States has repeatedly by the Supreme Court of the United States itself been declared to be void and of no effect. (New Orleans v. De Armas, 9 Pet., 224; Groves v. Slaughter, 15 Pet., 449; Illinois Central R. R. v. Illinois, 146 U. S., 387; United States v. McBratney, 104 U. S., 621; Hardin v. Shedd, 190 U. S., 508; United States v. Winans, 198 U. S., 371.)
> We are, of course, not unmindful of the decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States, such as Kansas v. Colorado (206 U. S., 89), and Light v. United States (220 U. S., 523), which declare that within the governmental trust to "dispose" of its public lands vast areas of them within existing States may be taken from the dominion and control of the State and placed in perpetual reserve. Whether inconsistency and hostility exists between this latter line of decisions and that headed by Pollard's Lessee v. Hagan, the Supreme Court itself in due time will declare. But here we desire to point out that while the State of California was admitted as a sovereign State of the Union upon equal terms with all the other States, and while it has been judicially declared that an essential part of that equality is the disposition of the public lands within the State, to the end that the revenues by taxation therefrom and the control over them may be vested in the State, we have in California a withdrawal by the United States from sale and placing in reserves of one-third of the area of the whole State—an area greater than the combined territory of New Hampshire, Vermont, Massachusetts, Connecticut, Rhode Island, New Jersey, and Maryland. Not this alone, but we have in these withdrawals a refusal upon the part of the United States to yield to the State of California control over its natural sources of wealth. Its forests, its mines, its oil-bearing lands, its power sites and possibilities, have been withheld by the United States, which proposes to exercise over them, and is exercising over them, the "municipal sovereignty" which the Supreme Court of the United States in Pollard's Lessee v. Hagan declared not to exist. If at the time of the proposed cession of its lands by Virginia, Congress had declared its intent to be that which it has actually executed in the State of California, little doubt can be entertained as to the answer which Virginia would have made. It is, indeed, a departure from the accepted construction of these constitutional provisions to have it said that the United States may, as here, withdraw from State use one-third of the area of a sovereign State, forever deny to the State the sovereign power of taxation and control over these lands, and develop and exploit them under its own rules and regulations for the enrichment of its own treasury. And so, coming to the specific section of land here under consideration, if it has possibilities of water storage and power development, certainly it is to the interest of the State that these potentialities should be developed in the interest of its citizens and the revenue derived therefrom by rates, tolls, and taxation go into its own treasury, rather than to witness them lying undeveloped and unimproved, or if improved at all, improved for the enrichment of the National Treasury. This is meant to convey no criticism of true conservation of natural resources. But it is a simple declaration of a manifest fact that, in a State such as California, a large part of whose territory and whose natural resources are taken away from State control, the denial of the right of taxation to such lands, the erection of an imperium in imperio, are developments of governmental ideas not dreamed of at the time of the adoption of the Constitution, nor at the time of the decision of Pollard's Lessee v. Hagan. And in the State of California the cause of conservation would not suffer if intrusted to the State itself.

In order that there may be no misunderstanding as to the individual position of the State of Colorado upon this general subject, nor any question as to whether or not I correctly reflect the wishes of my State, I will insert a copy of a joint memorial to President Woodrow Wilson, unanimously adopted by the present Colorado Legislature, the Nineteenth General Assembly, at its regular session—page 655, Session Laws, 1913—which, in my judgment, is not only a fair statement of the rights of the West, but one of the best and most statesman-like documents ever presented to Congress, and I earnestly urge every one of my colleagues in the House to carefully read it, as follows:

House joint memorial 5.

To Hon. Woodrow Wilson, President United States of America, and the Congress of the United States:

Your memorialist, the General Assembly of the State of Colorado, respectfully represent that under the present Federal policy of control of the public domain the following conditions obtain:

1. The people of Colorado are in favor of conservation in the meaning of prevention of waste and monopoly, but are unalterably opposed to it in the definition of preserving our lands and resources in their present state for future generations.

We agree that these natural resources belong to all the people, but this ownership is not now different from what it always has been—namely, subject to the right of the citizen to acquire the same under liberal laws to the extent necessary to satisfactory settlement and the building of permanent homes.

2. It has been charged that the Western States have failed in the past to do their duty in the conservation of these resources, but those who make these charges utterly fail to consider that any unlawful acquisition or waste was committed under Federal laws and on public lands, and that the States, having no control, were powerless to prevent it. They also fail to recognize the fact that the amount of lands unlawfully acquired was a mere trifle compared with that lawfully acquired by bona fide settlers and others.

3. The older States have had, and still have, the benefits arising from private acquisition of all the public lands within their boundaries, receiving revenue therefrom through taxation and otherwise, and it is therefore a great injustice that they should now seek to impose upon the Western States obstructions and burdens with which they themselves did not have to contend.

4. We deny that it is right or advisable for the Federal Government to retain the title to and lease the public lands for any purpose, as the history of the country shows that in 1807 Congress authorized the War Department to lease the lead mines in the territory afterwards embraced in the States of Missouri, Indiana, Illinois, Wisconsin, and Iowa, reserving to the United States a royalty of one-sixth of the product.

This system was vigorously opposed by the residents of the region involved from the very beginning, and after a few years' trial the Missouri Legislature and the governor of Illinois protested against it. Presidents Polk and Fillmore urged its abandonment. The Secretary of War condemned it, saying that the benefit to the Government bore "no just proportion to the injury done to the country—first, by retarding the settlement of the country, and, second, by the demoralizing influence of the system."

Year after year congressional Committees on Public Lands reported against it. One of these reports concluded as follows:

"When the United States accepted the cession of the Northwestern Territory the acceptance was on the express condition and under a pledge to form it into distinct republican States and to admit them as members of the Federal Union, having the same rights of freedom, sovereignty, and independence as the other States. This pledge your committee believes would not be redeemed by merely dividing the surface into States and giving them names, but it includes a pledge to sell the lands, so that they may be settled and thus form States. No other mode of disposing of them can be regarded as a compliance with that pledge."

5. For nearly 40 years this controversy was waged with increasing intensity, until 1846, when an act was passed directing the sale of these lands.

This condemned and discarded policy is now sought to be resurrected, and in pursuance thereof there have been withdrawn forest, coal, oil, phosphate, and power site lands, aggregating in Colorado over 21,000,000 acres, equal to 33 per cent of the total area of the State, together with similar amounts in other Western States, so that in all the area thus withdrawn is greater than the combined area of Maine, New Hampshire, Vermont, Massachusetts, Rhode Island, Connecticut, New York, New Jersey, Delaware, Maryland, Pennsylvania, both Virginias, Ohio, Kentucky, Indiana, and Illinois, and thus nearly 300,000,000 acres are now, and have been for several years, practically out of reach of individual enterprise or taxation for the support of State government. This obstructive policy is a departure from the policy of the past 50 years and in violation of the rights of these States as provided in their enabling acts admitting them into the Union, their constitutions, and the fundamental principles on which the Union of the States is predicated.

The idea that the leasing of the forests and other public lands for grazing purposes to stockmen, reserving to the settler and miner a right to enter them, will give the latter adequate protection is a fallacy, for the reason that it is obvious that such entries will necessarily interfere with the proper handling of stock. Where a stockman has 1,000 acres or more under such a lease and a homesteader should undertake to enter 160 or 320 acres of the best of it, it is a certainty that the stockman would in every way not positively unlawful discourage the settler, unless we credit the stockman with less than ordinary sense of self-protection. And it is equally certain that he would succeed in preventing the entry, even if he had to buy the settler off.

The inevitable result of such leases will be to substantially end homesteading and mining on the public lands.

6. We assert that the States are vested with the right to control the waters within their respective borders—subject only to the right of the Federal Government to protect navigation on those streams that are navigable—to dispose of them to those who will use them for beneficial purposes, and that all returns therefrom, direct or indirect, justly belong to the States and not to the Federal Government.

7. Reclamation of arid lands when undertaken by the United States Government should in all cases recognize the rights of the States to control the waters within their borders, and should also recognize the equitable rights of its water users and other competitive projects and those of private enterprises.

These projects and enterprises should not be made by officers of the Reclamation Service an excuse for the refusal to approve of rights of way and occupancy of lands under private irrigation projects; such delays seriously obstruct private enterprises and the development and improvement of lands belonging to the States, and we ask that any such refusals be revoked.

We further ask that the Reclamation Service take immediate steps looking toward the early completion of all projects now under way within this State, in order that early settlement under these projects may take place.

8. The rapid descent and general character of mountain streams gives such endless opportunities for water plants that any monopoly of the same is physically impossible. Indeed, the idea is growing rapidly that the small power plant is the coming one. When water has served its purpose for one power plant it continues its descent. It is not consumed nor does it vanish. Its volume is as great after as before, and therefore but a little lower down in the mountain another power plant may be constructed, and so on, while the stream shall last.

These delays have seriously obstructed not only these private projects, but have also interferred with the irrigation and improvement of several hundred thousand acres of land belonging to the State of Colorado, and granted under the laws of the United States for the purpose of improvement and sale by the State.

We ask that these unlawful refusals be promptly revoked and further delays forbidden.

9. We recognize that some good has been accomplished by the Forest Service, yet at the same time its cost has been many times greater than its benefits; it has materially hindered the settlement and development of the country, chiefly because of the hard and fast rules made at Washington by chiefs unfamiliar with actual conditions, and administered by subordinates, many of whom are equally unfamiliar with such conditions.

As to the scientific forestry promised, it is only necessary to refer to the reports of the Forester to show that his management in many respects is most unscientific. His reports show that billions of feet of timber in the natural forests are overripe, decaying, and decayed, and are an actual fire menace to the remainder, and ought to be cut. Yet the high prices he asks and the rules and regulations enforced are greatly restricting sales and cutting.

We urge that a committee, congressional or otherwise, be immediately appointed to visit Colorado and investigate the conditions referred to above and report on the same. It seems necessary to have the committee pursue its investigation on the ground, as few of those who suffer by the methods in force would be able to advance the expenses of a trip to Washington. Besides, an actual view of many of these things will disclose features which it would be difficult to make clear by testimony.

10. An unjust discrimination is made between grazing and other agricultural lands. The major portion of this State is composed of what is termed "grazing lands," and grass is the greatest agricultural crop known and the most indispensable. All lands at present chiefly valuable for grazing should be as freely open to entry as are farm lands, but in sufficient quantities to support families. More than three-fourths of our present cultivated area was originally located as pasture, and it was largely through this privilege that our present cultivated area was developed.

There is hardly an acre of grazing land on the plains that will not ultimately become agricultural lands with the development of storage of water and the economical use thereof.

11. Nearly all of our metalliferous lands have been included in the forest reserves, since which time not a single important mining camp has been opened. The unwarranted interference by the Forest Service is largely responsible for the falling off of millions of dollars in the annual metal output. The man who is willing to put his labor and money into the development of a mining claim is the person best fitted to classify the land and should be permitted to acquire it.

We venture the assurance that if 40 years ago the forest reserves had been established, neither Leadville nor Cripple Creek nor a score of other mining camps would have been discovered or developed.

Although our lands are of great variety, they are open to entry for but few purposes and in unsuitable quantities. For instance, a piece of land can not be taken merely for a home.

12. In territorial days Congress gave us the water of our natural streams and confirmed that right in the acceptance of our State constitution. Certain Federal bureaus are trying to take away that right by denying rights of way over the public domain.

The contention of Federal authority, as in the case of the Eagle Dam, for the first storage of water at the lower end of the stream, instead of near the source of supply, would prevent the repeated use of water for power and irrigation upstream, would uselessly deprive large areas of development, and would therefore be contrary to the principle of "the best use" as demonstrated by the experience of more than half a century.

The diversion and use of water when streams are high equalize the flow, furnish a better supply of water during the dry season, and, by lessening floods, save lives and property on the rivers below.

Special agents are permitted to protest against the validity of entries without any knowledge of facts relating thereto. They should be required to make their objections at the time of final proof, that the entryman might face his accusers.

13. The courts should be opened to land disputes, that citizens may be afforded an opportunity to enforce their rights, instead of the system now in vogue of determination through star-chamber proceedings by administrative officers.

14. Under the express terms of the enabling act Colorado was admitted to the Union on an equal footing in all respects whatsoever with the original States. To be on an equal footing, we must have the power to tax the land and other property within the State, for without that power we can not maintain State and local governments and institutions. The present policy of the Federal Government is to place our lands and resources on a revenue basis, paying taxes in the form of royalties into the Federal Treasury, thereby seriously interfering with the means of supporting our needy growing institutions. The effect of the present policy is to permit local taxation only upon farm and city and town lands now privately owned. This might be less objectionable in Iowa or Illinois, where practically all of the land is tillable. More than half of the area of Colorado is not tillable under any known method, but is composed of mineral, grazing, and timbered areas, which take the place of farm lands, and which are just as expensive to govern, if not more so, than are the farm lands. The policy, therefore, which withdraws these from taxation is a serious handicap to the State.

While our resources are of great variety, they are not naturally ready for use. On the average, there has been a dollar in expense for every dollar in precious metals taken from the mountains, and the value of our lands is measured by the labor required for their irrigation and development. Without the value, the presence, and industry our people have added to them there is not a dollar's worth of value in any of our natural resources. Every dollar, therefore, charged in the form of royalty on the products of these resources is a tax on human toil.

We can not hope to secure the best settlement of our lands nor development of our resources upon a tenantry basis. The man who is permitted to lease lands cheaply for grazing will try to keep them for pasture.

15. There is but one-third of our area on the tax rolls, with extraordinary educational requirements to equip our people to meet mining, industrial, irrigation, and other agricultural development. We must, therefore, increase the taxable area to include all the lands if every portion of the State shall bear its just share of this burden.

A large part of our territory is included in the Louisiana Purchase, in the treaty ratifying which it is decreed:

"The inhabitants of the ceded territory shall be incorporated in the Union of the United States and admitted, as soon as possible, according to the principles of the Federal Constitution, to the enjoyment of all the rights, advantages, and immunities of citizens of the United States."

If this provision were complied with the present bureaucratic government over large areas of our State would be impossible. Is there any reason why people who must live in and do business with the said reservations should be deprived of the same rights and privileges enjoyed by the citizens of the older States, and what reason is there to suppose that forests can not be grown and protected, or monopolies prevented under the republican form of government?

The incentive of ownership is necessary to secure the best development of our mineral territory, and we can not expect the best citizenship unless people are permitted to own their own homes, no matter in what business they engage.

The private-owned land in the State is scattered promiscuously amongst the Federal-owned land, and there can be no hope of harmonious action or good feeling through the intermingled double jurisdiction over our territory.

The Government proposes as a landlord to go into almost every kind of business within the State on untaxed property in competition with private-owned and taxed property. The public business does not need to pay expenses, but the owner of the private property must pay taxes to make up the loss of his Federal competitor. The Federal Government engaging in business as a proprietor must necessarily occupy a contractual relation with the citizen, under which the Government may enforce its contract against the citizen, whereas the citizen may not enforce his contract against the Government.

Under the present administration of the forest reserves the Government acknowledges the moral right of the State to tax the property by returning to the State 25 per cent of the proceeds from sales, rentals, and special privileges.

It assumes the right, however, to dictate the disposition of this rebate by decreeing that it shall go to the support of roads and schools, two popular purposes, but ignoring the necessity of the State to protect in the courts the very lives of those living upon Federal-owned property and the necessity for the maintenance of educational, charitable, and penal institutions by the State.

16. The continued withdrawal of our lands and resources from entry and placing them upon a revenue basis to pay royalties into the Federal Treasury means their control by Congress, and that Texas, which never had any public lands, would, in the House of Representatives, have four times the legislative power over our territory that we ourselves could exert; and that New York, which has no public domain, would have ten times the legislative power over our territory that we ourselves possess, and that, too, without any adequate knowledge of local conditions and necessities.

The double jurisdiction over the territory of the State has led to strong opposition to Federal officials, against whose orders and rules there is no recourse in the courts, and employees of the Federal bureaus, defending their position, have been constantly doing missionary work in behalf of the general principle of Federal control of our lands and resources.

The Forest Service, for instance, through its numerous employees, has been able to enlist the eastern press in praise of its work and to create a sentiment against the West.

The Federal Constitution declares: "The United States shall guarantee to each State in the Union a republican form of government"; not a republican form of government over part of the State, but over it all. Certainly no one can contend that a republican form of government exists under the bureaucratic control already in force over a large part of our territory and sought to be enforced over two-thirds of our area, with its arbitrary rules and regulations enforceable at the pleasure of the bureau with discretionary power, with its natural antagonism to State laws and State control, with a long list of special privileges to enlist support, and with all the evils therefore of a system of favoritism.

"Republicanism and bureaucracy are incompatible existence." (Cent. Encyclopedia.)

Our laws and customs are built upon experience and our people are better acquainted with local conditions and necessities and are more interested in building the State aright than are the people of the East. If there is fear of monopolization, Congress, in the act of cession, could provide effective means for reversion of title to the State whenever monopoly is attempted. The administration of our public lands and resources should be under the jurisdiction of the Secretaries of the Interior and Agriculture, familiar from experience with the local situation, in order that it may be for the settlement of our lands, the development of our institution, and the betterment of social conditions.

17. We, therefore, earnestly request under existing or more appropriate laws such an administration as will secure the settlement of our public lands and the development of our resources, placing them upon the tax rolls with effective provisions against monopolization and waste. We ask for no advantage or privilege not enjoyed by the older States, but feel we have a right to insist that we be placed on an equal footing in all respects whatsoever with the original States to own and use our lands and resources to build our State and support its government and institutions.

O. C. SKINNER,
Speaker House of Representatives.

Attest:

STEPHEN R. FITZGERALD,
President of the Senate.
ELIAS M. AMMONS,
Governor State of Colorado.

Approved, March 8, 1913, at 1.49 p. m.

If Congress and the Interior and Agriculture Departments would carry out the sentiment of the governors' resolutions and of that memorial to the President and follow the present laws, the West would grow by leaps and bounds, and the entire Nation would be benefited beyond all possibility of calculation.

The last national Democratic platform, adopted at Baltimore, contained the following provisions:

We believe in the conservation and the development for the use of the people of the natural resources of the country. Our forests, our sources of water supply, our arable and our mineral lands, our navigable streams, and all the other material resources with which our country has been so lavishly endowed constitute the foundation of our national wealth. Such additional legislation as may be necessary to prevent their being wasted or absorbed by special or privileged interests should be enacted and the policy of their conservation should be rigidly adhered to.

The public domain should be administered and disposed of with due regard to the general welfare. Reservations should be limited to the purposes which they purport to serve, and not extended to include land wholly unsuited therefor. The unnecessary withdrawal from sale and settlement of enormous tracts of public land upon which tree growth never existed and can not be promoted tends only to retard development, create discontent, and bring reproach upon the policy of conservation.

The public-land laws should be administered in a spirit of the broadest liberality toward the settler exhibiting a bona fide purpose to comply therewith to the end that the invitation of fels Government to the landless should be as attractive as possible, and the plain provisions of the forest-reserve act permitting homestead entries to be made within the national forest should not be nullified by administration regulations which amount to a withdrawal of great areas of the same from settlement.

Immediate action should be taken by Congress to make available the vast and valuable coal deposits of Alaska under conditions that will be a perfect guaranty against their falling into the hands of monopolizing corporations, associations, or interests.

We rejoice in the inheritance of mineral resources unequaled in extent, variety, or value, and in the development of a mining industry unequaled in its magnitude and importance. We honor the men who, in their hazardous toil underground, daily risk their lives in extracting and preparing for our use the products of the mine, so essential to the industries, the commerce, and the comfort of the people of this country. And we pledge ourselves to the extension of the work of the Bureau of Mines in every way appropriate for national legislation with a view of safeguarding the lives of miners, lessening the waste of essential resources, and promoting the economic development of mining, which, along with agriculture, must in the future, even more than in the past, serve as the very foundation of our national prosperity and welfare and our international commerce.

The last Republican national platform contained the following provisions:

CONSERVATION POLICY.

We rejoice in the success of the distinctive Republican policy of the conservation of our national resources for their use by the people without waste and without monopoly. We pledge ourselves to a continuance of such a policy.

We favor such fair and reasonable rules and regulations as will not discourage or interfere with actual bona fide home seekers, prospectors, and miners in the acquisition of public lands under existing laws.

RECLAMATION OF LANDS.

We favor the continuance of the policy of the Government with regard to the reclamation of arid lands; and for the encouragement of the speedy settlement and improvement of such lands we favor an amendment to the law that will reasonably extend the time within which the cost of any reclamation project may be repaid by the landowners under it.

Neither of the two great political parties have ever in the history of this Government adopted or promulgated this leasing policy. The National Progressive Party during the last campaign adopted a plank in its platform advocating the retention and control of these resources by the Federal Government. They did not advocate or say anything about the "leasing" of them for Federal revenue or otherwise, but merely declared for the "retention" of them by the Government to prevent monopoly and encourage legitimate development. But the State platform of that party in Colorado did not contain the slightest intimation of any desire or intention of the members of that party to advocate any leasing policy of any of these resources. I think I am safe in saying that no political party in any Western State has ever advocated this universal and perpetual Federal bureau leasing policy, and I predict that any party that does will fail to elect its ticket.

The Democratic State platform in Colorado in the year 1908, upon which the entire Democratic ticket was elected, contained the following plank:

Seventh. Public lands: We commend forest reserves upon real forest areas, but condemn the present arbitrary and unjust administration of the same and demand that the administration of the reserves be placed by Federal law under effective State and local control.

We demand the immediate exclusion of agricultural and unforested areas from the reserves; the dismissal of the army of useless officeholders in our midst, maintained at the public expense of the people of the West for the upbuilding of a gigantic political machine at Washington; the abolition of unjust grazing taxes; the repeal of a system of timber sales which puts the lumber market in the hands of a few and by which the price of lumber has been doubled to the consumers.

We demand the repeal of all laws endowing the Forestry Department with authority to decree and establish rules and regulations concerning the administration of the forest reserves and declare all such matters to be legislative in their character, which should be covered by congressional enactment.

We are unalterably opposed to the pronounced purpose of the Republican administration to lease the balance of the public domain, thereby withdrawing the land from settlement. The people of the West are entitled to the use of the natural resources of their localities with which to build their States. They ask to be put on an equal footing with the people of the East in this regard, and will be satisfied with nothing less.

The Democratic State platform in Colorado in the year 1910, upon which practically the entire State ticket and all three Congressmen were elected, contained the following plank:

We reassert our position upon the public-land question as adopted at Pueblo in 1908, and declare the right of the State to control of the resources within its boundaries; we are in sympathy with the policy of considering the natural resources of the Nation and the State in a manner which will protect the right of future generations, but we are unalterably opposed to the bureaucratic, arbitrary regulations which work hardship on the homesteaders and the miners and retard the development of the State.

During the last campaign of the fall of 1912 the Democratic Party in Colorado, after very careful and exhaustive consideration, adopted one of the most comprehensive platforms that our party has ever had in that State. All of the four members of this House and both of the Senators from Colorado were elected upon that platform. Among the declarations of principles for which we stood were the following:

GIVE PUBLIC LANDS FOR HIGHWAYS.

We favor the ceding by Congress to the State of public lands for highway purposes, the proceeds thereof to be used by the highway commission for the construction and maintenance of public thoroughfares exclusively.

STATE SHOULD CONTROL PUBLIC LAND.

In conformity with the joint resolution unanimously adopted by the eighteenth general assembly, and in the language thereof, "We most earnestly request that all public lands within the boundaries of Colorado be turned over to the State under terms just and fair to both State and Nation, and with such restrictions as will effectually prevent monopoly, to the end that all territory shall be under one jurisdiction and uniform law; that we shall have the same rights enjoyed by the older States of our Union; that all land capable of agricultural development shall be freely open to homestead entry; that lands suitable for summer homes shall be sold in small tracts, and under proper restrictions, for that purpose; that prospecting may be encouraged and greater mining development secured; that rights of way shall be under the control of the State, avoiding vexatious and often prohibitive delays in construction; that water power may be had and manufacturing encouraged; that our lands may be made revenue producing, and that such revenue from rentals, royalties, and sales may be used for the construction of public highways and the completion of reclamation projects; that greater settlement and production may make our rural communities more populous, improve social conditions, help the railways to give better service and make needed extensions; and that the blessings of local self-government, including the right to impose taxes upon all property alike and the disposal of such revenues as local needs demand, shall be guaranteed to all our people."

LAND QUESTION DECLARED ONE FOR COURTS.

The jurisdiction of the courts should be extended to all contests and controversies arising over homestead, desert, and other land filings and entries, including protests and objections by the Government thereto, and heard and determined as now provided in adverse cases arising under the mining laws of the United States.

We denounce the policy of the Republican administration which, having retarded our development, now proposes to withdraw all the remaining agricultural, grazing, and mineral public lands from all forms of entry, with the expressed determination of imposing upon the West a permanent bureaucratic rule and Federal leasing system of all the Government resources within our borders, and thereby disastrously retarding the development of our State and depriving our Commonwealth of its just and constitutional rights.

The Republican Party in Colorado has denounced this proposed leasing policy almost as bitterly as the Democrats have.

On July 26, 1866, for the purpose of inducing immigration to and settlement of the West, and for the protection of property rights therein, Congress passed the following act:

Whenever, by priority of possession, rights to the use of water for mining, agricultural, manufacturing, or other purposes have vested and accrued, and the same are recognized and acknowledged by the local customs, laws, and the decisions of courts, the possessors and owners of such vested rights shall be maintained and protected in the same; and the right of way for the construction of ditches and canals for the purposes herein specified is acknowledged and confirmed; but whenever any person, in the construction of any ditch or canal, injures or damages the possession of any settler on the public domain, the party committing such injury or damage shall be liable to the party injured for such injury or damage. (Rev. Stat., 2339.)

For the purpose of further guaranteeing and protecting the western settlers in their property rights and rights of way for their ditches and water rights, on July 9, 1870, Congress passed the following act:

All patents granted or preemptions or homesteads allowed shall be subject to any vested and accrued water rights, or rights to ditches and reservoirs used in connection with such water rights as may have been acquired under or recognized by the preceding section. (Rev. Stat., 2340.)

Neither one of those acts have ever been repealed from that day to this. They were the foundation upon which many billions of dollars worth of property was made by many years of toil and privation, and upon which that property has securely rested for nearly a half a century.

On the 3d day of March, 1875, Congress passed the enabling act permitting the inhabitants of the Territory of Colorado to frame and submit its constitution for admission to the Union. Section 1 of the enabling act reads as follows:

That the inhabitants of the Territory of Colorado included in the boundaries hereinafter designated be, and they are hereby, authorized to form for themselves, out of said Territory, a State government, with the name of the State of Colorado, which State, when formed, shall be admitted into the Union upon an equal footing with the original States in all respect whatsoever, as hereinafter provided.

In pursuance of that enabling act the inhabitants of the Territory of Colorado adopted a constitution on the 14th of March, 1876, and submitted it. Paragraphs 5 and 6 of article 16 of that constitution which was submitted to this Government are as follows:

Water public property.—The water of every natural stream not heretofore appropriated within the State of Colorado is hereby declared to be the property of the public, and the same is dedicated to the use of the people of the State, subject to appropriation as hereinafter provided.

Right of appropriation.—The right to divert unappropriated waters of any natural stream for beneficial uses shall never be denied. Priority of appropriation shall give the better right as between those using the water for the same purpose, but when the waters of any natural stream are not sufficient for the service of all those desiring the use of the same, those using the water for domestic purposes shall have the preference over those claiming for any other purpose, and those using the water for agricultural purposes shall have the preference over those using the same for manufacturing purposes.

That constitution, with those provisions therein, was formally approved, and President Grant on August 1, 1876, signed and issued the proclamation making Colorado the centennial State of this Union. That enabling act and those two provisions within our constitution were an absolutely binding and forever inviolate contract between this Government and the State of Colorado. Probably one-half of the property value of our entire State has been built and based upon those provisions. You of the East have little conception of what water rights mean to us of the West.

The act of June 4, 1897, establishing the forest reserves, also contained the following provision:

The jurisdiction, both civil and criminal, over persons within such reservations shall not be affected or changed by reason of the existence of such reservations, except so far as the punishment of offenses against the United States therein is concerned, the intent and meaning of this provision being that the State wherein any such reservation is situated shall not, by reason of the establishment thereof, lose its jurisdiction nor the inhabitants thereof their rights and privileges as citizens, or be absolved from their duties as citizens of the State.

The Supreme Court of the United States, in the case of Kansas v. Colorado (206 U. S., 46–118), and all of the other decisions of that court upon the subject during the past 40 years, have emphatically declared:

That the Government of the United States is one of enumerated powers; that it has no inherent powers of sovereignty; that the enumeration of the powers granted is to be found in the Constitution of the United States, and in that alone; that all powers not granted are reserved to the people. While Congress has general legislative jurisdiction over the Territories, and may control the flow of waters in their streams, it has no power to control a like flow within the limits of a State, except to preserve or improve the navigability of the stream; that the full control over those waters is vested in the State.

We have no navigable streams within the State of Colorado. The doctrine of riparian rights never did prevail in our country. All the waters of our streams became the property of the people when our State was admitted into the Union, and from the 1st day of August, 1876, up to this hour neither this Government nor Congress has ever had any right whatever to interfere with or exercise any jurisdiction over one drop of water within the boundaries of Colorado. Our State was admitted upon an absolute equality with every other State in this Union. Congress has no right to interfere with our property rights or our local self-government any more than it would with any other State; and I can not resist feeling that such an effort would not be attempted against the older States.

Section 8 of the reclamation act, approved June 17, 1902 (32 Stat., 380), expressly provides that nothing therein shall be construed as affecting, or intending to affect, or in any way interfering with the laws of any State or Territory relating to the control, appropriation, use, or distribution of waters used in irrigation, or any vested right acquired thereunder. So that all of this nonsense about charging for the conservation of our waters is the most brazen, insolent, and infamous attempt to violate our constitutional rights that has ever been undertaken in the history of this Government.

I am confident that this bill is intended to, or at least that the eastern extreme conservationists hope that this law will, in effect, repeal or supersede and virtually nullify all of those laws and decisions and constitutional provisions.

Aside from the question of the violation of the inherent rights of the Western States I look upon this class of legislation as unwise for many other reasons, and contrary to the general welfare of the country. And, as I have said, I believe it will be practically a failure; not entirely so, but it will surely disappoint the expectations of those who are advocating it.

I believe it is thoroughly wrong to place such tremendous unlimited discretionary power in the hands of any one individual. It is not compatible with our theory of government that Congress should delegate to a department head the supreme power of taxation and the right to suspend the operation of the law for any desired period or for any desired purpose or to any objectionable applicant.

Investment of large sums of money in any enterprise will not be made excepting upon the stability, certainty, and character of the law. People will not invest large sums of money upon the probability of the fairness of any executive official. This act of Congress does not give or grant any rights to any citizen or corporation. It is an unreserved and unqualified delegation of frightfully unlimited discretionary powe. to the Secretary of the Interior to give or withhold these rights; and if he decides to give them, to designate the terms upon which he will grant them. He is not only given the taxing power but is given the discretion to give or refuse a lease, and to either fix the terms so high that they will be prohibitive or so low that they will amount to a gratuitous donation; and in these respects, as well as many others, it is believed that if this bill is enacted it will be unconstitutional. (See Field v. Clark, 143 U. S., 700.)

The present law authorizing a revokable permit for the development of water power is now conceded by everybody to be utterly unworkable and foolish. I prophesy that this present law, with the unlimited forfeiture condition, will practically be equally as indefinite and unsatisfactory. People will not invest capital where their entire property rights may at any time be swept aside at the whim of some executive official, with no appeal to any court or redress of any kind.

I have received a great many protests, petitions, and resolutions against these leasing bills from the business organizations, county commissioners, and citizens generally of our State. I will not give them, because my statements herein voice the substance of their objections; but I will insert, merely as a sample, one from the Commercial Club of Rio Blanco County, as a fair illustration of the way this theoretical conservation affects and will affect the development of my State.

At a regular meeting of the Rio Blanco County Commercial Club, held at Meeker, Rio Blanco County, Colo., on the 6th day of April, 1914, the following resolutions were adopted, to wit:

Whereas there are now pending in Congress certain bills for the leasing of the public lands; and

Whereas it appears from the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD that many able and fair-minded Representatives and Senators have very limited knowledge of western conditions:

Resolved, That a plain statement of facts and conditions in this county that have a bearing on the leasing question be made, and that we make earnest protest against the leasing of any class of lands whatever and in any form, the statement of facts and conditions in this county being as follows:

This county has an area of 2,067,000 acres, of which 312,000 acres are withdrawn in the White River National Forest, about 85,000 acres are withdrawn as oil lands, 200,000 acres of coal lands have been practically withdrawn by the action of the Interior Department in placing thereon values several times as great as patented coal lands adjoining can be bought for; about 40,000 acres of carnotite lands are now sought to be withdrawn by Congress, and subdivisions of lands that lie here and there along White River for a length of more than 100 miles intersecting or jutting into the patented lands have been withdrawn for power sites, these sites being useless for power sites or purposes other than to hold narrow parcels of land over which the ditch or pipe-line would have to be carried, presumably so that the Government could control the building of such power plants.

The cost of maintaining our county government is great because by the shortest public roads it is 80 miles to the farthest western settlement in this county from Meeker, the county seat, and more than 100 miles from Meeker to the most easterly settlement.

To support this county we have the following patented lands: Irrigated lands, 21,359 acres; grazing lands, 91,792 acres; natural hay lands, 2,018 acres; and coal lands, 4,149 acres. Our nearest railroad is 45 miles distant.

The people of this county, including many members of this commercial club, were the real initiators of the conservation movement, having in 1889 petitioned the President through the medium of Thomas A. Carter, Commissioner of the General Land Office, who indorsed our petition, to set aside the forests of this county for a park or forest reserve. This was the first national forest created under the act of 1891, if we except a small addition to the Wyoming National Park. Our petition described the bounds of the forest, but the Interior Department, on the advice of men who were practically strangers to this county, saw fit to extend the boundaries to include more than 100,000 acres of good farm lands, about one-half of that increase being in this county, including one tract of 20,000 acres on which there was nothing but sagebrush and which to-day produces more revenue for this county than the 312,000 acres of forest-reserve lands. It took six years of struggle to get this tract eliminated. One agent sent here by the Interior Department in 1893 or 1894 informed us that it should be retained within the forest lands as a winter feeding ground for deer. The same argument was advanced by Forester Pinchot at a later time, when he sent an inspector from Washington, D. C., to report on the advisability of adding to the forest the lands south of White River from the forest to the Utah line, a distance of 70 miles, all of the land being nontimber lands. When the agent reported that it was not forest land Mr. Pinchot asked for a second report by a local officer.

We would call the attention of our Congressmen and Senators to the fact that a system of espionage has for years been maintained by the Forest Service, acting under instructions from Washington, we are informed; this espionage is kept more especially over the actions of those who have filed on land which has been eliminated from the reserve, and which land is no longer under the jurisdiction of the Forest Service. One duty of the rangers in winter has been to count the horses and cattle that are pastured and fed on homesteads, even on patented land. Most homesteaders are poor men, but a poor man has little chance to secure a homestead within the reserve. Applications are usually held up for about one year before an applicant can file. He is given a permit to use the land until such time as the department acts upon his application. Even if he settles at once under the permit he get no credit for residence that year, the Land Office requiring three years' residence from date of filing on the land before the United States land office at Glenwood Springs, Colo. The best of the forest lands are being rapidly leased to the wealthy cattlemen, and the better class of homeseekers will not try to get land inside an inclosure, even if permitted by law to do so. Ordinary farmers can not afford to fence pastures for their small herds, so in time all the reserve, or all the best portion, will be controlled by the big cattle outfits.

Leasing of coal, radium, and grazing lands are more to be avoided than leases on the forest reserves, yet we call attention to wrongs suffered through having these lands controlled from Washington, where the best informed know but little of the actual situation.

All leases help the rich man and keep the poor man down.

We well remember when a convention was called to outline a lease law. All the parties invited to attend this convention from the West were members of an association of cattle barons, who formed that association for the purpose of getting the Government to lease the public range. The shibboleth of each member of the convention was, "Let the poor man have first choice." It was Hobson's choice, though. They gave him a chance to take 160 acres adjoining his home, the land along the foothills being usually worthless for grazing; but the highlands that produce luxuriant grass were left for the big cattlemen. The withdrawal of oil gives a monopoly to the oil kings of to-day. Withdraw the coal and you add millions to the pockets of many big corporations. Lumber in this town has been increased in price $8 per 1,000 feet. This increase is not measured by the higher charge of the Government per 1,000 feet. For example, a millman here was instructed by the forest ranger in charge to pile all brush in a certain spot. After the brush was piled, then came a higher man from the outside and ordered all the brush to be removed to another place before burning. The people of Rio Blanco County pay for these extras.

Our greatest values lie in our coal deposits, which are immense. Without these assets we have a sorry future before us.

All forms of leasing keep out immigration to the West. The course of the Government in taking from the people their coal, their so-called grazing lands, their radium, and their oil, and in taking from the people of Colorado the water that falls on their lands, to be given to Mexicans, is making the United States a land of aristocrats and peasants.

The amount of income received by this county from 312,000 acres of forest land is not one-half so large as it receives from certain individual taxpayers owning only a small acreage. Leasers never build up a country.

One serious trouble in getting justice is that conservationists are theorists and not practicable.

All the oil lands and the radium lands of this country were discovered by prospectors. United States geologists are poor prospectors. We spent thousands of dollars in proving the oil lands of this county, but as soon as proved to be an oil territory they asked the President to withdraw the lands. Our asphaltum lands were discovered and developed by home people and United States geologists are only familiar with the size of such veins of coal as have been opened and patented by home people. If the radium deposits are left open to prospectors, this county will make that element a "drug on the market."

Our people still remember the fact that multimillionaire lumbermen were charter members of the conservation league, and that they made millions by the timberland withdrawals. Our citizens were in favor of such withdrawal, but never expected this Government to help build up a monopoly. We thought prices of lumber would be kept to the lowest limit.

Outside the forest every half section of land—the so-called grazing lands—remaining open to settlement contains tillable tracts aggregating 40 to 60 acres; and if not withdrawn will soon all be taken by home seekers, who by cultivation of these tracts will raise more feed and consequently more cattle on 320 acres than will ever be raised by leasers on 2,000 acres of the same lands. Moreover, owners of such lands will make permanent improvements.

We are especially opposed to lease moneys being handled by the Reclamation Service, believing them to be more wasteful than any other branch of the Government. We are well aware that department officials do not like criticism of their rulings and that in some cases precedent and pride prevents many of them from righting a wrong. Our former protests have always been mild and formal so as not to offend. The present danger to this community is too great to do less than lay bare the facts, no matter whom it hurts. The people of Rio Blanco County are a unit against the withdrawal of coal, oil, and radium lands. We are nearly so as to grazing lands, the only exceptions being a few big cattlemen and a few others who already have pastures fenced.

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be sent to Hon. EDWARD T. TAYLOR and Hon. JOHN F. SHAFROTH, at Washington, D. C.

RIO BLANCO COUNTY COMMERCIAL CLUB,
By W. S. MONTGOMERY, President,
W. D. SIMMS, Secretary.

If this general leasing policy is inflicted upon the West, I predict that Colorado and other Western States will be compelled to impose an excise tax upon the output of our coal mines and other Government-leased resources as a partial substitute for the loss of taxes on those properties.

A majority of the governors of the Western States met in Denver last April at their third annual conference, and prepared a statement upon this subject which is brief, plain, and specific. It reflects the sentiment of a majority of the western half of this Republic, and every Member of Congress should read and respect that sentiment in the enactment of legislation which primarily affects those States. The resolutions are as follows:

WHAT THE WEST WANTS.

[Resolutions adopted unanimously by the Third Annual Conference of Western Governors held in Denver, Colo., April 9, 10, and 11, 1914.]

We, the members of the western governors' conference, in convention assembled at Denver, Colo., April 7, 8, 9, 10, and 11, 1914, do hereby adopt the following resolutions:

CONSERVATION.

We believe in conservation—in sane conservation. We believe that the All-Wise Creator placed the vast resources of this Nation here for the use and benefit of all the people—generations past, present, and future, and while we believe due consideration and protection should be given to the rights of those who come hereafter, we insist that the people of this day and age should be given every reasonable opportunity to develop our wonderful resources and put them to a beneficial use.

STATE CONTROL.

That it is the duty of each and every State to adopt such laws as will make for true conservation of our resources, prevent monopoly, and render the greatest good to the greatest number; and that as rapidly as the States prepare themselves to carry out such a policy of conservation the Federal Government should withdraw its supervision and turn the work over to the States.

SETTLEMENT OF OUR LANDS.

Believing that those who control the soil control the Nation, and that the most blessed nations are those where the ownership of lands is in many hands, we insist that in the management and sale of our public lands both the Federal Government and the State should maintain such a policy as will make for the rapid settlement of all vacant agricultural lands.

DESERT-LAND ACT.

Resolved, That this convention recommend to Congress amendments of the following nature to the desert-land act:

(1) That the entryman's proof of citizenship in the State wherein he makes a desert-land filing be changed from the time of filing to the time of proving up.

(2) That the requirements of reclamation be enlarged to embrace the alternative proof of cultivation by the actual growing of crops by dry-farm methods on double the acreage required if by irrigation.

HOMESTEAD ENTRY.

We approve the plan now before Congress to permit homestead entries by persons over 18 years of age.

WATER POWER.

Whereas Congress has declared "the water of all lakes, rivers, and other sources of water supply, upon the public lands and not navigable, shall remain and be held free from the appropriation and use of the public for irrigation, mining, and manufacturing purposes," we insist the Federal Government has no lawful authority to exercise control over the water of a State through ownership of public lands.

We maintain the waters of a State belong to the people of the State, and that the States should be left free to develop water-power possibilities and should receive fully the revenues and other benefits derived from such development.

PRECIOUS METALS.

We reiterate our expression, contained in article 10 of the 1913 resolutions, referring to the reopening of mineral land, and in addition would urge that the revenues derived from the sale of such lands should be used for the reclamation of the arid lands of the West.

GRAZING LANDS.

We believe grazing lands should be disposed of through an "enlarged homestead" act giving the settler sufficient ground to enable him on a live-stock basis to support a family.

SUMMER HOMESTEAD LAW.

We favor the passage of a summer homestead or preemption law, permitting land not valuable for timber, minerals, or agriculture, but suitable for summer homes, to be acquired in not to exceed 40-acre tracts for summer homes. The entryman should not be required to be a resident of the State in which the land is situated, and suitable improvements of the value of $300 and three years' summer residence should be necessary to secure patent.

GOOD ROADS.

We reiterate that 5 per cent of the public lands in the several States should be granted to the said States to aid in construction of permanent roads.

DELAYS—RED TAPE.

We believe one of the greatest blessings the officials at Washington could bestow upon the West would be the elimination of all red tape and the taking of prompt action upon all matters pending before the departments and in which the Western States are interested, and we are pleased to note that efforts are already being made in that direction.

INTERIOR DEPARTMENT.

We are pleased at the thoughtfulness of the Secretary of the Interior in sending so many of his representatives to the irrigation conference now in session in this city. We express our appreciation of his intention to adopt a more liberal policy toward the settlement and development of the West and assure him of our hearty cooperation in this direction.

DONATION OF LANDS.

We recommend that 10 per cent of all vacant and unappropriated public lands in each of the arid States be donated to such States, and each of them as shall so request, said lands to be sold by such States as other State lands are disposed of and the proceeds of such sales to form a reservoir fund to be used under the direction of the State for irrigation reclamation purposes.

RECLAMATION PROJECTS.

We urgently recommend that the United States reclamation projects now under process of construction be completed at the earliest practicable moment and turned over to the settlers thereunder as soon as can be.

CAREY ACT PROJECTS.

We urgently recommend that the United States Reclamation Service immediately investigate any and all Carey land, irrigation district, or like projects commenced or under construction in the arid States, and render such projects all financial and other assistance possible, to the end that they may be immediately completed and the settlers thereunder protected and assisted, and the persons holding bonds issued against said projects be compensated as far as practicable.

We urge the press of the Western States to investigate and actively support these principles.

RESOLUTIONS REAFFIRMED.

We reaffirm the action taken by the governors' conference in Salt Lake City, Utah, in 1913, as follows:

"We, the governors of public-land States, in conference assembled, believing that upon the administration of the laws governing the disposal of the public lands in a very large measure depends the future prosperity of our States, do hereby agree to the following statement of what we believe should be the policy of the National Government in the administration of the public lands:

"1. That the newer States having been admitted in express terms on an equal footing in all respects whatever with the original States, no realization of that condition can be attained until the State jurisdiction shall extend to all their territory, the taxing power of all their lands, and their political power and influence be thereby secured.

"2. That as rapidly as the States become prepared to take over the work of conservation, the Federal Government withdraw its bureau from the field and turn the work over to the States.

"3. That permanent withdrawal of any lands within our States from entry and sale we believe to be contrary to the spirit and letter of the ordinance of 1787, the policy of which was followed for over a century, and we urge that such lands be returned to entry and opened to sale as speedily as possible.

"4. Dilatory action on the part of executive departments of the Government in passing title to purchasers of public lands is unfair to the States, as it permits purchasers to occupy the lands indefinitely without the States having power to tax them.

"5. We believe that the best development of these States depends upon the disposal of the public lands to citizens as rapidly as the laws can be complied with.

"6. Bona fide homestead entry within the forest-reserve boundaries should be permitted in the same manner as on unreserved lands, subject only to protest where lands selected are heavily timbered with trees of commercial value, or known to contain valuable mineral deposits.

"7. That the Government grant to the public-land States 5 per cent of the public land remaining in such, to be administered by the States as the school lands are now administered, for the purpose of building national public highways.

"8. That liberal land grants be made for the purpose of establishing and maintaining forestry schools in the public-land States.

"9. That rights of way for all lawful purposes be granted without unwarranted hindrance or delay.

"10. That all mineral lands now withheld from entry, or classified at prohibitive prices, be reopened to entry at nominal prices, under strict provisions against monopolization.

"11. That we express our appreciation of the splendid work done by the departments at Washington in cooperation with the several States in experimentation and instruction. This assistance has been most valuable in the education of our children and the development of our States, and we commend the same principle to the administration at Washington as being the most feasible plan for the present advancement of true conservation.

"12. We believe that the National Government should provide for expert experimental work in the solution of the mining problems of the mineral States in the same manner that the Agricultural Department now assists the farmers in solving the agricultural problems.

"13. We believe that the speedy settlement of those public lands constitutes the true and best interests of the Republic. The wealth and strength of the country are its land-owning population.

"14. The best and most economical development of this western territory was accomplished under those methods in vogue when the States of the Middle West were occupied and settled. In our opinion, these methods have never been improved upon, and we advocate a return to those first principles of vested ownership with joint interest and with widely scattered individual responsibility."

Mr. Chairman, there was recently published in the Mining Science an article upon the general subject of leasing the natural resources of the public domain. It is very ably written by Mr. Chester T. Kennan, a mining engineer of Eagle, near my home in Colorado, who has given a great deal of thought and study to this very important subject. His article reflects the sentiment of a very large per cent of the people who live in that country and who have personally come in contact with the development of the West and as it has been carried on during recent years and who know what the effect will be of the present tendency toward bureaucratic centralization of power. The article is as follows:

PREDATORY BUREAUCRATS AND THE LEASING SYSTEM.

[Chester T. Kennan, M. E.]

No system of true conservation or good government requires that our citizens be made tenantry of a governmental landlord.

The land and natural resources alone make possible industrial and commercial existence of the individual State; they constitute its first capital and stock in trade, upon which it must conduct its business and development and maintain a government "republican in form," as required by its act of admission as a State.

The right of taxation is so necessary and fundamental that a sovereign State without it can not continue. To the latter imperative end, and to place the new States on an equal footing with the original States, and to provide that ours be a Nation of home owners, it has been this Nation's policy from the beginning to pass the public lands and national resources into private ownership, private control, and private development.

It is the plain duty of every citizen to assert and the courts to maintain the sovereignty of the State in conformity with that article of the Federal Constitution which provides that "the powers not delegated to the United States by the Constitution, nor prohibited by it to the States, are reserved to the States, respectively, or to the people." It is therefore, the manifest right of every citizen to demand government by the people rather than by bureaus of the Central Government; and in so far as the constitutional power of regulation in these respects is vested in the several States it is fundamental and imperative that it be not divested or invaded.

The acts of Congress admitting the public-land States to the Union contain the declarations which are taken from the ordinance of July 13, 1787, including the following provision: "The State of ——— shall be one and is hereby declared to be one of the United States of America, and admitted into the Union on an equal footing with the original States in all respects whatever."

It is also provided in such acts of admission of new States that "they shall never lay any tax or assessment of any description whatever upon the public domain."

Neither the United States nor any State has the power to do any act or pass any law which will create inequality between the States, and any attempt on the part of either to do so is void and of no effect, ab initio. (39 Fed. Rep., 730; 9 Pet., 224; 15 Pet., 449; 104 U. S., 621; 146 U. S., 387; 152 U. S., 397; 164 U. S., 240; 168 U. S., 349; 176 U. S., 83, 87; 187 U. S., 479, 483; 190 U. S., 508, 519; 198 U. S., 371; 198 Fed. Rep., 539.)

The United States alone has no power to create unequal States by Executive act, by law of Congress, or by judicial interpretation of those laws, and all of such attempts are void. (198 Fed. Rep., 539.)

In 1845 the United States Supreme Court, in the case of Pollard's Lessee v. Hagan (3 How., 212), decided and laid down as fundamental law of the land "that the transaction between the United States and Virginia and Georgia and the Louisiana Purchase constituted a contract and created a trust, under which the United States secured control of the public lands to pay the public debts by bona fide disposing of them in order that new States might be erected, which should be equal in every respect to the original States; that the United States holds the lands for temporary purposes only, and in trust for the State where they lie; and that until the lands were disposed of by the United States the new State was not on a footing of equality with the original States.

As late as May, 1911, the United States Supreme Court, in the case of Coyle v. Oklahoma (221 U. S., 559), quotes the above case of Pollard's Lessee v. Hagan with approval and reaffirms the perfect equality of the State in relation to the United States.

The United States Government holds the public domain in trust (not in fee). What each citizen, therefore, owns in the public domain is his right to acquire a segment of it if he chooses so to do. Congress has no power to authorize the Central Government to seize the title in fee and perpetuity and rent the lands to the people.

The status of our public-land system now is, and always has been, that the Central Government holds the public domain temporarily and in trust, to be erected into sovereign States upon an equal footing with the original States in every respect; to afford equal opportunity to every citizen to acquire a home; and to be disposed of at nominal prices to private ownership, in order that the Central Government might, as speedily as possible, retire as a landlord from the several States. The people have always emphasized that the Government should not hold the public lands, even in trust, any longer than absolutely necessary to systematically and equitably pass them to private ownership. The day has long gone by when it was thought right or justifiable that the king, government, ruling classes, or bureaucrats should own and control the land in perpetuity and rent it to the people.

Under this beneficent, enlightened democratic land system we have reared the leading and most progressive Nation of the world.

The bureaucrats, or "conservationists"—under the latter alias they seem to prefer to operate—now demand that our established system of land tenure be subverted, and our form of government in a vital principle revolutionized.

They are now conjuring Uncle Sam to be a traitor to his trust, to embezzle the "trust fund," to become the most royal, selfish landlord this world has ever witnessed, to seize soil within the States in perpetuity, free from taxation, to rent the land to his tenant vassals, to deny public-land States equality with the original States, to destroy their sovereignty, make them provinces, and draw a line around the western third of the United States and denominate it on the map, "Ireland of America—doomed forever to fight for 'home rule.'"

Manifestly, their scheme is not progressive, but reactionary at least 1,000 years.

Any form of conservation which fails to take into account the rights and needs of the present generation evidently does not cover the whole field and has no place in this country.

True conservation may be defined as the least practicable waste consistent with the greatest practicable use.

Conservation is a technical and scientific subject, while the ownership and passing of title to the public land is a political and sociological subject, and the two have no necessary connection; yet, while sailing under the fair banner of "conservation," our bureaucrats have attempted to create and take over to themselves the most gigantic land monopoly this world has ever witnessed—already having under their control in forest reserves, withdrawals, etc., near 200,000,000 acres, an area greater than many kingdoms of Europe combined.

An example of true conservation is presented by the management of our great stockyards, where every conceivable part of the slaughtered animal is saved and placed to a fitting use. The great modern coal-coking plants and large petroleum refineries are striking examples of conservation, by saving a vast number of by-products that would otherwise be wasted or not placed to their most valuable use. Every advance in metallurgical processes which enables us to more cheaply extract metals from their ores and thereby utilize lower grades of ore at a profit is a long step in the field of true conservation. Life-saving and labor-saving devices and the protection of property from destruction and waste by fire are legitimate and worthy forms of conservation.

But unmindful of the truism so pertinently expressed by President Wilson, that "conservation is not reservation," our bureaucrats have practically ignored conservation and devoted all their energies to reservation, seeking to reserve under their own control all the public domain and its natural resources as against the public-land States and the people, until we are now burdened with the omnipresent forest reserves, park reserves, military reserves, naval reserves, coal reserves, water-power reserves, missionary reserves, Government reserves, school reserves, bird reserves, and archæological reserves, and then they withdrew practically all the balance of the desirable lands from market under the pretense of "classification"; and now they are introducing bills in Congress to accomplish their final coup d'etat by having the Government seize title to the public domain in fee and perpetuity, and lease it to the people, the bureaucrats at last firmly in the saddle as administrators of the grand feudal empire.

During the sinister progress of this long-drawn-out campaign for bureaucratic autocracy the musty air of medieval tyranny has become ever thicker and more suffocating to western nostrils, consistently with their purpose, the most strenuous effort of the bureaucrats have been exerted to retain the public domain in a state of nature, to prevent development, and to prevent the public lands from passing to private ownership until such time as they could prevail upon Congress to have the Central Government seize the public domain in fee and rent it to the people and make the bureaucrats administrators of the vast estate.

What coterie of politicians, pray, would not like to be administrators of such vast empire, with power, salaries, perquisites, patronage, and opportunities for graft unlimited?

While each State has all the power to suppress or destroy monopoly within its borders that the Central Government has within its sphere, yet while striving to create the greatest land monopoly that ever existed, the most popular slogan of the bureaucrats has been that only their plan could prevent monopoly of the public domain. Even if we had no special statutes in this behalf, monopoly could be suppressed or destroyed under the common law of England.

Would it not be timely and appropos for our lawmakers at Washington now, while they have their hands in at investigating and dissolving "trusts," to investigate this one, the greatest and most noxious of them all—the public-domain trust of the United States—now hatching on the floors of Congress?

There appears to be no limit to the legislative power of these autocrats of the bureaus. They boldly occupy the "twilight zone" between State rights and the rights and powers of the central government; and to enforce their bureau-made laws have inaugurated a reign of terrorism in the Western States through an organized army of many thousands of men, including forest rangers, petty officers, mineral examiners, general solicitors, special solicitors, attorneys, press agents, statisticians, common spies, muckrakers, lecturers, detectives, secret-service agents, affidavit gleaners, collectors of rents and bills and royalties, star-chamber courts, etc. While we are compelled to admit that the spy system of our bureaus is now the finest in all the world—not even that of Turkey or Russia excepted—in simple justice to the American people we are gratified to state that the people are not proud of it. We are bowed down with humiliation and shame that such a glaring example of monstrous tyranny and oppression has gained a foothold on American soil.

We should not now turn our backs upon our enlightened form of government, and, at the bidding of these purely political "conservationists" for gain, retrace our steps to feudal times and conditions. We should not drift from the principle of encouraging the individual, the small owner, and the home, but if occasionally there are abuses, or men file upon land wrongfully, let the individual case be punished under the established laws of the land.

Under the leasing system we would have the feudal condition of a portion of our citizens being freeholders and freemen and another portion being tenantry and serfs of the ruling landlord. We would then have on American soil the political spectacle of one portion of our citizens paying taxes to maintain an ancient form of government over another portion.

The Western States hold that it is the just prerogative of each State in the Union to adopt such system of true conservation of the resources within its borders as may best suit the needs and purposes of its people, exercising therein such practical economy in behalf of future generations as may by each State be deemed wise and provident.

As an illustration Gov. Ammons has well pointed out that the leasing system would mean, in effect, that Colorado would ultimately pay into the Federal Treasury on coal alone, figuring the present highest rate of royalty, the enormous tax of $37,100,000,000, while it would pay annually on water power alone, when fully developed, twice as much as it now collects in State taxes for all purposes.

The people realize and keenly appreciate that there is a wide distinction between the act of two citizens equal under the law making a contract of lease between themselves and the ruling landlord, who is also the lawmaker, contracting or forcing a contract with his tribute payer under the law. It is a luminous fact in history familiar to all that whenever a government and its officials became vested with the resources of the people and their opportunities to make a living, the people were no longer free and that form of government was doomed to eventual if not speedy wreck.

The experiment of governing people through the soil has been often tried, but never with ultimate success—the man who says it should now be tried, whatever he may call himself, is a socialist, pure and simple; but he is too late with his doctrine in this country, unless he proposes that Uncle Sam seize the title in fee to the whole area of the United States and lease it all, so that we shall all be on an equal footing. Abraham Lincoln said: "Tell the people the truth, and the Nation is safe."

The bill as reported to the House by the committee and now under consideration as in Committee of the Whole is as follows:

[H. R. 16673, Sixty-third Congress, second session.]

A bill to provide for the development of water power and the use of public lands in relation thereto, and for other purposes.

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and hereby is, authorized and empowered, under general regulations to be fixed by him, and under such terms and conditions as he may prescribe, not inconsistent with the terms of this act, to lease to citizens of the United States, or those who have declared their intention to become such, or to any association of such persons, or to any corporation organized under the laws of the United States, or any State or Territory thereof, any part of the lands and other property of the United States (including Alaska), reserved or unreserved, including lands in national forests, national monuments, military and other reservations, not including national parks, for a period not longer than 50 years for the purpose of constructing, maintaining, and operating dams, water conduits, reservoirs, power houses, transmission lines, and other works necessary or convenient to the development, generation, transmission, and utilization of hydroelectric power, which leases shall be irrevocable except as herein provided, but which may be declared null and void upon breach of any of their terms: Provided, that such leases shall be given within or through any of said national forests, military or other reservations only upon a finding by the chief officer of the department under whose supervision such forest, national monument, or reservation falls that the lease will not injure, destroy, or be inconsistent with the purpose for which such forest, national monument, or reservation was created or acquired: Provided further, That in the granting of leases under this act the Secretary of the Interior may, in his discretion, give preference to applications for leases for the development of electrical power by States, counties, or municipalities, or for municipal uses and purposes: Provided further, That for the purpose of enabling an applicant for a lease to secure the data required in connection therewith, the Secretary of the Interior may, under general regulations to be issued by him, grant a preliminary permit authorizing the occupation of public lands valuable for water-power development for a period not exceeding one year in any case, which time may, however, upon application, be extended by the Secretary if the completion of the application for lease has been prevented by unusual weather conditions or by some special or peculiar cause beyond the control of the permittee, the tenure of the proposed lease and the charges or rentals to be collected thereunder to be specified in said preliminary permit, and such permittee upon filing an application for lease prior to the expiration of the permit period shall be entitled to a preference right to lease the lands embraced in the permit upon the terms, conditions, and limitations authorized by this act.

SEC. 2. That each lease made in pursuance of this act shall provide for the diligent, orderly, and reasonable development and continuous operation of the water power, subject to market conditions, and may provide that the lessee shall at no time, without the consent of the Secretary of the Interior, contract for the delivery to any one consumer of electrical energy in excess of 50 per cent of the total output.

SEC. 3. That in case of the development, generation, transmission, and use of power or energy under such a lease in a Territory, or in two or more States, the regulation and control of service and of charges for service to consumers and of the issuance of stock and bonds by the lessee is hereby conferred upon the Secretary of the Interior or committed to such body as may be provided by Federal statute: Provided, That the physical combination of plants or lines for the generation, distribution, and use of power or energy under this act or under leases given hereunder may be permitted, in the discretion of the Secretary, but combinations, agreements, arrangements, or understandings, express or implied, to limit the output of electrical energy, to restrain trade with foreign nations or between two or more States or within any one State, or to fix, maintain, or increase prices for electrical energy or service is hereby forbidden.

SEC. 4. That except upon the written consent of the Secretary of the Interior no sale or delivery of power shall be made to a distributing company, except in case of an emergency and then only for a period not exceeding 30 days, nor shall any lease issued under this act be assignable or transferable without such written consent: Provided, however, That nothing herein contained shall preclude lessees from executing mortgages or trust deeds for the purpose of financing the project. Any successor or assign of such property or project, whether by voluntary transfer, judicial sale, foreclosure sale, or otherwise, shall be subject to all the conditions of the approval under which such rights are held, and also subject to all the provisions and conditions of this act to the same extent as though such successor or assign were the original lessee hereunder.

SEC. 5. That upon not less than three years' notice prior to the expiration of any lease under this act the United States shall have the right to take over the properties which are dependent, in whole or in part, for their usefulness on the continuance of the lease herein provided for, and which may have been acquired by any lessee acting under the provisions of this act, upon condition that it shall pay, before taking possession, first, the actual costs of rights of way, water rights, lands, and interests therein purchased and used by the lessee in the generation and distribution of electrical energy under the lease; and, second, the reasonable value of all other property taken over, including structures and fixtures acquired, erected, or placed upon the lands and included in the generation or distribution plant, and which are dependent as hereinabove set forth, such reasonable value to be determined by mutual agreement between the Secretary of the Interior and the lessee, and, in case they can not agree, by proceedings instituted in the United States circuit court for that purpose: Provided, That such reasonable value shall not include or be affected by the value of the franchise or good will or profits to be earned on pending contracts or any other intangible element.

SEC. 6. That in the event the United States does not exercise its right to take over, maintain, and operate the properties as provided in section 5 hereof, or does not renew the lease of the original lessee upon such terms and conditions and for such periods as may be authorized under the then existing applicable laws, the Secretary of the Interior is authorized, upon the expiration of any lease under this act, to lease the properties of the original lessee to a new lessee upon such terms, under such conditions, and for such periods as applicable laws may then authorize, and upon the further condition that the new lessee shall pay for the properties as provided in section 5 of this act.

SEC. 7. That where, in the judgment of the Secretary of the Interior, the public interest requires or justifies the execution by any lessee of contracts for the sale and delivery of electrical energy for periods extending beyond the life of the lease, such contracts may be entered into upon the approval of the said Secretary, and thereafter in the event of the exercise by the United States of the option to take over the plant in the manner provided in sections 5 or 6 hereof, the United States or its new lessee shall assume and fulfill all such contracts entered into by the first lessee.

SEC. 8. That for the occupancy and use of lands and other property of the United States permitted under this act the Secretary of the Interior is authorized to specify in the lease and to collect charges or rentals for all power developed and sold or used by the lessee for any purpose other than the operation of the plant, and the proceeds shall be paid into, reserved, and appropriated as a part of the reclamation fund created by the act of Congress approved June 17, 1902, known as the reclamation act, and after use thereof in the construction of reclamation works and upon return to the reclamation fund of any such moneys in the manner provided by the reclamation act and acts amendatory thereof and supplemental thereof, 50 per cent of the amounts so utilized in and returned to the reclamation fund shall be paid by the Secretary of the Treasury after the expiration of each fiscal year to the State within the boundaries of which the hydroelectric power or energy is generated and developed, said moneys to be used by such State for the support of public schools or other educational institutions or for the construction of public improvements, or both, as the legislature of the State may direct: Provided, That leases for the development of power by municipal corporations solely for municipal use shall be issued without rental charge, and that leases for development of power not in excess of 25 horsepower may be issued to individuals or associations for domestic, mining, or irrigation use without such charge.

SEC. 9. That in case of the development, generation, transmission, or use of power or energy under a lease given under this act in a State which has not provided a commission or other authority having power to regulate rates and service of electrical energy and the issuance of stock and bonds by public utility corporations engaged in power development, transmission, and distribution, the control of service and of charges for service to consumers and stock and bond issues shall be vested in the Secretary of the Interior or committed to such body as may be authorized by Federal statute until such time as the State shall provide a commission or other authority for such regulation and control.

SEC. 10. That where the Secretary of the Interior shall determine that the value of any lands, heretofore or hereafter reserved as water-power sites or for purposes in connection with water-power development or electrical transmission, will not be materially injured for such purposes by either location, entry, or disposal, the same may be allowed under applicable land laws upon the express condition that all such locations, entries, or other methods of disposal shall be subject to the sole right of the United States and its authorized lessees or grantees to enter upon, occupy, and use any part or all of such lands reasonably necessary for the accomplishment of all purposes connected with the development, generation, transmission, or utilization of power or energy, and all rights acquired in such lands shall be subject to a reservation of such sole right to the United States, its lessees or grantees, which reservation shall be expressed in the patent or other evidence of title: Provided, That locations, entries, selections, or filings heretofore allowed for lands reserved as water-power sites or in connection with water-power development or electrical transmission may proceed to approval or patent under and subject to the limitations and conditions in this section contained, but nothing herein shall be construed to deny or abridge rights now granted by law to those seeking to use the public lands for purposes of irrigation or mining alone.

SEC. 11. That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to examine books and accounts of lessees, and to require them to submit statements, representations, or reports, including information as to cost of water rights, lands, easements, and other property acquired, production, use, distribution, and sale of energy, all of which statements, representations, or reports so required shall be upon oath, unless otherwise specified, and in such form and upon such blanks as the Secretary of the Interior may require; and any person making any false statement, representations, or report under oath shall be subject to punishment as for perjury.

SEC. 12. That any such lease may be forfeited and canceled, by appropriate proceedings, in a court of competent jurisdiction whenever the lessee, after reasonable notice, in writing, as prescribed in the lease, shall fail to comply with the terms of this act or with such conditions not inconsistent herewith as may be specifically recited in the lease.

SEC. 13. That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to perform any and all acts and to make such rules and regulations as may be necessary and proper for the purpose of carrying the provisions of this act into full force and effect.

SEC. 14. That nothing in this act shall be construed as affecting or intended to affect or to in any way interfere with the laws of any State relating to the control, appropriation, use, or distribution of water used in irrigation or for municipal or other uses, or any vested right acquired thereunder.

SEC. 15. That all acts or parts of acts providing for the use of the lands of the United States for any of the purposes to which this act is applicable are hereby repealed to the extent only of any conflict with this act: Provided, however, That the provisions of the act of February 15, 1901 (31 Stat. L., 790), shall continue in full force and effect as to lands within the Yosemite, Sequoia, and General Grant National Parks in the State of California: And provided further, That the provisions of this act shall not be construed as revoking or affecting any permits or valid existing rights of way heretofore given or granted pursuant to law, but at the option of the permittee any permit heretofore given for the development, generation, transmission, or utilization of hydroelectric power may be surrendered and the permittee given a lease for the same premises under the provisions of this act.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE].

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Chairman, I shall ask the indulgence of the House for a few moments while I digress from the bill under consideration to speak briefly of the bill to amend the navigation laws, upon which, if the newspaper reports are to be relied upon, the conferees came to an agreement last night. The bill to which I refer, H. R. 18202, "An act to provide for the admission of foreign-built ships to American registry for the foreign trade, and for other purposes," was introduced at the opening of the European war, at the instance of the President of the United States, as explained by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD]. It proposes to waive certain laws affecting coastwise and foreign-trade vessels and to suspend those laws as they protect American shipping, in the interest of those who care to take their money out of the United States to buy foreign vessels and ply them in the foreign trade. We were told when this bill came up for hurried consideration that it was wholly an emergency measure; that it was intended to meet conditions that had suddenly arisen; that it was due to the fact that there was a stoppage of exports; that it was absolutely necessary, if our great crops in the West and our great cotton output in the South were to be shipped to foreign ports. Some of us saw in it a lesson for the people who are interested in the general progress of the United States. We saw in it a rebuke to those who have thus far prevented the upbuilding of an American merchant marine. We saw in it a confession of the party in power——

Mr. DONOVAN. Mr. Chairman, a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. DONOVAN. Under the rules nothing but the subject contained in the bill is to be discussed.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Pennsylvania may proceed, inasmuch as his time already has been allotted.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] in the 10 minutes yielded to him may discuss other matters than those mentioned in the bill under consideration. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. MOORE. We saw in the introduction of this bill an explanation and an admission by the party in power that this Government had not provided against just such an emergency as had arisen and that it was necessary from its point of view to invoke the aid of foreign shipbuilders, of foreign workmen, and of foreign seamen to carry American business upon the high seas.

Mr. SELDOMRIDGE. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. MOORE. I have only 10 minutes, but I will yield to the gentleman from Colorado.

Mr. SELDOMRIDGE. I will ask the gentleman if he is not bringing an indictment against his own party in that statement after 16 years of power in this country?

Mr. MOORE. No; because whenever the Republican Party attempted to pass a bill to upbuild the American merchant marine, a bill that you called a subsidy bill or a subvention bill, the Democratic Party invariably, with such assistance as it could get elsewhere, voted the proposition down.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORE. Yes.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. I call the gentleman's attention to the fact that since he has been a Member of the House, I think, the House passed a bill for a merchant marine, to remedy this very condition. It went to the Senate and was filibustered to death by two Democratic Senators.

Mr. MOORE. That is true. I am glad of the interruption of the gentleman from Colorado, since he is a useful new Member of this House and will need this kind of information as he goes along here in his congressional career. So, Mr. Chairman, the introduction of this bill and the explanation of it was a confession by the party now in power that it was unable to meet an emergency when an emergency arose.

Mr. CLINE. Will the gentleman yield for a short question?

Mr. MOORE. Yes; and then I think I will have to decline.

Mr. CLINE. Did not your party in the Sixtieth Congress lose that bill to permit the merchant marine by three votes?

Mr. MOORE. With the assistance of the Democrats who voted against the proposition.

Mr. CLINE. You were in control of the House.

Mr. MOORE. We were not in absolute control or we would have put it through. But the leader of your party in supporting this bill admitted on the floor that he came direct from the White House and at the instance of the President. He was compelled to state that an emergency had arisen, such an emergency as we were unable to meet with American resources. When the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. ALEXANDER] was on his feet this occurred:

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?
Mr. ALEXANDER. I will.
Mr. MOORE. I assume that this is an emergency measure.
Mr. ALEXANDER. Yes.
Mr. MOORE. We can not obtain copies of the bill, and therefore we must depend very largely upon the gentleman for information; but I would like to ask the gentleman just what the emergency is, since the passage of this bill, which seems to embody substantive law, makes a very radical change in existing law.
Mr. ALEXANDER. I will say to the gentleman if he was here when I read the telegrams——
Mr. MOORE. I heard part of what the gentleman said, but there was so much confusion I could not hear it all.
Mr. MURDOCK. There was a great deal of confusion.
Mr. ALEXANDER. I read telegrams from the American Exporter, of New York, a publication which undertakes to reflect the views of exporters and manufacturers. I also read telegrams from Chicago saying that this legislation is necessary on account of the present congestion of traffic; in other words, to move our manufactures, cotton, and grain to foreign countries. One of the great difficulties in the financial situation grows out of the congestion of our foreign commerce occasioned by the war in Europe and the interruption of the normal course and channels of trade, and it is absolutely necessary to make some provision to move our commerce.
The gentleman knows that 92 per cent of our commerce is carried in foreign ships. Now, the condition of war existing in Europe has partially paralyzed our foreign trade, and unless some provision is made to move our cotton and wheat and other exports in the ships of other neutral nations, or in ships under the American flag, we are going to suffer a very great loss.
Mr. MOORE. Assuming that the condition of war that now prevails in Europe will prevent the use by American exporters of such ships as now sail under foreign flags, and that we will be thrown upon our own resources in the American merchant marine for the carrying of cotton, grain, etc., why should we pass a measure of this kind that will change substantive law when only an emergency prevails? Why should there not be some limitation upon the discretion of the President? For instance, he is given discretion here——
Mr. ALEXANDER. He is simply given discretion in reference to officers, foreign officers on the ships, and inspection and the measurement of ships.
Mr. MOORE. I think the gentleman will see that very large questions of shipbuilding and of wages paid to labor are involved here, and will be involved permanently if we adopt this legislation by reason of war conditions in Europe. Why should we pass a permanent law to meet an emergency?
Mr. ALEXANDER. I do not think it will affect these questions materially. In fact, I am not so certain that this bill will in any substantial way build up the American merchant marine, as far as that is concerned.

The gentleman from Missouri was unable through lack of time and a desire to pass this bill to answer certain further questions, but later on I introduced the matter in a five-minute statement, whereupon the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD], the leader of the Democratic Party, who spoke for the President in this particular instance, undertook to explain, and he did explain, that the President had called in the leaders and had asked that some such measure as this be enacted at once. That part of the RECORD which pertains to this matter is as follows:

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, does the gentleman desire to have his question answered?
Mr. MOORE. Yes.
Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I will state to the gentleman that on last Friday the President of the United States requested me to investigate this situation and report the facts to him in a bill. Judge ALEXANDER and myself conferred with Mr. Chamberlain, the head of the Navigation Bureau of the Commerce Department, and this bill was prepared by Mr. Chamberlain in accordance with the suggestions that Judge ALEXANDER and myself made to him. Subsequently, after it was prepared, it was submitted to the President as it now stands and was drawn and met with his entire approval, and he authorized me to say that he desires its passage.
Mr. MOORE. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman very much for that statement and would ask him this further question, whether his view of this bill is that it is an emergency bill, pure and simple?
Mr. UNDERWOOD. Absolutely, so intended.

Now, a little later the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] made a great speech urging the passage of this bill, its immediate passage, and in the course of that speech he presented figures and statistics which indicated that this was something more than an emergency measure; that it was intended, by the purchase of foreign ships, and the introduction of foreign labor at foreign prices, and the introduction of foreign conditions that would prevail in regard to these ships, to build up an American merchant marine. Whether the party leaders in the House intended the measure to make permanent legislation or not the House passed the bill, and it went to the Senate.

Certain amendments were there proposed to the bill which unquestionably suggested permanent law. Then conferees were appointed, and those conferees—if we are to believe the newspapers this morning, those conferees included the leader of the Democratic Party, who was named especially for this occasion—have come to an understanding that certain objectionable Senate amendments shall go out; but one all-important amendment is to go in, and whether it be constitutional or in accordance with the rules to originate this kind of business in conference, this new amendment, which stands for no shilly-shallying, no beating around the bush, about an emergency, provides that for two years any foreign ship, built by foreign labor, manned by foreign officers and sailors, may come into the coastwise trade of the United States, sail from port to port in the United States, and drive out whatever American merchant marine is still left, thus engaging in a competitive, if not a destructive, coastwise business from port to port.

So far as we hear, the conferees have not objected to that part of the bill which provides that at his discretion the President may suspend the navigation laws, and that he may accept foreign-built ships, and that they may receive American registry, and that they may employ foreign officers and foreign crews at foreign wages. But these ships—if this amendment as reported is agreed to—shall come into the coastwise trade; they are to come in under the American flag, under foreign conditions, with men paid foreign wages, under foreign registry, under foreign survey, under foreign inspection, under foreign measurement; every one of which conditions sets up the European standard against that of the United States, and denies to the American merchantman, and to the shipper upon the Atlantic, or the Pacific, or the Gulf, or the Great Lakes, the advantage that would thus be accorded to foreign competitors.

Thus upon the ground of emergency we are asked to permit foreign ships and foreign conditions to come in and take away our business and our right to the carrying trade on our own coasts.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend and revise my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the gentleman's request?

There was no objection.

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Chairman, under the guise of an emergency due to a foreign war which has taken away from the American export trade nearly all of the foreign ships that have dominated it, should we pass a law depriving American ships of the protection they now have in the coastwise trade? True, there are certain representatives of export districts who would like to have foreign ships permitted to enter the coastwise trade, but is this the way and is this the time to tell American shipbuilders to quit business? The problem we have been asked to face as an emergency is the getting into foreign countries our surplus cotton and grain. I regret to say that most of the opposition to the upbuilding of an American merchant marine by mail subsidy or otherwise has come from this very class of exporters. They have good customers in foreign countries, but they find themselves suddenly bereft of their foreign market, because, an emergency having arisen and they themselves having defeated our prospects for an American merchant marine, the support of foreign vessels has been withdrawn from them. Their appeal as it came through the President and the Democratic leaders was for relief through the purchase of foreign vessels and their temporary use in carrying cotton and grain to belligerent countries. Thus far their appeal to maintain their foreign trade has not met with very great resistance.

There has been much sympathy with the emergency movement to obtain ships to prevent a glut of cotton and corn in the American market. But now, after the lapse of days and a deliberate and seemingly unwarranted increase in the cost of food supplies within the United States, we are asked to incorporate in this so-called emergency bill to relieve the export trade provision that foreign ships, if owned by Americans, may enter into our own coastwise trade, and, bringing foreign officers and crews and every other foreign advantage with them, enter into direct competition with our own vessels, our own officers, our own crews, and our own methods of doing business. When the facts are understood by the people I do not believe they will approve this legislation. In the first place, foreign surveys differ from American surveys, greatly to the advantage of the foreigner. So it is with inspection cost and with measurements. If we accept the foreign standards in these respects, our own conditions must be lowered to meet the competition. We pay our officers and our seamen more than the foreigners pay. If we admit these foreign ships on foreign terms, there can be no equality of compensation or wages that will not degrade the American standards. Under these circumstances it is doubtful if Americans can be induced to further invest in American shipyards. Indeed, it is doubtful if American shipyards can thrive at all if this bill passes. The conditions are too unequal, and the consequences would fall most heavily upon the labor that is now employed in shipbuilding and allied industries. In Cramp's shipyard, in my district, and in the New York Shipbuilding Co.'s plant, across the Delaware River, probably 10,000 men are employed. They support at least 50,000 people. They could not do that in competition with the workmen who build ships in England or in Germany or in any one of the European countries. The problem is a serious one. Indeed, it is a grave question whether in our desire to meet an emergency in the export trade we are warranted in driving our own shipyards out of business and placing foreigners only in control of our coastwise trade.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Washington [Mr. BRYAN].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Washington [Mr. BRYAN] is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. Chairman, I for one am very glad to know that these bills are being taken up and being acted upon by this Congress. I am thankful that the situation is such as to permit this Congress to pay as much attention as it has paid to some of our western propositions. This Congress has already appropriated $35,000,000 for the building of a railroad in Alaska to develop that Territory along the line and idea of the conservationist program, and we are glad for that.

Already the reclamation extension bill, which is one of the four selected measures, has been considered and passed by the House, giving an extension of time to those who are living on the reclamation projects of the West, and we are very glad for that.

This bill that is now pending enlarges somewhat the privileges under which the rights of the Government may be absorbed by private parties in the great West and utilized for the purpose of upbuilding and developing the industries and enriching the people of that great region. We are glad of this.

We do not hesitate for one moment to recognize and applaud the ownership of the Federal Government. We do not object because the Federal Government and not private parties own them. As we go mile after mile over the timber domain of western Washington and find vast tracts, about five times as much in private ownership as there is in public ownership, we feel a little tinge of pride and a stir of patriotism when we come to the land that belongs to the United States Government and get away from that which belongs to the Weyerhaeusers and the Guggenheims.

Gentlemen here can not touch this subject without reaching out to that billion dollars' worth of Government timber. They want to get it into the hands of a private interest; then, and then only, will they be satisfied. They use the argument, no doubt, that if put into private ownership it will pay some taxes to the State. But I notice that the Weyerhaeusers do not give away their timberland in order to save taxes; and I notice that in the State of Colorado, represented in part by the gentleman [Mr. TAYLOR] who has spoken this morning, and who complains about Federal espionage over the affairs of his State, the right and power and control of John D. Rockefeller does not help the people out there in the payment of their taxes. In States where we have to recognize a Federal bureau the people do not chafe nearly so much under that Federal bureau as they would if there was a regiment of United States Regulars there trying to make us act decently. So I say we are glad to have the Federal Government maintain a strong hold on the property that it owns. We are glad to have the Government let that property be leased on terms to private parties and take it back again when it wants to and handle it for the use and benefit of the people, but we do not want to part with title to it.

When the last National Conservation Congress was held here and a resolution was passed embodying those principles, I am very sorry to say that the delegation from my State voted against the resolution and, as I understand, formed a kind of rump convention and went over to another hotel and tried to organize a new association. One of my colleagues was a delegate to that convention, and he is opposing, and consistently opposing, that proposition to-day. I do not question his sincerity. He is sincere. He does not like that plan at all.

The following is the resolution which brought on the division:

Whereas concentrated monopolistic control of water power in private hands is swiftly increasing in the United States, and far more rapidly than public control thereof; and

Whereas this concentrating, if it is fostered, as in the past, by outright grants of public powers in perpetuity, will inevitably result in a highly monopolistic control of mechanical power, one of the bases of modern civilization and a prime factor in the cost of living: Therefore be it

Resolved, That we recognize the firm and effective public control of water-power corporations as a pressing and immediate necessity urgently required in the public interest;

That we recognize that there is no restraint so complete, effective, and permanent as that which comes from firmly retained public ownership of the power site;

That it is, therefore, the solemn judgment of the Fifth National Conservation Congress that hereafter no water power now owned or controlled by the public should be sold, granted, or given away in perpetuity, or in any manner removed from the public ownership, which alone can give sound basis of assured and permanent control in the interest of the people.

But the Democratic Party, if it fears the result of the next election, need not fear the people of the State of Washington on account of this legislation, because Congress refuses to give these public resources away. If the Democratic Party loses out in the West, that will not be the reason why it is driven out of power. Not at all.

Recently I received from the Commercial Club of Seattle a resolution, which I will incorporate in my remarks, suggesting a little more liberality in the matter of terms, so that anyone who goes on the public lands to invest should understand that he would have it for a definite period of time and be given opportunity to make some development and a definite investment. This is the resolution:

Resolution passed by the Seattle Commercial Club June 16, 1914.

Be it resolved, That the Seattle Commercial Club respectfully urge upon Congress the necessity of passing water-power legislation at this session of Congress, of such nature as, while protecting the public interest, shall make it possible to secure capital for development purposes, and establish a definite and comprehensive policy for the utilization of water powers under Government control.

Be it resolved, That copies of this resolution be sent to the President of the United States, to the Speaker of the House, to the Secretaries of War and of the Interior, to the Senate Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation of Arid Lands, to the House Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, and to Members of the United States Senate and House of Representatives from the Rocky Mountain and Pacific Coast States.

Be it further resolved, That copies of this resolution be sent to the commercial bodies of Spokane, Tacoma, Portland, San Francisco, and Los Angeles asking their cooperation in this matter.

SEATTLE COMMERCIAL CLUB.

I received recently a letter containing a resolution passed by the governors, signed, among others, by Gov. Ammon, of Colorado. He, of course, takes a somewhat different view. The resolution reads as follows:

STATE OF COLORADO,
EXECUTIVE OFFICE,
Denver, April 14, 1914.

Hon. JAMES W. BRYAN,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. BRYAN: It has been reported to me that the resolution pertaining to the water powers of the West, unanimously adopted by the Western Governors' Conference in session in Denver April 7 to 11, was omitted from the eastern press reports. Inasmuch as this was one of the most important of the resolutions adopted by the conference and one in which great interest was taken, I give you below a copy of the same for your information:

"Whereas Congress has declared 'The water of all lakes, rivers, and other sources of water supply upon the public lands and not navigable shall remain and be held free for the appropriation and use of the public for irrigation, mining, and manufacturing purposes,' we insist the Federal Government has no lawful authority to exercise control over the water of a State through ownership of public lands.

"We maintain the waters of a State belong to the people of the State, and that the States should be left free to develop water-power possibilities and should receive fully the revenues and other benefits derived from such development."

Yours, very truly,

E. M. AMMON,
Secretary Western Governors' Conference.

This great Nation is a great big family. The interest of one is the interest of all. We delight in Federal aid in the reclamation of the arid lands, and we are glad to have the aid of the Federal Government in this matter of retaining and holding intact the priceless resources now remaining in coal, timber, minerals, and water power.

Senator SHAFROTH, of Colorado, speaking at the Fifth Annual Conservation Congress at the New Willard Hotel last November, said:

We—

The people of Colorado—

contribute to the defense of the Nation in the way of harbor fortifications, and we do not get any of that back. We are in a position where we are not benefited except in a national sense. We are proud of our Nation because it is ours. We are not benefited, I say, except in a national sense, because Colorado is so far off that no army on earth could ever reach it.

And the record says the people greeted this with laughter.

A few months have passed and now a great European war has emphasized not merely the federation of the States but the federation of the world. Colorado to-day needs the use of boats and harbors precisely as much as do the seaboard States, and as to the Army, Colorado and Vera Cruz are the only areas in the world where the Army of the United States is finding active service.

The letter from Gov. Ammons begging to be delivered from Federal control stands out in contrast with his request to the President for troops to save the people from the iniquities developed under alien private control of coal and mineral lands in the very State of Colorado.

THE PROPOSITION OF WASTE IS RELATIVE.

Great stress is laid on the statement that much water power is going to waste, but is it not just as well for this to continue to go to waste a little while longer as for Boston capitalists to acquire it forever? Forever is a long time. The amount of profits these gentlemen can have must be regulated. The way to effectively regulate them is to hold fast to the fee, to the title. It has already been shown that water-power development is almost unprecedented in this country. There is development. I would like to see such development stimulated, but I will not vote for any measure to give away, but insist on retaining in public ownership this valuable asset.

The people of my State do not fear the Federal Government. Quite recently there was published in the Seattle Sun an article setting forth an announcement made by Stanton G. Smith, United States forest supervisor, detailing a splendid gift to the people of Everett, Wash., and vicinity, in the form of watershed and water-power rights of almost inestimable value. Such gift would have been impossible except for conservation policies which have prevented alien investors from grabbing these assets. Here is the statement of Mr. Smith:

The city of Everett has just executed a cooperative agreement with the Secretary of Agriculture whereby it obtains, free of charge, the use of the entire Boulder River watershed within the Snoqualmie National Forest. This is the culmination of a long search on the part of the city for a satisfactory water supply, during which all important streams in the region were considered.

The Boulder River watershed embraces more than 13,000 acres of national forest land, extending from the summits of Three Fingers, Whitehorse, and Meadow Mountains down to the lowlands near Hazel, Wash., where the intake of the city pipe line will be located. Forest officers and hunters of big game occasionally penetrate this region. Aside from these, few persons have ever been into this rugged basin, which is practically an unbroken wilderness, isolated by its inaccessibility, and therefore an ideal site from which to obtain a city water supply. Under proper administration there is no danger that the water will become contaminated.

SITE FOR POWER PLANT.

Besides furnishing city water, there is also a possibility for the generation of electricity in a municipal power plant.

By the terms of this cooperative agreement, the Forest Service will continue to patrol and protect this watershed from fire and trespass. The forestry men will report any violations of the city's sanitary regulations on the watershed, as well as any other conditions they observe which seem in any way to tend to contaminate the water.

Trails and telephone lines necessary for the administration of the watershed will be constructed by the Government at no expense to the city. The Forest Service will also plant up any open areas capable of bearing a stand of timber. The primary object of such reforestation is to provide a complete forest cover to prevent sediment being washed into the streams and regulate the run-off, thus making the flow more uniform throughout the year.

The Government carefully supervises all operations conducted upon the watershed and will issue no permits for any purpose that shall in any way threaten the purity of the water. No settlement under the forest homestead act will be allowed by the Government while this agreement is in force.

There are already 1,145 cities and towns in the United States which derive their water supply from the national forests. The protection of the headwaters of important streams is one of the objects for which national forests were established, and the Forest Service, in keeping with this object, welcomes the cooperation of cities in protecting the regions from which their water supply is drawn when that region is a part of a national forest.

By entering into a cooperative agreement of this sort Everett will secure an excellent supply of water for city use and power purposes without the heavy initial expense of actually purchasing the land and the constant heavy expense of protecting it from fire and trespass. In 1909 Seattle, unlike Everett, took steps toward the actual purchase of the Government land in Cedar River watershed, the source of her water supply. This purchase, which would require an investment of a half million dollars, has not yet been consummated, and the great economy made possible through a cooperative agreement with the Government has been brought to its attention. It is expected that several other Sound cities will enter into such agreements as soon as they outgrow their present water supply.

The average citizen in the State of Washington is proud of the fact that he owns part interest in the forest reserves, and the men who fail to recognize that fact are reckoning without their host. Do the workers and others in the East take any pride in the railroad-owned coal mines of Pennsylvania and West Virginia?

I noticed in the New York American of May 8 last the following statement:

COAL DEALERS OF CITY COMBINE TO "FOSTER TRADE."

A combine of the biggest coal dealers of this city was sanctioned yesterday by Supreme Court Justice Davis, in granting a certificate of incorporation to the Coal Merchants' Association.

Nothing is said in the articles of incorporation as to the effect that this association will have on the price of coal next fall, but there is a statement that the dealers have organized "to foster trade and commerce." The articles of incorporation read:

"To foster trade and commerce; to reform abuses relative thereto; to secure freedom from unjust and unlawful exactions; to diffuse accurate and reliable information as to the standing of merchants, other people, and other matters; to procure uniformity and certainty in customs and usage in the retail coal, wood, and fuel business; to settle differences between members; and to promote a friendly interest among those engaged in the said business."

The directors are Michael F. Burns, No. 16 East Sixty-third Street; Grove D. Curtis, No. 512 West Fifty-eighth Street; Olin J. Stephens, No. 125 East One hundred and forty-sixth Street; Thomas F. Farrel, No. 147 West Ninety-seventh Street; Warren A. Leonard, No. 593 Riverside Drive; George J. Eltz, No. 441 West Forty-seventh Street; Frederick H. Willenbrock, Yonkers; John J. Garden, Bozota, N. J.; John W. Bellis, Oradell, N. J.; Theodore S. Trimmer, Mount Vernon; Frederick Rheinfrand, No. 306 West One hundred and second Street; H. L. Herbert, Lakewood, N. J.

What is probably the most striking argument in favor of national conservation of public lands is from the report of the Bureau of Corporations made to the President.

Concentration of timberlands in the United States in the hands of a few owners is discussed at length in the second and third parts of the report of the Bureau of Corporations on the lumber industry submitted to President Wilson by Commissioner Davies.

Two men hold 49 per cent of the timber in southwestern Washington, the report says; 5 men hold 36 per cent in western Oregon; 6 have 70 per cent in northeastern California; 10 have more than half of the redwood area; and in north central Idaho 4 holders have 50 per cent.

The main fact shown is that 1,694 timber owners hold in fee over one-twentieth of the land area of the entire United States, from the Canadian line to the Mexican border. In many States of the 900 timbered counties investigated they own one-seventh of the area.

These 1,694 holders own 105,600,000 acres. This is an area four-fifths the size of France, or greater than the entire State of California, or more than two and one-half times the land area of the six New England States. Sixteen holders own 47,000,000 acres, or ten times the land area of New Jersey. Three land-grant railroads own enough to give 15 acres to every male of voting age in the nine western States, where almost all their holdings lie.

Moreover, the States appear to have disposed of the various Federal grants made to them in such a way as to contribute to the concentration of land and timber ownership. Florida is a striking example of this.

The people have learned their lessons, and there is no chance for the men who want to grab these resources under the old plan. We want development, but we will not release our hold on the title to these remaining resources.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. Chairman, I yield the remaining time on this side to the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. BURKE].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. BURKE] is recognized for 20 minutes.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I can not support this bill, and I do not intend to vote for some of the other bills that will be considered under the program adopted by the special rule making in order certain bills known as conservation measures. I am not going to discuss the details of this bill. As stated by the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. TAYLOR], the bill, in the main, is undoubtedly a good measure and has been well and carefully considered by the able Committee on the Public Lands. I am opposed to the bill because I am not in favor of the policy that this kind of legislation proposes.

In order that my position may not be misunderstood, I want to say that I am in favor of real conservation, conservation that means the least practicable waste consistent with the greatest practicable use. I am opposed to monopoly in any form, but I believe monopoly can be controlled, if not prevented, by legislation declaring certain combinations of capital and acts unlawful, and by providing severe penalties for violations of the law, and that it is quite within the power of each State to suppress or destroy monopolies within its borders, and particularly so far as controlling and regulating its natural resources are concerned.

I am opposed to any policy that contemplates the leasing for a considerable period any portion of the public domain for any purpose, believing that it is in conflict with the theory of the policy that has heretofore obtained in the United States, which has been to pass the public lands and national resources into private ownership, thereby subjecting them to taxation within the State where located, which is fundamentally essential if the State is to prosper.

The conservation advocated by those who assert that they are the only true friends of conservation contemplates that the Federal Government shall retain and control all the natural resources, which can only result in a powerful bureaucratic policy, carrying with it innumerable positions with large salaries and perquisites and affording opportunities for unlimited graft.

An article recently appeared in a publication known as Mining Science, by Mr. Chester T. Kennon, a mining engineer, who resides in Colorado, and it being apparent that he has given the subject close study, and believing that what he has said is appropriate at this time, I will read the article, and I invite the careful attention of the House to what Mr. Kennon says:

"PREDATORY BUREAUCRATS AND THE LEASING SYSTEM.

"[Chester T. Kennan, M. E.]

"No system of true conservation or good government requires that our citizens be made tenantry of a governmental landlord.

"The land and natural resources alone make possible industrial and commercial existence of the individual State; they constitute its first capital and stock in trade, upon which it must conduct its business and development and maintain a government 'republican in form,' as required by its act of admission as a State.

"The right of taxation is so necessary and fundamental that a sovereign State without it can not continue. To the latter imperative end, and to place the new States on an equal footing with the original States, and to provide that ours be a Nation of home owners, it has been this Nation's policy from the beginning to pass the public lands and national resources into private ownership, private control, and private development.

"It is the plain duty of every citizen to assert, and the courts to maintain, the sovereignty of the State in conformity with that article of the Federal Constitution which provides that 'the powers not delegated to the United States by the Constitution, nor prohibited by it to the States, are reserved to the States, respectively, or to the people.' It is, therefore, the manifest right of every citizen to demand government by the people rather than by bureaus of the Central Government; and in so far as the constitutional power of regulation in these respects is vested in the several States it is fundamental and imperative that it be not divested or invaded.

"The acts of Congress admitting the public-land States to the Union contain the declarations which are taken from the ordinance of July 13, 1787, including the following provision: 'The State of ——— shall be one and is hereby declared to be one of the United States of America, and admitted into the Union on an equal footing with the original States in all respects whatever.'

"It is also provided in such acts of admission of new States that 'they shall never lay any tax or assessment of any description whatever upon the public domain.'

"Neither the United States nor any State has the power to do any act or pass any law which will create inequality between the States, and any attempt on the part of either to do so is void and of no effect, ab initio. (39 Fed. Rep., 730; 9 Peters, 224; 15 Peters, 449; 104 U. S., 621; 146 U. S., 387; 152 U. S., 387; 164 U. S., 240; 168 U. S., 349; 176 U. S., 83, 87; 187 U. S., 479, 483; 190 U. S., 508, 519; 198 U. S., 371; 198 Fed. Rep., 539.)

"The United States alone has no power to create unequal States by Executive act, by law of Congress, or by judicial interpretation of those laws, and all of such attempts are void. (198 Fed. Rep., 539.)

"In 1845 the United States Supreme Court, in the case of Pollard's Lessee v. Hagan (3 How., 212), decided and laid down as fundamental law of the land 'that the transaction between the United States and Virginia and Georgia and the Louisiana Purchase constituted a contract and created a trust, under which the United States secured control of the public lands to pay the public debts by bona fide disposing of them in order that new States might be erected, which should be equal in every respect to the original States; that the United States holds the lands for temporary purposes only, and in trust for the States where they lie; and that until the lands were disposed of by the United States the new State was not on a footing of equality with the original States.'

"As late as May, 1911, the United States Supreme Court, in the case of Coyle v. Oklahoma (221 U. S., 559), quotes the above case of Pollard's Lessee v. Hagan with approval and reaffirms the perfect equality of the State in relation to the United States.

"The United States Government holds the public domain in trust (not in fee). What each citizen, therefore, owns in the public domain is his right to acquire a segment of it if he chooses so to do. Congress has no power to authorize the Central Government to seize the title in fee and perpetuity and rent the lands to the people.

"The status of our public-land system now is, and always has been, that the Central Government holds the public domain temporarily and in trust, to be erected into sovereign States upon an equal footing with the original States in every respect; to afford equal opportunity to every citizen to acquire a home; and to be disposed of at nominal prices to private ownership, in order that the Central Government might, as speedily as possible, retire as a landlord from the several States. The people have always emphasized that the Government should not hold the public lands, even in trust, any longer than absolutely necessary to systematically and equitably pass them to private ownership. The day has long gone by when it was thought right or justifiable that the king, government, ruling classes, or bureaucrats should own and control the land in perpetuity and rent it to the people.

"Under this beneficent, enlightened democratic land system we have reared the leading and most progressive Nation of the world.

"The bureaucrats, or 'conservationists'—under the latter alias they seem to prefer to operate—now demand that our established system of land tenure be subverted, and our form of government in a vital principle revolutionized.

"They are now conjuring Uncle Sam to be a traitor to his trust, to embezzle the 'trust fund,' to become the most royal, selfish landlord this world has ever witnessed, to seize soil within the States in perpetuity, free from taxation, to rent the land to his tenant vassals, to deny public-land States equality with the original States, to destroy their sovereignty, make them provinces, and draw a line around the western third of the United States and denominate it on the map, 'Ireland of America—doomed forever to fight for "home rule."'

"Manifestly, their scheme is not progressive, but reactionary at least 1,000 years.

"Any form of conservation which fails to take into account the rights and needs of the present generation evidently does not cover the whole field and has no place in this country.

"True conservation may be defined as the least practicable waste consistent with the greatest practicable use.

"Conservation is a technical and scientific subject, while the ownership and passing of title to the public land is a political and sociological subject, and the two have no necessary connection; yet, while sailing under the fair banner of 'conservation,' our bureaucrats have attempted to create and take over to themselves the most gigantic land monopoly this world has ever witnessed—already having under their control in forest reserves, withdrawals, etc., near 200,000,000 acres, an area greater than many kingdoms of Europe combined.

"An example of true conservation is presented by the management of our great stockyards, where every conceivable part of the slaughtered animal is saved and placed to a fitting use. The great modern coal-coking plants and large petroleum refineries are striking examples of conservation, by saving a vast number of by-products that would otherwise be wasted or not placed to their most valuable use. Every advance in metallurgical processes which enables us to more cheaply extract metals from their ores and thereby utilize lower grades of ore at a profit is a long step in the field of true conservation. Life-saving and labor-saving devices and the protection of property from destruction and waste by fire are legitimate and worthy forms of conservation.

"But unmindful of the truism so pertinently expressed by President Wilson, that 'conservation is not reservation,' our bureaucrats have practically ignored conservation and devoted all their energies to reservation, seeking to reserve under their own control all the public domain and its natural resources as against the public-land States and the people, until we are now burdened with the omnipresent forest reserves, park reserves, military reserves, naval reserves, coal reserves, water-power reserves, missionary reserves, Government reserves, school reserves, bird reserves, and archæological reserves, and then they withdrew practically all the balance of the desirable lands from market under the pretense of 'classification'; and now they are introducing bills in Congress to accomplish their final coup d'état by having the Government seize title to the public domain in fee and perpetuity, and lease it to the people, the bureaucrats at last firmly in the saddle as administrators of the grand feudal empire.

"During the sinister progress of this long-drawn-out campaign for bureaucratic autocracy the musty air of medieval tyranny has become ever thicker and more suffocating to western nostrils, consistently with their purpose, the most strenuous effort of the bureaucrats have been exerted to retain the public domain in a state of nature, to prevent development, and to prevent the public lands from passing to private ownership until such time as they could prevail upon Congress to have the central government seize the public domain in fee and rent it to the people and make the bureaucrats administrators of the vast estate.

"What coterie of politicians, pray, would not like to be administrators of such vast empire, with power, salaries, perquisites, patronage, and opportunities for graft unlimited?

"While each State has all the power to suppress or destroy monopoly within its borders that the central government has within its sphere, yet while striving to create the greatest land monopoly that ever existed, the most popular slogan of the bureaucrats has been that only their plan could prevent monopoly of the public domain. Even if we had no special statutes in this behalf, monopoly could be suppressed or destroyed under the common law of England.

"Would it not be timely and apropos for our lawmakers at Washington now, while they have their hands in at investigating and dissolving 'trusts,' to investigate this one, the greatest and most noxious of them all—the public-domain trust of the United States—now hatching on the floors of Congress?

"There appears to be no limit to the legislative power of these autocrats of the bureaus. They boldly occupy the 'twilight zone' between State rights and the rights and powers of the Central Government, and to enforce their bureau-made laws have inaugurated a reign of terrorism in the Western States through an organized army of many thousands of men, including forest rangers, petty officers, mineral examiners, general solicitors, special solicitors, attorneys, press agents, statisticians, common spies, muckrakers, lecturers, detectives, secret-service agents, affidavit gleaners, collectors of rents and bills and royalties, star-chamber courts, etc. While we are compelled to admit that the spy system of our bureaus is now the finest in all the world—not even that of Turkey or Russia excepted—in simple justice to the American people we are gratified to state that the people are not proud of it. We are bowed down with humiliation and shame that such a glaring example of monstrous tyranny and oppression has gained a foothold on American soil.

"We should not now turn our backs upon our enlightened form of government and, at the bidding of these purely political 'conservationists' for gain, retrace our steps to feudal times and conditions. We should not drift from the principle of encouraging the individual, the small owner, and the home, but if occasionally there are abuses, or men file upon land wrongfully, let the individual case be punished under the established laws of the land.

"Under the leasing system we would have the feudal condition of a portion of our citizens being freeholders and freemen and another portion being tenantry and serfs of the ruling landlord. We would then have on American soil the political spectacle of one portion of our citizens paying taxes to maintain an ancient form of government over another portion.

"The Western States hold that it is the just prerogative of each State in the Union to adopt such system of true conservation of the resources within its borders as may best suit the needs and purposes of its people, exercising therein such practical economy in behalf of future generations as may by each State be deemed wise and provident.

"As an illustration Gov. Ammons has well pointed out that the leasing system would mean, in effect, that Colorado would ultimately pay into the Federal Treasury on coal alone, figuring the present highest rate of royalty, the enormous tax of $37,100,000,000, while it would pay annually on water power alone, when fully developed, twice as much as it now collects in State taxes for all purposes.

"The people realize and keenly appreciate that there is a wide distinction between the act of two citizens equal under the law making a contract of lease between themselves and the ruling landlord, who is also the lawmaker, contracting or forcing a contract with his tribute payer under the law. It is a luminous fact in history familiar to all that whenever a government and its officials became vested with the resources of the people and their opportunities to make a living, the people were no longer free and that form of government was doomed to eventual, if not speedy, wreck.

"The experiment of governing people through the soil has been often tried, but never with ultimate success. The man who says it should now be tried, whatever he may call himself, is a socialist, pure and simple; but he is too late with his doctrine in this country, unless he proposes that Uncle Sam seize the title in fee to the whole area of the United States and lease it all, so that we shall all be on an equal footing. Abraham Lincoln said: 'Tell the people the truth, and the Nation is safe.'"

Mr. FERRIS. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. SELDOMRIDGE].

Mr. SELDOMRIDGE. Mr. Chairman, the platform of the Democratic Party in the State of Colorado in 1912 emphatically declared the opposition of the party to a policy that would extend and enlarge the control of the Federal Government over the natural resources of the State. That declaration was afterwards ratified and indorsed by the legislature of the State, in the form of a memorial addressed to the President and to this Congress. Many of the commercial organizations of the State, without regard to party, have united in protest against the continuation of a policy which leads to an increase and enlargement of Federal supervision of our natural resources. This bill and others to follow it are seeking to reconcile interests which have been and are now more or less antagonistic. We are trying to retain governmental ownership, governmental supervision, and governmental inspection over all the ramifications of operation and development of water-power sites, and at the same time we are trying to offer to private interests attractive inducements to embark in enterprises over which they will not have absolute control, so far as ownership is concerned.

Having lived for 35 years in the West, having witnessed the growth of my State from comparatively small beginnings but with unlimited resources to a State of most opulent wealth, of diversified resources, and of enlarging commerce and industrial activity, all of which have come from individual energy and the investment of private capital, I contend that there is not the necessity for this legislation that is said to exist.

I believe that these conservation measures, so called, will be enacted into law. I believe that the temper of the country has been so stimulated and exercised by those favoring enlargement of Federal power that opposition to these measures will prove unavailing. But those of us who are familiar with the conditions that exist in the States which are to be affected by their operation would certainly be derelict in our duty to our people if we did not register here our belief that this bill will be inoperative and ineffective, and will not accomplish the purposes for which it has been introduced, and for which its passage is advocated.

I am in hearty sympathy with the thought and purpose back of this bill, to increase development, to add to the wealth of the country, to bring about activity in all lines of industry and of agriculture; but, Mr. Chairman, I believe that a policy which seeks to control and circumscribe the activities of the individual, and to place a limit to his legitimate endeavor and industry, will not accomplish the end desired. When this bill is being considered under the five-minute rule I believe there will be amendments proposed that will improve the bill and make some of its provisions more liberal in their terms. We certainly desire that it will bring the results which its friends assert will follow its passage.

We heartily commend the efforts which are being made by the head of the Interior Department and the officials associated with him in its administration to wisely administer the great interests committed to that department. The westerner will join hands with his fellow citizens in other sections of the country to prevent in every way the monopolization of the natural resources of the country, but he has not reached the conclusion that this can only be prevented through continued governmental ownership and bureaucratic administration. Our experience with the conflicting jurisdictions of the various departments and the interminable delays in reaching conclusions in matters of individual and of somewhat minor importance justify the belief that where larger matters are involved affecting the interests of communities and States the processes of administration will be equally unsatisfactory. We desire to approach this matter sympathetically and without prejudice. We realize that we must be reconciled to the policy proposed in this and other bills. We will endeavor to work out our problems of development as best we can under limitations not of our choosing, and will cooperate to the fullest extent with those officials of the Government whose purpose it will be to interpret and administer this law. There has been a remarkable development of hydroelectric energy in the West under private agencies. Some of these private corporations have required the investment of millions of capital in the construction of their plants and equipment before receiving a dollar of revenue. Their rates are subject to State regulation and their property is subject to State and Federal taxation. It is proposed by this bill to lease water-power sites to corporations for a fixed term of 50 years, and during the period of the lease control and regulate the price of their product. Can there be open and free competition between corporations whose rights are only those of lessees and those who enjoy all the privileges that come with ownership and the opportunity to plan for increased future development? A lessee will not give to the property of another that same degree of care and development that he will give to his own. He is only concerned in keeping it up to meet his immediate purposes, and we have a right to expect under the provisions of this bill that plants operating under Government leases will only be operated with the minimum of expense and capital in view of the tenure of the lease and the regulations imposed. I will admit that it has been a difficult matter to frame a constructive measure of this character and keep it in line with so many divergent views. Time will demonstrate its necessity and experience will be the guide for future legislation affecting this great field of power development.

Mr. FERRIS. I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from New Mexico [Mr. FERGUSSON].

Mr. FERGUSSON. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, before referring to the notes of what I want to say I want briefly to refer to the point made by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN]. My respect for the integrity as well as the penetration of his mind gave me great concern when he made the point that the bill is shadowy on this important question of where the control is to be lodged, where it shall be under State control and where to be under Federal control. I have since carefully read both section 3 and section 9. Section 3 is devoted to the proposition of providing that Federal control shall be absolute where the power plant producing the hydroelectric power or any of its lines of distribution is in two or more States. To insure completely no uncertainty on that point, section 9 looks at it from the obverse standpoint, and is devoted to enacting the proposition that as to such plants with appropriate transmission lines as exist within one State the State shall have control, but the Federal power shall have control as to one State when that State has no machinery enacted by the State for the exercise of such power; and that as soon as such State provides for State control by State commission, say, the power passes from the Federal Government in such State to the machinery for control provided by such State, similar to State railroad commissions to-day for regulation of intrastate railroads.

This is such an important point in my mind that if the gentleman from Illinois or any other Member proposes an amendment to correct any uncertainty I will be very glad to support it. Perhaps the committee will do that. I want to say for the committee that we discussed that exhaustively and we concluded that the two sections taken together make it absolutely beyond any doubt; but if there is doubt, I will support any amendment that will make it as clear as anybody may desire.

Mr. Chairman, the main reason why I sought time to speak a few words upon this bill is this: The absolute necessity to do something. Our cities are crowded with people who want homes. There is absolutely no doubt that every measure that will tend to develop the great semiarid West and make it a populous and wealthy country ought to have the support of everyone in this House, whether he come from the West or from the East, and we ought to enact legislation that will tend to develop and populate the West. It is absolutely necessary to do that for the weal of the Nation, as well as the prosperity of the States of the mountainous West. Another reason is the question of the fact of conservation, and that it has come to stay. That is where I differ from my friend from Colorado [Mr. TAYLOR] and those others who say that they want all this matter of conservation to die, and they believe it will in 8 or 10 years. I differ wholly from that proposition. The lesson of the trusts and the monopolies that control such a large section of the oil-producing lands, the coal lands, and the timberlands, the sentiment that exists all over this country, that helped to split the Republican Party more than almost any other one thing, and that has animated the Democratic Party with such enthusiasm that it has captured the Government, is that private monopoly must be destroyed and such natural resources—hydroelectric power, coal, timber, and so forth—shall be held from private ownership and administered under Government control for the general good. The wrongs that private monopolies have perpetrated on the people, the suffering of one single man and his wife and family because of outrageous acts of the Coal Trust or others of the monopolies, have made it certain that conservation in the true sense of the word has come to stay.

That being true, all these resources yet owned by the Government, the lands controlling hydroelectric power, the lands containing coal, the timberlands belonging to the Government and not yet taken by the railroads and other corporations by a system of robbery that is almost incomprehensible, insures us that conservation is here, and the lessons taught by the frauds practiced to acquire such immense holdings will not be forgotten for generations to come. Therefore something must be done to make the remaining natural resources of use to the people. All of these power sites for the production of hydroelectric power have been withdrawn from private entry in pursuance of that conservation idea that is here to stay. All of the coal still belonging to the Government has been withdrawn from private entry for the same reason; all of the timber belonging to the Government has been withdrawn from private exploitation for the same reason. What greater question confronts the statesmen of this House than this?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FERGUSSON. Yes.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. The gentleman truthfully says that this is one of the greatest questions that confronts the House. Does he not think that it would be advisable to have a few more than 25 or 30 Members of Congress listening to him expound that question?

Mr. FERGUSSON. I will say that my embarrassment decreases in proportion to the number of Members present, if the gentleman desires to know.

Mr. FERRIS. Oh, I hope the gentleman will not make the point of order of no quorum, but will let us go through. We allowed two speeches on the other side that were outside of the rule, and no one made the point of order.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I am willing to leave it largely with the gentleman having the floor. If he feels that he ought to have a quorum here to listen to his statement of what he thinks is the most important bill before the House, I will undertake to get it.

Mr. FERGUSSON. I prefer to finish.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Very well.

Mr. FERGUSSON. Mr. Chairman, one of the main points that I want to call attention to is that not only must we enact some such law now, but that we have done our best in the Public Lands Committee to frame a law that will be satisfactory. For weeks and weeks and days and days we have heard all sides of the question. The whole public service in the Interior Department urges the passage of this bill. Something must be done. Leave it as it is; leave us in the West locked up from the proper use and development of our resources, or enact some such law as this.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Does not the gentleman think it fair to presume that the West has come to be absolutely locked up simply through the absence of a quorum in the House of Representatives at times in the past?

Mr. FERGUSSON. Oh, I beg the gentleman to allow me to finish. I will be through in a short time. I am not going to take the time allowed me by the chairman. There is necessity for this legislation. This is a great, new subject. I do not doubt that it is subject to criticism from such a mind as the minority leader exhibits daily on this floor. I do not doubt that there may be features that do not appeal fully to a great many men here, but it is a start. Take it up under the five-minute rule, and where it is defective we will help you fix it so that we may pass it.

Consider the great blessing that it will be. There are mines of gold and copper all over the West that can not be developed because the grade of the ore is too low to admit of the kind of expense necessary—$20 a foot to sink a shaft in a gold or silver vein when the power has to come either from the miner driving his drill by hand or from power produced by burning coal, with longer drills. Think of the power of the electricity and the amount of it that can be produced in the West, in the Rocky Mountain region. Take my State. The northern line is practically from sixty-five hundred to seven thousand feet above the sea level, while the southern line is practically, in round numbers, about three thousand above sea level.

The flow of water through the mountain gorges is rapid. There are numberless places where little dams can be built by a small company for the purpose of irrigating, for the purpose of driving drills in the mine, for the purpose of driving machinery, for the purpose of running mills, for the purpose of great reduction works of copper, of silver, of gold. Not only that, but Maj. J. W. Powell, in a powerful paper, a long time ago, stated simply and briefly the configuration of that country. When I was a child I supposed the Rocky Mountains was a great big ridge of mountains running a little south of east throughout the country from Canada down to Mexico and South America. In fact the Rocky Mountains is a great plateau, a hundred miles across, and more in some places, but 50 miles across almost everywhere. There are single mountain peaks rising there 12,000 feet above the sea, and there are hundreds of ranges that have a general tendency of running northeast and southeast, and between them there are sloping plains, and Maj. Powell called attention to the fact that there is water underlying all of these plains at varying depths; that in some places artesian water could be obtained at 500 feet.

You go 500 feet in depth and you can find water anywhere in that great Rocky Mountain region. Now, by cheaply placing water on these lands, these great sloping plains, they can be made into homes for the people even where the water is hundreds of feet below the surface. Cheap hydroelectric power will solve the problem. The pumping of water for farming purposes from any but shallow depths is prohibited at present by the cost of pumping. From the great rains in the rainy season in those mountains and the melting of the immense snows that cover the mountains during the winter immense bodies of water have accumulated under the porous soil of the plains, and cheap hydroelectric pumping will insure a wonderful agricultural development in the Rocky Mountain region.

Thus, with cheap power from the electricity that can be produced from these streams falling hundreds of feet per mile, in many places, through the narrow mountain gorges where dams can be built cheaply, consider the great impetus to the development of the mines of the West, the development of the lumber forests of the West, the cheapness with which all machinery can be worked, the lighting of municipalities, street car development, and so forth. Why leave all such resources locked up and useless? Why hesitate, you people of the East? I know that there have been great wrongs produced all over the West in many years of the past, when these timber companies, for instance, were getting control of vast areas by hiring men to go and locate on 160 acres which they then transferred to the big corporations. Therefore a sentiment has been created that still permeates the East largely—that everything we do in the West is fraudulent. Ah, my friends, many men were tempted by big money to make these entries and falsify and perjure themselves in making them.

Now the people are land hungry. I know them personally. I have lived for years among them and practically traveled all over that section of country. Ninety-nine out of one hundred men who go there now seeking homes are driven there by a hungry wife and children; or, if alone, driven by a commendable ambition to own his home, to get later a wife to grace that home for him. So, my friends, I say to you to-day that if our Committee on the Public Lands, tackling one of the greatest questions that is before Congress and before the country to-day, if we have not developed that statesmanship to produce a proper bill, in view of the necessity for some bill, I implore you to help us, under the five-minute rule, to perfect it, because we need it, the country needs it, the West needs it, the whole United States needs it to furnish homes for its surplus population. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, like all other questions, this question has two distinct phases. There are those people on the one side who do not think the old policy of land as land should continue, but that the water-power interests of the country should be preserved intact by the Federal Government and in the public interest lease them for a fixed term of years under proper regulation for the benefit of the development of the West and the people generally. On the other side stand the water-power people and usually with them the people who believe that water-power sites ought to go into private ownership as distinguished from Government control and proper regulation. It is their thought that any regulation that is imposed upon water power in the West is antagonistic to their interests, and so forth. I live in the West; every penny's worth of property I have or interest is in the West, and I shall not now nor in the future advocate anything that in my judgment is striking a blow at or retarding the best interests of the West. On the contrary, I want the West to be all that we think it ought to be and will be, and I want to see the West progress and go ahead by leaps and bounds. Therefore, if there be a momentary difference among us, the only one is how to be able to help that development of the West. I again repeat there are already water-power interests intrenched in the country, so much so that 24 holding companies and 27 operating companies own 90 per cent of all the water power. The 24 companies are powerful enough now. We do not want the rest of the power to reach their hands, in private ownership at least.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FERRIS. I will yield further to the gentleman.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Do the gentleman's remarks refer to water-power decisions on the public domain or to something we have attended to in the general dam act?

Mr. FERRIS. The general dam act has to do with navigable waters and this has nothing to do with them.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Then why harp on its arguments? In view of the statements which the gentleman has just made, as to what he never would do against the West, I want to ask if he remembers his fight on the building of the Alaskan railroad, and which was a fight against western development?

Mr. FERRIS. I did so oppose the railway bill. I thought that I was performing my conscientious duty at that time, because there were not enough people in Alaska to justify a $35,000,000 appropriation. I may have been in error, or the gentleman may have been in error. Time will tell. Personally, now that it is done, I hope I was in error, for there never was any glory to me to say, "I told you so." Anyway, the Congress has decided that question, and I shall not debate it now. The chief objection on the part of some of the gentlemen who have spoken is to oppose and rail against the Government having anything to do with the handling of its own property. For myself, I believe the Government has the right to do what is best for its people with its own property, and any objections or opposition notwithstanding.

Mr. OGLESBY. I want to say to the gentleman that there is something that is very interesting to my people, and I was going to ask him if he would explain his position on it. I do not want to take up his time.

Mr. FERRIS. I want to refer to a few specific things here, and then I will get to it if I have sufficient time. The second chief objection to this bill is the fact that it provides a charge for the water power that is to be generated on Government property under the lease. I call the attention of the House to the fact that that question is res adjudicata. The Sherley amendment dealt with that and was squarely voted on as a part and parcel of the Adamson bill. Both sides of this House, including all three parties, marched through the aisle and said that we should not give away without charge the water power of this country.

And for gentlemen to rail against this bill because there is a similar provision in it for a charge falls flat. What is the situation? Under the existing law we have the act of 1901, known as the revocable-permit law. Secretary Lane, himself a western man, who has had to do with the development of water power, says the revocable-permit law is not sufficient and does not bring the best results. Ex-Secretary Walter I. Fisher, a well-known and brilliant authority on water power, says it is not sufficient, is a stumblingblock to progress and so forth. Ex-Chief Forester Gifford Pinchot, a known authority, and a man who thinks almost in advance of his time, says the revocable-permit law is not sufficient. Ten or twelve engineers and financiers from New York and the West appeared before our committee, and they said that the existing revocable-permit law is not sufficient. Who says it is sufficient? Only those who want to break down progress and keep down development, so that the selfish water-power interests that are already intrenched may go ahead and charge exorbitant rates. It is sometimes, and oftentimes, unpopular to advocate something in behalf of the Government, something in behalf of the people, but it is some one's duty, somewhere, to advocate the Government's side and the people's side, and so far as I am concerned I am willing to abide the consequences and advocate that side. [Applause.] I know that in certain congressional districts it is popular for the Congressmen to recite that he swindled the Government out of everything he could for his particular district, but for me and mine we believe it a broader standard of citizenship and statesmanship and patriotism to advocate something in the people's interest, something in the Government's interest. They are our people; it is our Government.

I call attention to the fact that in a single year the manufactured products produced from water power amounted to $17,000,000,000, seven times the receipts of all the railroads of this country. The question is not a small one. The question is not a local one. The question is not a private snap, but the question is a burning question that will grow upon us, that will in largeness pass beyond our fondest hopes in the immediate future. Every line of this bill should be carefully scrutinized; every line of this bill should be carefully looked into.

The best lawyers on the Republican side, the best lawyers on the Progressive side, and the best lawyers on the Democratic side are not too busy and are not too great in their knowledge of the law to give a little time to getting a good bill here that will develop the country in the interest of the people. And when the bill that has already passed, that had to do with navigable waters, comes back, it will again be the duty of all parties and all men to see to it that it is still a good bill. And when this bill passes and goes to the Senate, and passes over there, as I believe it will do, we ought to scan closely every line of it and see that it is still a good bill in the interest of the people. Some of my dearest friends in the House are from the West and are of the opinion that we are trying to do something wrong to the West. I assert no such thing is intended, and deny that any such effect will result. It is a misconception. I assert that this legislation will do more for the West than they know how to do for themselves. I again repeat that it is sometimes popular, it is sometimes true, that a Member of Congress can rail against the Federal Government, can decry the good offices of the Federal Government, and teach the people to hate the Federal Government; but, so far as I am concerned, I am not in the business of teaching my constituents to hate the Federal Government. I prefer to teach them to respect and love the Federal Government. I feel that the latter would be a more golden mission than the former and in the end would leave a better taste in our mouths.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. In view of the gentleman's statement that he might be able to do more for the people of the West than they could do for themselves, I want to ask him if he remembers a statement in the speech he made in Tulsa, Okla., that there have been four Secretaries of the Interior here who——

Mr. FERRIS. Whatever the gentleman may read out of my speeches on the stump that day does not necessarily express my views on this day. They are, however, already in the RECORD, and I will abide by any indictment the two speeches may inflict; whatever I say to-day and whatever I said then, will both be in print. I did not then, and I am sure I do not now, advocate the giving away of the Nation's assets. I am for conservation, and this bill is in the right direction.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I desire to make the point that there is no quorum present.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Washington [Mr. JOHNSON] makes the point of order that there is no quorum present. The Chair will count.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the point of order for the present.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. Chairman, I understand the gentleman only withdraws it for a few moments. If the gentleman is going to withdraw it now, only to renew it again in a few moments, I shall make the point of order myself. I would rather the gentleman should make it now.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, I have concluded my remarks. I ask for the reading of the bill for amendment.

Mr. MANN. If the gentleman from Oklahoma is through, I will make the point of order myself.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Oklahoma yield the floor?

Mr. FERRIS. I do, Mr. Chairman; and I ask for the reading of the bill.

Mr. MANN. I make the point of order, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] makes the point of order that there is no quorum present. The Chair will count.

Mr. MANN. I think it is only fair to notify the Members that the bill is about to be read for amendment.

The CHAIRMAN (after counting). Seventy-one Members are present—not a quorum. The Clerk will call the roll.

The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

The committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. FITZGERALD, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee having under consideration the bill (H. R. 16673) to provide for the development of water power and the use of public lands in relation thereto, and for other purposes, and finding itself without a quorum, he had directed the roll to be called, whereupon 224 Members, a quorum, had answered to their names, and he presented therewith a list of the absentees to be printed in the RECORD and Journal.

The SPEAKER. The Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union [Mr. FITZGERALD] reported that that committee having under consideration the bill H. R. 16673, and finding itself without a quorum, he had directed the roll to be called, whereupon 224 Members, a quorum, had responded to their names, and he presents a list of absentees for publication in the RECORD and Journal. The committee will resume its session.

The committee resumed its session.

The CHAIRMAN. General debate is exhausted. The Clerk will report the bill for amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and hereby is, authorized and empowered, under general regulations to be fixed by him, and under such terms and conditions as he may prescribe, not inconsistent with the terms of this act, to lease to citizens of the United States, or those who have declared their intention to become such, or to any association of such persons, or to any corporation organized under the laws of the United States, or any State or Territory thereof, any part of the lands and other property of the United States (including Alaska), reserved or unreserved, including lands in national forests, national monuments, military and other reservations, not including national parks, for a period not longer than 50 years for the purpose of constructing, maintaining, and operating dams, water conduits, reservoirs, power houses, transmission lines, and other works necessary or convenient to the development, generation, transmission, and utilization of hydroelectric power, which leases shall be irrevocable except as herein provided, but which may be declared null and void upon breach of any of their terms: Provided, That such leases shall be given within or through any of said national forests, military or other reservations only upon a finding by the chief officer of the department under whose supervision such forest, national monument, or reservation falls that the lease will not injure, destroy, or be inconsistent with the purpose for which such forest, national monument, or reservation was created or acquired: Provided further, That in the granting of leases under this act the Secretary of the Interior may, in his discretion, give preference to applications for leases for the development of electrical power by States, counties, or municipalities, or for municipal uses and purposes: Provided further, That for the purpose of enabling an applicant for a lease to secure the data required in connection therewith the Secretary of the Interior may, under general regulations to be issued by him, grant a preliminary permit authorizing the occupation of public lands valuable for water power development for a period not exceeding one year in any case, which time may, however, upon application, be extended by the Secretary if the completion of the application for lease has been prevented by unusual weather conditions or by some special or peculiar cause beyond the control of the permittee, the tenure of the proposed lease and the charges or rentals to be collected thereunder to be specified in said preliminary permit, and such permittee upon filing an application for lease prior to the expiration of the permit period shall be entitled to a preference right to lease the lands embraced in the permit upon the terms, conditions, and limitations authorized by this act.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER] offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, page 1, lines 1 and 2, after the word "is," in line 1, by striking out the words "authorized and empowered" and inserting in lieu thereof the word "directed."

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MANN. Where does this amendment come in?

Mr. RAKER. On page 1.

Mr. MANN. I make the point of order that the gentleman can not amend the enacting clause in that manner.

Mr. RAKER. It is on lines 3 and 4.

Mr. MANN. Just so that we locate it, I do not care.

Mr. RAKER. I hurriedly wrote it. I ask, Mr. Chairman, to modify the amendment. It should be on lines 3 and 4.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California asks unanimous consent to modify his amendment by correctly describing the place for its insertion. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 1, lines 3 and 4, after the word "is," in line 3, strike out the words "authorized and empowered" and insert in lieu thereof the word "directed."

Mr. RAKER. This was one of the matters that was contested from the beginning of the hearings until their completion, and while I, as a member of the committee, am in favor of this bill as a general proposition, as to practically all of its provisions, this one condition was discussed thoroughly by the committee. I do not know whether I would be violating any of the rules of procedure by referring to what transpired in committee by saying that the amendment was lost by a 7-to-8 vote. That is, there were 7 for it and 8 against it. I may be outside the rule—I do not wish to violate the rule—but I thought it would be of benefit to the House to know that.

I want to call the attention of the House to this fact, that every man who had experience in water power, who had experience in the development of water power, and who appeared before the committee strenuously urged this amendment.

The American Institute of Engineers has a membership of more than 2,000 all over the United States and the world. A committee of that institute investigated this matter and appeared at the request of the Secretary of the Interior, and they stated their belief that it would assist in the actual development if this were made mandatory upon the Secretary of the Interior instead of leaving it discretionary; making it so that if a party possessed the necessary qualifications, if he was within the law, if he acted in good faith, if he had the necessary requisites to carry out the project and was first in time of application he should be given the first right. It has been the policy of the Government in all the public-land laws to permit the first man applying for a homestead to obtain it. It has been the same way with relation to desert claims. All the law with reference to mining claims was developed upon the custom that the first in time was the first in right if he possessed the necessary qualifications.

The entire body of the law of the Western States in regard to water has been based upon that same legal principle, and you will find none running to the contrary. I believe there was only one man who appeared before the committee who thought it would be better to leave it directory rather than mandatory, and that was the engineer of the Forest Service. This question was put up to Secretary Lane directly, and this is his answer upon the question. I want to call attention to it particularly. The chairman of the committee [Mr. FERRIS] asked him in regard to this, stating that the people who had appeared before the committee were very insistent upon its being mandatory instead of directory. The Secretary answered as follows:

No; I do not object, in general terms, to having things made definite; and, so far as I am personally concerned as Secretary of the Interior, I would like to see things made just as positive as possible, but I do not think things should be tied up in such shape that it is mandatory upon me to issue a permit to somebody whom I do not believe is acting in good faith.

That is on page 293. I believe the House ought to pass a law that will give the best man on earth an opportunity to administer that law and at the same time make it so that the meanest man will be bound by the law and can not use his discretion, his personal opinion and feelings, so that if two men apply for a water right, and the first is tall and red haired and the second one is black haired, the Secretary, though he likes the black-haired man, can not give him the preference. If the tall, red-haired man who first applies has all the qualifications and possesses the necessary means to carry out the project, I believe he ought to be permitted to have the opportunity. I believe the Secretary ought not to be given a discretion as to the individual who shall have this right.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. RAKER. I ask unanimous consent that my time be extended three minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California asks unanimous consent that his time be extended three minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. RAKER. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. As I understood the answer of Secretary Lane, it was directly in conflict with the position taken by the gentleman from California.

Mr. RAKER. Oh, no.

Mr. STAFFORD. In the last sentence read by the gentleman he states unequivocally that he wants to have reserved the power to determine as to the ability and good faith of the applicant to whom he issues the permit.

Mr. RAKER. If the gentleman will put his question, I will answer it.

Mr. STAFFORD. The language, as the gentleman read it, confirms my position.

Mr. RAKER. I read it, and I remember it very well when it was given, and I marked it on my memorandum which I made at the time. We discussed it in the committee afterwards, and I have thought about it many times since. And right in that connection, neither the Secretary of the Interior nor any other administrative officer ought to be in a position to say to a man who has the qualifications under the law, who has the ability and the intelligence, and who can get his friends to assist him in the project, "Why, you have not $100,000 in the bank, and therefore, in my judgment, you may not be competent to carry out this project." The money is not the only thing in the development of water power. It requires intelligence, it requires energy, it requires experience, it requires some manhood and determination, and it requires a man at the head in whom his fellow men have confidence, so that they can rely upon him and believe that if he starts upon a project he will carry it out in better shape than the man who may have a few more dollars than he has.

But I can not understand why, at this late day, we should change and overthrow the entire policy of disposing of the public domain, not to the first man who applies, not to the man who has gone out there and pioneered and investigated it, who may have spent his time and money in finding a place where he could build a dam, and then goes to the Secretary of the Interior and makes his application, but to the second or third man, who, finding this information on file, makes application and says he wants it, and the Secretary of the Interior, after looking it over, says, "Well, I believe this second man is better prepared. He is a finer-looking fellow, and I will give him the right to obtain the lease and permit him to do so." The present Secretary of the Interior would not do this, but that is not the question.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAKER. I yield to the gentleman from Washington.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. I want to suggest to the gentleman, under the policy that has been pursued by some of the Secretaries of the Interior, what difference would it make what the law was? A Secretary of the Interior told me once when there was only one applicant for one of these propositions, and he said that he had complied with the law in all respects, he told him he would not grant the permit.

Mr. RAKER. What Secretary was that?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Secretary Fisher.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to close debate on this section in 10 minutes.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. FERRIS. How much time does the gentleman from Wyoming want?

Mr. MONDELL. Five minutes.

Mr. FERRIS. I ask unanimous consent to close debate on this proposition in 10 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Oklahoma asks unanimous consent that debate on this proposition close in 10 minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I shall support the amendment offered by the gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER], but I do it realizing that unless the bill is vitally amended in other respects the amendment he offers will be of little avail. It is to no purpose that we shall direct the Secretary of the Interior to lease the public lands if we leave it, as the bill does, entirely in his discretion as to how and to whom he shall lease. He can readily fix conditions under which no one will care to lease, under which no one will dare to lease. As this bill gives him unlimited discretion as to terms, conditions, and charges, what do we gain by saying that he must lease? I shall, however, support the amendment, in the hope that this amendment, if it carries, will be followed by other amendments which will lay down definite rules and conditions under which, being met by an applicant, the Secretary must grant him the lease or the permit. Unless that shall follow, the gentleman's amendment will be of no avail.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes.

Mr. RAKER. If the Secretary of the Interior prepares uniform rules and regulations applying to all by which men can legitimately improve hydroelectric power, ought not that to be supported?

Mr. MONDELL. Oh, yes; if he does; but this bill does not contemplate that he shall adopt uniform rules, and he could not adopt uniform rules and carry out the spirit of the act, for the act is not based on the theory that the charges and conditions are to be uniform. It is based on the theory that they are to be fixed at the whim and pleasure, or perhaps I should say in the discretion, of the Secretary of the Interior. In due time, Mr. Chairman, I shall offer an amendment in the form of a substitute to this section placing it in a form under which the Congress does not say to an officer of the Government, "You may do as you please with all of the lands and property of the Nation," but under which we say to the people of the country, "You may acquire certain rights to develop the resources of the Nation provided you comply with certain proper and reasonable requirements."

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, this amendment should not be agreed to. It is traveling fast in the wrong direction. To adopt it would be but a way well paved for the water-power interests to get what they want; to put the head of the Secretary in a vise as an automaton and allow them to say to him, "I come here and I have met your conditions, and I demand that you give me a lease." In other words, it would in too many cases force the Secretary to do a thing that no citizen of the United States would want him to do. Practically all of the developed water power in the United States now is in the hands of a little handful of men. Is there any doubt here that they will be better able to marshal their assets and meet the conditions with greater haste, precision, and celerity than an independent man or an independent company of citizens? Surely the House would not want to force the Secretary to grant a permit or lease to a monopoly, and thereby aid the monopoly in carrying out its oppressive design and purpose. This amendment was debated in committee at great length. Secretary Lane was consulted about it, and in the language of the gentleman from California, which he has just read. He was directly antagonistic to it, and in addition to what the gentleman from California read he said this:

> Well, of course, that would require probably stricter regulation. That is to say, we would issue a certain body of regulations with which the applicant would have to comply, and you would have to make very strict regulations if you did not have somewhere the power to reject an application.

The Secretary ought to have the right to reject an improper application, and he ought to have the right to approve a proper application, and if we make it mandatory we will take away both of those powers that ought to be reposed in him.

Further on in the hearings the Secretary said:

> Now, I do not object, in general terms, to having things made definite; and so far as I am personally concerned, as Secretary of the Interior, I would like to see things made just as positive as possible, but I do not think things should be tied up in such shape that it is mandatory upon me to issue a permit to somebody who I do not believe is acting in good faith.

Ex-Secretary Fisher was consulted on this proposition, and Mr. George Otis Smith, head of the Geological Survey, was consulted, and Mr. Gifford Pinchot was consulted on the proposition, and numerous engineers. The engineers generally who were interested in water power said that it ought to be made mandatory, and all of the others, acting in the interest of the Government, after fullest hearings, decided that the Secretary ought to have, at least, discretion enough to do the right thing.

I hope the amendment of the gentleman from California will not be agreed to. It will, if it is agreed to, work greater mischief than any Member of this Congress would desire to inflict.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from California.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, there is an amendment to this section which relates to jurisdiction, and, while I have not it before me at this moment, it is an amendment that has been agreed to between the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] and the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. ADAMSON], which provides that this bill shall in no sense step on the toes of the other bill that has been passed. The two bills, so far as subject matter is concerned, are not in conflict, and the committee does not want to have them to conflict. I ask unanimous consent that as soon as the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. ADAMSON] brings in his amendment he may have an opportunity to offer it at that time.

Mr. MANN. That does not require unanimous consent. The gentleman has the right to take the floor and offer it when he pleases.

Mr. FERRIS. I thought possibly we might pass this section before he arrived. Then it would require unanimous consent to return to it. That was my thought.

Mr. MANN. Oh, we will not get past this section to-night. There are a number of bona fide amendments which will be offered.

Mr. FERRIS. I did not want to even momentarily seem to preclude the gentleman from Georgia from offering his amendment.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read, and I understand that the gentleman from Oklahoma does not object to this amendment.

Mr. FERRIS. I do not, although the proviso on the next page sufficiently precludes it from invading the jurisdiction of the War Department, which, of course, we do not desire to do.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 1, line 13, after the word "monuments," strike out all in said line down to and including the word "parks," in line 1, on page 2, and on page 2, in line 10, strike out the words in that line after the word "forests."

Mr. FERRIS. Oh, Mr. Chairman, I do not want the gentleman to take off "other reservations."

Mr. HAY. There are no other reservations.

Mr. FERRIS. Oh, yes; I hope the gentleman will just take out the military reservations.

Mr. HAY. I have no objection.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield for a moment?

Mr. HAY. Yes.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman, I am sure, does not want to include in his amendment national parks, so that they can be built on?

Mr. HAY. Those parks are military reservations——

Mr. FERRIS. They are specifically excepted.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman wants to strike out——

Mr. HAY. I did that because national parks are military reservations.

Mr. MANN. Not always.

Mr. HAY. I do not know of any park that is not a military reservation. Does the gentleman know of any national park that is not a military reservation and under the control of the Secretary of War?

Mr. MANN. Yes.

Mr. FERRIS. Lots of them.

Mr. MONDELL. This bill does not include national parks.

Mr. HAY. I understand that. The reason I did that was to make it uniform.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman meant to strike out the exclusion.

Mr. HAY. Yes. Now, in view of what has been said, I ask to withdraw that amendment and offer the following: Page 1, line 13, strike out the word "military."

The CHAIRMAN. The same word appears on page 2, line 10.

Mr. MANN. The same word appears in line 10, page 2.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will report the modified amendment. Is there objection. [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 1, line 13, strike out the word "military." Page 2, line 10, strike out the word "military."

Mr. STAFFORD. Would not the general language "and other reservations" include military reservations?

Mr. HAY. Yes; I want to strike that out.

Mr. STAFFORD. I think there is no question of it.

Mr. FERRIS. If the gentleman will permit, under the Pickett bill of June 25, 1910, the President has authority, which he exercised frequently, to withdraw land for a series of purposes, if the Government might have need of them in the public interest, and in many instances they have withdrawn ten times as much land as was needed or was necessary, and the gentleman would not want to strike out——

Mr. MANN. If the gentleman from Virginia would yield, I can make a suggestion to him which, I think, will be perfectly clear.

Mr. HAY. I will yield.

Mr. MANN. Strike out the language and insert after the word "parks," in line 1, page 2, so it would read, "not including national parks or military reservations."

Mr. HAY. Well, that is all right.

Mr. MANN. That saves any question as to military reservations.

Mr. HAY. And then, in line 10——

Mr. MANN. It would not be necessary to change line 10 by striking out the word "military."

Mr. HAY. Except it is very broad here—"or other reservations."

Mr. MANN. That only applies to the permit officer at the head of the department; but, as the gentleman defines it above, military reservations, you do not have to get any permit.

Mr. HAY. Well, then, Mr. Chairman, I ask——

Mr. MANN. Adopt the first amendment and then offer this after that.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Chairman, I ask for a vote on the first amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MANN. Now, after the word "parks," in line 1, page 2, insert the words "or military reservations."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, line 1, after the word "parks," insert the words "or military reservations."

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HAY. Then, on page 2, line 10, strike out the word "military."

Mr. RAKER. That has already been done.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment to strike out, in line 13, page 1, and in line 15, page 2, the words "national monuments."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 1, line 13, strike out the words "national monuments," and page 2, line 15, strike out the words "national monuments."

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Mr. Chairman, these national monuments include considerable areas of lands in the West that have been designated as national monuments. They include many of the most interesting objects illustrating and showing the prehistoric civilizations that are in this country, and under the language of this bill, merely in the discretion of an officer who has charge of granting the permit, with no other limitation, these interesting objects could be obscured, obliterated, and destroyed.

Now, I would like the chairman of the committee, if he will, to say why this language, being eliminated from the bill, would in any wise detract from the possibilities of the development of the water power on the public lands of these Western States; and if it would not be possible, if this language is not stricken from the bill, to absolutely destroy a number of these national monuments that are of great national interest and of historic value? There may be some reason that I am not acquainted with why my amendment should not be adopted; but, in my judgment, it would be a calamity if this bill were passed including language that would make it possible for the destruction of these objects that are now of very great interest and in succeeding years will be of vastly more interest to the inhabitants of the country.

Mr. MONDELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. I yield to the gentleman from Wyoming.

Mr. MONDELL. The only national monument that I can think of where anyone would want to cut off water power would be in the Grand Canyon. It ought to be a national park.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. And there is one in my district of 600,000 acres, nearly all water power, known as the Olympic Monument.

Mr. BRYAN. I wish to confirm my colleague on that proposition.

Mr. FERRIS. I know the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. PAGE] offered his amendment in the best of faith and for the best of good purposes. But it would be an ill-advised thing for the House to do to adopt that sort of an amendment—not being disrespectful in any sense. What arises is this: Out through the West hundreds of thousands of acres have been withdrawn which are designated as national monuments. Now, the average mind would be impressed with the fact that there are some curios or some national wonders that cover this entire area. But it is not true at all.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. But, if the gentleman will allow, this language does not except in any degree these national curios.

Mr. FERRIS. I think it does; and I will get to that if the gentleman will pardon me. For instance, in one national monument in the State of Colorado there are 14,000 acres, and there are three or four of similar import in that State. The gentleman from Washington has just given us the information that in his State there are national monuments containing several thousand acres of land. In California there are several thousand acres of land withdrawn for national monuments. Now, no one wants to destroy one particle of historical value or one particle of national wonder, or anything of that sort; but it would be folly to except all the so-called national monuments in there and let them lie in idleness because some one corner, embodying a few acres—say, 1 or 2—of a 100,000-acre reservation, should be desired for their scenic beauty.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. On what pretext were these large areas of land withdrawn as national monuments?

Mr. FERRIS. Part of them were used for national forests and some of them were withdrawn for protecting water-power sites. Now, the committee had in mind just what the gentleman from North Carolina had, that no one would want to tear up these national wonders and these national monuments, and so we put in this provision:

Provided, That such leases shall be given within or through any of said national forests, military or other reservations only upon a finding by the chief officer of the department under whose supervision such forest, national monument, or reservation falls that the lease will not injure, destroy, or be inconsistent with the purpose for which such forest, national monument, or reservation was created or acquired.

Now, before a step can be taken the chief officer of the department having the national monuments under his jurisdiction must make a finding that the purposes of the water power so leased will in no sense interfere with the national wonder or for the purpose for which it was withdrawn. So I think that verifies and takes care of the purposes the gentleman from North Carolina has. If we should allow those water-power sites to lie idle and be developed by no one, it would be a blight in that country that no one would want to inflict. And I think no one cares for that.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I want to state that the Olympic Monument was established for the protection of the Roosevelt elk, which is probably of more importance than the water power in the district. If you went in there with water power and general development it would probably destroy some of the elk, but as they are already starving to death, anyway, it would probably make no difference. This discussion, however, shows up a Government subterfuge, anyway.

Mr. FERRIS. I have tried and can not agree with my friend from Washington, with all his earnestness against conservation, in his harsh feelings toward what has in the past been done. I call attention to the somber fact that what has been done has been by his own party, and I do not think it is the intention of the gentleman to assault his party on that question.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I hope the gentleman from Oklahoma will take in good faith the proposition, so as to make it apply to those things which it was originally intended to apply. There is a good deal of water power on the public domain and in the national forests which are the proper subjects of legislation. Now, I do not believe that anyone will contend that if we had a park, for instance at Niagara Falls, it ought to be left to some departmental officer to determine whether the water at Niagara Falls should be diverted for power purposes or maintained for scenic purposes.

Mr. FERRIS. Of course the gentleman is aware that the national parks are specifically excepted from the bill.

Mr. MANN. If we had a reservation there, if it were a national monument, the gentleman does not know, and no one else knows, how many great scenic places there are in this country that may be properly reserved instead of being turned over to somebody to create horsepower. The gentleman endeavored to guard this provision in the bill by requiring that the head of the department should pass upon the matter before the law was executed. The head of the department that has control of the national monuments is the Secretary of the Interior. He would have no greater discretion under this provision than he would have without it.

Mr. FERRIS. Does the gentleman feel entirely justified in assuming that a department officer will destroy the thing committed to his charge by Congress?

Mr. MANN. Oh, I do not think that they desire to destroy it at all. I think, on the other hand, they would endeavor to be conservative. I have no doubt about it at all; and if the exigency existed where we needed to have that power immediately, I would be willing to confer that power on the Secretary. But I do not think we need to do it as an experiment. This is an experiment, as more or less of our legislation along these lines is at present. I do not know; it may be that the very thing you want to preserve in a national monument would be the thing that would be destroyed by somebody. We all know that Niagara Falls would have been destroyed ere this if it had not been for legislative or treaty action by the United States, and I think we ought to except national monuments. Then I hope we can make an exception or two after that is disposed of, so as to confine this legislation to what it was intended to be in the first place.

Mr. DONOVAN. Mr. Chairman, did we not vote to close debate in 10 minutes, and have not those 10 minutes expired?

The CHAIRMAN. This is another amendment.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina rose.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. PAGE] is recognized.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I find by reference to the report of the Department of the Interior for the year 1913 that the number of these monuments under the administration of the Interior Department is between 15 and 20, embracing not exceeding 75,000 or 80,000 acres of land as a total. The Department of the Interior is the department that is to administer the law now under consideration, when enacted, and the chief officer of that department will have the selection or the protection of these national monuments. As I say, I find that they are 15 or 20 in number, embracing not exceeding 75,000 or 80,000 acres of land, whereas under the administration of the Department of Agriculture there are a number of other national monuments—8 or 10 of them—that embrace something like a million acres of the public lands.

Now, I agree entirely with the statement that was made by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] that it is not the part of wisdom on the part of this Congress to invest in the discretion of an administrative officer even the possibility of the destruction of these spots of great national interest, and I am even now more thoroughly convinced than I was when I offered my amendment that it ought to prevail. I do not think that this House, for the possibility of the development of a few thousand horsepower, should make it possible to destroy these places that are now of very great interest, and which in the future will be of vastly more interest to all the people of the United States, and not merely to a few people who might be benefited by the development of the water power on these reservations. Certainly there are enough of the public lands in the great West where the development can go forward if this amendment is adopted; and it being adopted, we do not jeopardize the destruction of these places that are of interest not only to this country but are of world-wide interest to all the ages to come; and I believe my amendment ought to prevail.

I shall ask unanimous consent, Mr. Chairman, to offer another amendment before the vote is taken on the amendment, having overlooked, when I offered it, the fact that these words also occurred on line 12 of page 2, the words "national monument."

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I desire to oppose the amendment. I want to call the attention of the House to the fact that the Olympic National Monument consists of 608,000 acres. It covers a few mountain peaks which are beautiful in themselves, but are in the shadow of a great scenic mountain peak over 3 miles high. The mountains in the Olympic Peninsula have on the west side, to my knowledge, at least 8 or 10 rivers, great streams pouring down a mighty water power. For years a campaign has been carried on by all the clubs on the peninsula for the elimination of this monument, which was established under the same rules as those which provided for the national monument at Gettysburg. The Olympic National Monument spreads over a territory half as large as the State of Connecticut, and in all that region all development is checked. Now you propose to exempt all hope of utilizing the water power there. The amendment will make a bad bill worse.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, the number of the national monuments has been specified, and——

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to close debate at the end of seven minutes—five minutes to be used by the gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER] and two minutes by myself.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. FERRIS] asks unanimous consent that debate on this amendment close in seven minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. RAKER. For instance, in the shadow of my home I find Cinder Cone, a national monument, 5,120 acres. That ought to be a national park, and will be eventually. But the possibilities of water-power development, the possibilities of dams and lakes, will add to the beauty instead of detracting from it; and where you can utilize the water at this magnificent high elevation it ought to be used, instead of permitting it to run down the canyon sides and go to waste. Now let me call your attention to the Grand Canyon——

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. The gentleman makes the statement that this particular monument, to which he now refers, ought to be, and likely will be, made a national park. If it were at this time a national park, it is excepted by the terms of this bill.

Mr. RAKER. Not in the bill creating the national park, because I am in favor of having more lakes where a national park is created. Instead of having dry canyons, I am in favor of having water in them, and I am in favor of utilizing the water that is raised away up in the skies, and get some benefit from the fall. You get a beautiful lake, you get water in the canyon, and you do a thousandfold the good that is done now with the water running down without being used, when it does no one any good.

Take the Grand Canyon of the Colorado, which contains over 806,400 acres. Many Members of the House have been there. Think of that grand territory. Think of the possibilities of developing water power there. We do not want to keep all that to look at. It was reserved for a national monument until some proper legislation was had in relation to national parks.

There has been much effort to make it a national park—part of it—and undoubtedly it will be sometime. Think of the opportunity of building dams and the opportunity of holding that water, for the purpose of having more water in the Colorado River when it is necessary for power purposes along the river as well as for irrigation in the valleys below. Why, when you stand on the brink of the precipice you can not see the bottom of the canyon, and you can not see it at all unless you go down, and it will take you a good many hours to do it. No one sees it unless he has the strength and courage to go down those trails. Why not give this Government the opportunity of getting the benefit of this water that is going to waste there every year, that will add to the beauty of those many canyons? Why not use the water, instead of leaving it as it is at the present time?

In a number of other places the condition is the same. It is not intended to destroy one foot of the land, but it is intended to utilize it and get the benefit, and I do not believe there is any Member of the House who does not realize that the more beautiful lakes there are in these mountains the greater is the addition to the value of the scenery and the value to the country surrounding them. We ought to add to it instead of detracting from it. I do not believe there is anyone in the House more in favor of preserving these natural wonders, keeping them in their primitive state, permitting no destruction of them at all, than are the members of this committee and myself; but where conditions are such that they can be used and the beauty of the landscape maintained and added to, and some value derived from it for the surrounding country, I believe it is the duty of the House to legislate so as to use the property of the Government that we get the benefit and still retain all the natural beauty and scenery. No single natural object can be destroyed under the provisions of this bill. If it can be used and none of the natural wonders destroyed in any way, then, I say, use it.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, there are under the War Department 6 acres of land designated "National monuments," under the Agricultural Department about 1,500,000 acres, and under the Interior Department between 75,000 and 100,000 acres of land, all so-called national monuments. Now, I would not interfere with one of those monuments, and neither would the executive officers who have them in charge; and with the bill carrying a specific proviso that the chief departmental officer must make a finding that the water-power development will not in any sense interfere with the purpose for which the original grant was made the House has done enough. It is not right to lock up a million and a half acres in the Agricultural Department, 100,000 acres in the Interior Department, and say that the surrounding country, which is probably now an area of wild cactus, sagebrush, and mesquite, worthless, barren land, shall go on worthless forever. On the contrary, let us utilize the water, first, for power; second, for irrigation; and third, for navigation and open the West. It seems far removed at times, but there are great possibilities in the West, and it is the duty of Congress to act.

Let us be practical about these things, let us convert the ragged, jagged canyons between the mountains into a beautiful lake, with beautiful water. Let us use it, and make corn, alfalfa, and wheat grow where now cactus and sagebrush alone can survive. I would not harm one beauty of nature, and I am just as keen about that as is the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. PAGE]. The Secretary of the Interior has the same views, and anyone who may succeed him will be the same. The present Secretary of Agriculture is the same, and we may assume anyone who may succeed him will be the same. This, of course, is not a vital amendment, it would not really break the heart of anyone if it was agreed to, but it does tie up and leave undeveloped a large section that needs development. I personally very much hope the House will not tie up a lot of land and let the water be flowing idly to the sea doing no one any good, let it go to waste merely because on one corner of a million-acre reservation there may be a little beauty of nature that will not be harmed in the least. We ought to be practical. We ought to use every foot of land that is worth using. We ought to develop cheap power to pump water for irrigation that can be developed. The amendment, of course, is offered in the best of faith, but it can not be supported by the facts. The chief officer of the department would never let any part of it be touched that had scenic value. They have full power to stop it. In short, they must make a finding of fact that it will not, which fully protects.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to modify my amendment by including the words in line 12 on page 2.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from North Carolina asks unanimous consent to modify his amendment so as to strike out the words in line 12 on page 2. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. GOOD. Does the gentleman move to strike out the words in line 15, page 2?

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Yes. My amendment now strikes out the words "national monuments" in line 13 on page 1, in line 12 on page 2, and in line 15 on page 2.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend the amendment by including in the amendment offered by the gentleman from North Carolina the words "and other," in line 13, page 1; and the word "reservations," in line 1, page 2; the words "or reservations," in line 13, page 2; and the words "or reservations," in line 15, page 2.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wyoming offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 1, line 13, strike out the words "and other"; page 2, line 1, strike out the word "reservations"; page 2, line 13, strike out the words "or reservations"; page 2, line 15, strike out the words "or reservations"

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order upon that amendment. That reaches an entirely foreign matter, and is not an amendment to the amendment, and hence is not in order at this time. That reaches coal and oil withdrawals.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair overrules the point of order.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Oklahoma is in error when he says that the word "reservations" means reserved lands. If the gentleman from Oklahoma will be good enough to read his bill, he will find that on line 12, page 1, are the words "reserved or unreserved." All lands held under reservation are reserved lands; they are not, however, "reservations." I have moved to add to the words "national monuments," suggested by the gentleman from North Carolina, where they occur, the word "reservations," and for this reason: General leasing or right-of-way bills should deal with public lands, reserved or unreserved, and the forest reserves. When we come to deal with lands that are reserved for any definite and specific purpose, either as national monuments or other reservations—and I do not know just what that word would include in this connection, for it might include national cemeteries or Indian reservations, I am not certain—but in any event any lands definitely reserved for a specific purpose should not be included in a general right of way or general lease act. We can act upon any proposition relative to those areas by special legislation, either by a general bill applying to them specifically or by special legislation in each case.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. As I read this bill I interpreted the words "and other reservations" following the word "military" to include Indian reservations. I would like to inquire whether it is the intendment to include Indian reservations?

Mr. MONDELL. I think there may be some question whether it does or does not include Indian reservations.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield so that I may ask the chairman of the committee if it is the intention of the committee to include Indian reservations?

Mr. FERRIS. It is.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I am not certain that it includes Indian reservations. Personally I am rather inclined to the view that it does not; but I do think there should be no doubt upon that subject. It should not include Indian reservations.

I do not believe we should include Indian reservations in a general act. I do not think that under the loose term we should include other reservations the exact character of which we have not now in mind. I can not at this moment think just what land might be included in the term, and my good friend from Oklahoma, now that I have suggested to him, knows that it does not include and can not include reserved lands. Those lands are taken care of under the words "reserved and unreserved."

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes.

Mr. MANN. If these reservations are included under the term "lands reserved or unreserved," as I understood the gentleman to say——

Mr. MONDELL. I meant withdrawals were included in those terms. The gentleman from Oklahoma suggested that withdrawn lands under the withdrawal act would not be included in the bill if we struck out the word "reservations." My contention is that withdrawn lands under withdrawal acts are not reservations.

Mr. MANN. What land is there that you can have in a reservation that is not included in the term "lands reserved or unreserved"?

Mr. MONDELL. Oh, in the term "public lands reserved and unreserved," the term as used here does not include a reservation, such as a forest reserve or Indian reservation would not include national parks.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman himself has so frequently taken a different——

Mr. MONDELL. The term "reserved" is used to designate lands that are withdrawn temporarily under some form of withdrawal, such as the general withdrawal act.

Mr. MILLER. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from North Carolina asks unanimous consent to modify his amendment in the manner indicated. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The question is upon the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wyoming.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman, I desire to be recognized in order that I may ask the gentleman from Wyoming a question, or the chairman in charge of the bill. I would like to ask the chairman in charge of the bill [Mr. FERRIS] a question if I may. I understood the gentleman from Wyoming just now to make an observation that there was a possibility of this language in the bill to include Indian reservations. I ask if the Committee on the Public Lands intended that it should?

Mr. FERRIS. It did intend to include that and all other reservations, and the Indian Office, as the gentleman understands, is a bureau under the Interior Department, and the thought was that the Interior Department having a water-power force and an organization, it was perfectly proper for them to utilize it for the benefit of the Indians, and I have a suggested amendment from the Indian Office allowing the proceeds that come from power developed on their land to go to them.

Mr. MILLER. Does the gentleman think the language employed in the first section is sufficient to cover Indian reservations?

Mr. FERRIS. We were of the opinion if the words "or other reservations" were left out it undoubtedly would.

Mr. MILLER. I certainly do not think so. I do not think by any implication it could be made to include Indian reservations.

Mr. FERRIS. I will say to the gentleman that was put squarely up to the Indian Office and that was their opinion.

Mr. MILLER. I think that is probably the poorest place to get knowledge and exact information of this character.

Mr. FERRIS. We might not be in agreement about that, but it was also put up to the Interior Department, and it was their opinion we ought to go ahead with the development for the Indians that have water power. It ought to include all water power, and the idea was to let the proceeds go to the Indians.

Mr. MILLER. I have not for a moment until just now thought that it was the intention of this bill to legislate respecting the Indians' property. In the first instance I do not think the committee has any jurisdiction over the land in an Indian reservation.

Mr. FERRIS. The gentleman realizes that the Department of the Interior has jurisdiction.

Mr. MILLER. But the Committee on the Public Lands has no jurisdiction over Indian property, and notwithstanding that they had——

Mr. MANN. Or over military reservations, but the Congress has.

Mr. MILLER. I understand Congress can pass this and it may become a law, but I think it is quite remarkable that this was intended to include lands in Indian reservations without the Committee on Indian Affairs having been advised or asked their opinion respecting it.

Mr. FERRIS. Let me ask the gentleman if he thinks when there is water power that is going to waste on an Indian reservation that could be used for innumerable purposes that it should or should not be developed?

Mr. MILLER. I can call the gentleman's attention to thousands of places now where it is going to waste, and it will never be used, and under a matter of this kind it will never be utilized.

And if I may humbly suggest—and I do not wish to set my legal attainments up in opposition to the eminent legal attainment in the Indian Office—in my poor opinion I do not think this covers Indian reservations unless you say it covers Indian reservations.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Minnesota has expired.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman, I ask for five minutes more.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, I would like to suggest to the gentleman that we have been here a long time this summer and are likely to be here for some time yet. We used to adjourn at 5 o'clock. During this session we have been running until 6 o'clock. It seems to me that we have time enough ahead of us so that we may resume our normal habits.

Mr. FERRIS. Would the gentleman object to letting us finish the amendment? The debate has already been had on it.

Mr. MANN. There are several gentlemen who want to be heard further on it, and then probably there would be tellers asked, or something of that sort.

Mr. FERRIS. Only in the interest of economy of time. It seems to me that all has been said here that can be said on this proposition.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. There are the bird reservations, including the Aleutian Islands, in Alaska, and I would like to know something about them.

Mr. DONOVAN. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that there is no quorum. The gentlemen here are all disorderly.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, in deference to what has been said, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. FITZGERALD, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 16673) to provide for the development of water power and the use of public lands in relation thereto, and for other purposes, and had come to no resolution thereon.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

The SPEAKER. The Chair lays before the House the following request for leave of absence, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. FINLEY requests leave of absence for 10 days, on account of business.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. DONOVAN. I object, Mr. Speaker.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. PETERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I desire to ask unanimous consent to address the House on the subject of foreign trade.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. PETERS] asks unanimous consent to address the House on the subject of foreign trade. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I would like to submit an observation. The President of the United States has on several occasions done himself credit, I think, and also credit to this House, by taking away from the House and appointing to other offices some of its most brilliant and able Members. But in no case has he taken away from the House a brighter ornament than when he selected our distinguished friend from Massachusetts [Mr. PETERS] to be Assistant Secretary of the Treasury. [Applause.]

I have no objection to the request.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts to address the House.

There was no objection.

FOREIGN TRADE.

Mr. PETERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, our country is to-day meeting one of the crises in the history of civilization. We are face to face with the unusual task of balancing a world that has broken from its pathway of progress and plunged backward through the Dark Ages of human bloodshed and decay.

Instead of the spindle and the plowshare, Europe wields the gun and saber. The bugle that blinds the conscience and the minds of men and drives them headlong into savagery has replaced the sweet song of the peasant harvesters and the hum of industry. Art, science, and progress stand aghast at the spectacle. Peace departs, and with it goes that great universal movement for human uplift and the reservoir of human happiness that man has been storing up for the future ages.

The test we are required to meet to-day involves all phases of our national life. It involves the stability of American principles of democracy, wherein all races may dwell in harmony. The racial prejudices and passions of our forefathers must be repressed in the broadening minds of our citizens. There is a necessity to-day for a closer clinging to the Stars and Stripes and the liberty and happiness they represent. There is no room for European partisanship in the mind of the patriotic American. To the degree that we maintain neutrality in word and deed, to that degree do we record, individually and collectively, the success of our great American principles.

The new situation in Europe bears heaviest, however, on our leaders in trade and in government. The immediate problem is our foreign trade, for on its successful readjustment to meet the new conditions depends the welfare of our workingmen and the maintenance of our healthy growth in wealth and world prominence. The ultimate problem involves our national honor and integrity of purpose, which must bear the burden of adjustment for the great nations involved in the European catastrophe.

READJUSTMENT OF TRADE.

Within a week after the upheaval of Europe, our American trade had already begun to readjust itself. After carrying the burden of depression in the world's trade, fighting for and winning footholds in every market, the American merchants took up the new problem with zeal. They were on the brink of gathering the rewards incident to the return of great prosperity in America, when the crash of the European markets broke upon them. Although unprepared, they were animated with that fighting spirit that has always distinguished American traders, and put their shoulders to the wheel.

We must be thankful that we have in America a goodly portion of true patriots. We must not pass unheeded without due compliment the rank and file of business men who, during the recent depression, kept to the uphill road and refused to believe the rantings of false prophets.

While the press filled its columns with the plaintive cries of the weaklings, while the crafty and ignorant shouted the doom of the Nation's trade, and while the Halls of Congress resounded with calamity conjured up as political capital, the real constructive work of the Nation was being done by the real patriots in the marts of industry, agriculture, and trade.

Their work was well done and bravely done, and the healthy results tell an altogether different story from the buncombe of the alarmists. Our domestic and foreign trade is economically sound, and is equipped to meet the sudden readjustment, whatever may be the incidental troubles and eventual result.

HOLDING OUR FOREIGN TRADE.

The industrial centers of the world, astounded at the growth of our exports of manufactured goods, have had fresh cause for astonishment during the world-wide depression in trade during the past year. Under the most severe conditions of competition, wherein our foreign competitors were throwing into the market their various wares at any price they would bring, we have held our foreign trade with less decrease than our competitors.

Although the recent depression was accompanied by the lowering of the purchasing power of foreign markets, we virtually held intact our export business. This proves the sound basis on which our foreign trade rests, and the power of our manufacturers to hold this trade in the face of tremendous odds.

HOME ADVANTAGES OF FOREIGN TRADE.

The advantages of foreign markets to the American industries are many, and they make necessary the prompt and effective readjustment now going on. Our manufacturers have already reached the point where their skill and industry turn out a volume of goods greater than can be absorbed by the local market.

In many industries activity depends on the seasons. Where the product can be used only in certain seasons of the year, there are periods when machinery and workmen are not put to their full usefulness. The foreign markets, depending on other conditions of climate than our own, afford a natural outlet that calls for the full use of machinery and labor at all times of the year. All-year-round employment is the ideal employment from the viewpoint of the manufacturer and the laborer.

A MANUFACTURING NATION.

A glance at our export figures shows that our finished goods are slowly but surely supplanting the foodstuffs and crude materials that were formerly the principal items of our exports. And another glance at our imports shows an increasing demand by America for foreign foodstuffs and crude materials and less demand for foreign manufactured products.

To-day America in the eyes of Europe is becoming essentially a manufacturing Nation. Our progress in invention of machinery, the great supply of labor, ever increasing through immigration, the enterprise and energy of our industrial leaders, have all contributed to the rapid growth of American industry.

Twenty years ago, in 1894, our exports of manufactures ready for consumption were valued at $130,000,000, or 15.63 per cent of our total exports. In 1903 our exports of this finished product had increased to $327,000,000, or 23.5 per cent of total exports. Last year, 1913, we exported finished manufactured goods to the value of $776,000,000, or 32 per cent of the total exports.

The trade of the world never stands still. The broad outlook on trade notes an ever-changing aspect among the nations, in which their soil, their climate, their natural resources, the ability, ingenuity, and capacity for labor of their citizens all contribute to the change.

Slowly and surely America is becoming a workshop of the world and our people a nation of skilled artisans. Our agriculture is still the bone and sinew of American wealth. It is not going backward, but is having its normal growth. The development of industry in America, however, is changing the world's view of our country.

FOOD AND RAW MATERIALS.

The remarkable gain in imports during the present year is represented by raw materials for our factories and food for our workmen. This fact is shown in the following table, comparing April, 1913, and April, 1914, and covering the principal items of food and raw materials:

A comparison of movements during April, 1913, and April, 1914, of 15 staple articles of raw material and foodstuffs in American imports and exports.

	Gain in imports, April, 1914, over April, 1913.		Loss in exports, April, 1914, from April, 1913.
	Gain in value.	Per cent.	Loss in value.	Per cent.
RAW MATERIALS.
Cotton	$1,018,000	5	$9,120,000	22
Cottonseed oil	44,000	44	980,000	43
Wool	6,000,000	210

[1] No loss or gain.
[2] Gain in imports for 15 commodities.
[3] Loss in exports for 15 commodities.
[4] Gross increase of all imports.
[5] Gross loss of all exports.

In eight varieties of raw materials we imported last April $14,130,000 more than in April, 1913. To any mind that is truly appreciative of American hustle and determination, does this not show that while chronic howlers were depicting our downfall last April, our real patriots, our industrial leaders, imbued with real Americanism, were determined to keep our wheels turning?

When calamity was heard at its loudest, the boom was on. When the increase in imports was pointed out as a sure sign of decay, was it not in reality the most sure sign of health and vigor of our industries?

This table, which is drawn from the official report of the Department of Commerce, not only explains the radical increase in imports, which we have seen is represented by material for our mills and food for our people, but it shows further that 57 per cent of the decrease in exports for the same month is represented in our decision to retain for our own use $21,490,000 more raw material and foodstuffs. Of the total drop in exports, comparing April, 1914, with April, 1913, which amounted to $37,544,000, more than one-half is represented in these identical items of raw materials and foodstuffs.

NEW TRADE PROBLEMS.

The manufacturers, recovering so brilliantly from the slump in the world's trade, are now facing readjustment. Not only must they seek new markets, but they must seek new sources of raw materials. A big demand for American goods is foreseen, and we are combing the peaceful sections of the earth for the material to feed our looms and workshops.

In the competition of our captains of industry for the benefits of the new order of things, it is well that this Congress has spelled into the law regulations that will protect equality of opportunity.

The rank and file of American manufacturers have shown that they deserve the aid that Congress has extended to them. The great constructive work of this Congress shall have its full effect in the reconstruction of trade that is now begun.

Just before the disruption of European peace on August 1, America had felt the quickening of the pulse of industry and had begun the garnering of nature's bounty. Our trade was returning to its natural stride. The depression that began in Europe and forced its way inevitably into our industry was being thrown off. We had been the last great Nation to be affected, we were affected to a lesser degree than our competitors, and recovered first from the depression. We demonstrated to the world the wonderful health and vitality of American agriculture and American industry.

AMERICA THE BULWARK.

Our Government is destined to be the bulwark of civilization in the catastrophe that is darkening Europe. The task is an enormous one, and it will test to the full whether American principles and American civilization are fundamentally sound and whether our Government is equipped to shoulder the responsibilities of an entire world.

Mr. Speaker, there is aroused within me on this occasion, when I am appearing in this historic body probably for the last time, the full, fond hope and belief that America is prepared. I believe we have never been better prepared to meet this world emergency.

First and foremost I believe that genuine patriotism, which is the love of fellow men and the love of peace, has supplanted in the hearts of our people that false patriotism of the Dark Ages which made men brutes at the call of country. I believe the American has risen to the plane of real civilization.

I believe that our leaders in the Senate and the House of Representatives, as well as our Chief Executive, represent our American type of patriot, and that the great peaceful feeling in our country, in the face of the catastrophe abroad, rests on the firm belief in our leaders and our institutions.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BAILEY] asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 12 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until Friday, August 14, 1914, at 12 o'clock noon.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, bills and resolutions were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the several calendars therein named, as follows:

SENATE.

FRIDAY, August 14, 1914.

(Legislative day of Tuesday, August 11, 1914.)

The Senate reassembled at 11 o'clock a. m. on the expiration of the recess.

REGISTRY OF FOREIGN-BUILT VESSELS.

Mr. O'GORMAN. Mr. President, with the consent of the Senator from Texas, who is in charge of the antitrust legislation, I ask unanimous consent to have the conference report on the emergency shipping bill laid before the Senate for consideration.

Mr. CULBERSON. In view of the urgency of the legislation as affecting the shipping industry I ask unanimous consent that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. SMOOT. I have no objection to that course, but as soon as the request is granted I desire to suggest the absence of a quorum, because I know there are a few Senators not here who desire to discuss the report.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The unfinished business is temporarily laid aside and the conference report is laid before the Senate. The Senator from Utah suggests the absence of a quorum. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Gronna	Norris	Smoot
Brady	Hughes	O'Gorman	Sterling
Brandegee	Johnson	Overman	Swanson
Burton	Jones	Perkins	Thompson
Chamberlain	Kern	Pittman	Thornton
Clapp	Lane	Pomerene	Vardaman
Clark, Wyo.	Lea, Tenn.	Ransdell	Walsh
Culberson	McCumber	Saulsbury	White
Cummins	Martine, N. J.	Sheppard	Williams
Fall	Myers	Simmons
Gallinger	Nelson	Smith, Ga.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Forty-two Senators have answered to the roll call. There is not a quorum present. The Secretary will call the roll of absentees.

The Secretary called the names of the absent Senators, and Mr. SHAFROTH, Mr. SHIELDS, Mr. STONE, Mr. THOMAS, and Mr. WEST answered to their names when called.

Mr. HITCHCOCK and Mr. CAMDEN entered the Chamber and answered to their names.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Forty-nine Senators have answered to the roll call. There is a quorum present. The Secretary will read the conference report.

The Secretary read the report, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 18202) to provide for the admission of foreign-built ships to American registry for the foreign trade, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate and agree to the same with the following amendment: In lieu of the matter proposed by the Senate insert the following:

"That section 4132 of the Revised Statutes of the United States as amended by the act entitled 'An act to provide for the opening, maintenance, protection, and operation of the Panama Canal and the sanitation and government of the Canal Zone,' approved August 24, 1912, is hereby amended so that said section as amended shall read as follows:

"'SEC. 4132. Vessels built within the United States and belonging wholly to citizens thereof; and vessels which may be captured in war by citizens of the United States and lawfully condemned as prize, or which may be adjudged to be forfeited for a breach of the laws of the United States; and seagoing vessels, whether steam or sail, which have been certified by the Steamboat-Inspection Service as safe to carry dry and perishable cargo, wherever built, which are to engage only in trade with foreign countries or with the Philippine Islands and the islands of Guam and Tutuila, being wholly owned by citizens of the United States or corporations organized and chartered under the laws of the United States or of any State thereof, the president and managing directors of which shall be citizens of the United States, and no others, may be registered as directed in this title. Foreign-built vessels may engage in the coastwise trade if registered pursuant to the provisions of this act within two years from its passage: Provided, That such vessels so admitted under the provisions of this section may contract with the Postmaster General under the act of March 3, 1891, entitled "An act to provide for ocean mail service between the United States and foreign ports, and to promote commerce," so long as such vessels shall in all respects comply with the provisions and requirements of said acts.'

"SEC. 2. Whenever the President of the United States shall find that the number of available persons qualified under now existing laws and regulations of the United States to fill the respective positions of watch officers on vessels admitted to registry by this act is insufficient, he is authorized to suspend by order, so far and for such time as he may find to be necessary, the provisions of law prescribing that all the watch officers of vessels of the United States registered for foreign trade shall be citizens of the United States.

"Whenever, in the judgment of the President of the United States, the needs of foreign commerce may require, he is also hereby authorized to suspend by order, so far and for such length of time as he may deem desirable, the provisions of the law requiring survey, inspection, and measurement by officers of the United States of foreign-built vessels admitted to American registry under this act.

"SEC. 3. With the consent of the President and during the continuance of hostilities in Europe, any ship chartered by the American Red Cross for relief purposes shall be admitted to American registry under the provisions of this act and shall be entitled to carry the American flag. And in the operation of any such ship the President is authorized to suspend the laws requiring American officers, if such officers are not readily available.

"SEC. 4. This act shall take effect immediately."

JAMES A. O'GORMAN,
J. R. THORNTON,
JOHN K. SHIELDS,
WILLIAM E. BORAH,
Managers on the part of the Senate.
J. W. ALEXANDER,
RUFUS HARDY,
O. W. UNDERWOOD,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. O'GORMAN obtained the floor.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Will the Senator from New York yield to me for a moment?

Mr. O'GORMAN. Certainly.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I have a telegram, received this morning from the New York Shipbuilding Co., which bears directly on this bill, and, with the consent of the Senate, I should like to have it read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

The Secretary read the telegram, as follows:

NEW YORK, August 13, 1914.

Hon. JAMES E. MARTINE,
United States Senate, Washington:

If foreign-built ships are admitted to the coastwise trade of the United States, the wages of American shipyard labor will have to be reduced to an equality with the wages paid in foreign yards or the building of merchant vessels in American yards will absolutely cease.

NEW YORK SHIPBUILDING CO.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I send to the desk a telegram of a similar nature, which I will ask the Secretary to read.

There being no objection, the Secretary read as follows:

NEW HAVEN, CONN., August 13, 1914.

Hon. FRANK B. BRANDEGEE,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

Connecticut people have large investments in coastwise shipping, which will be seriously harmed if cheap foreign vessels cheaply manned are permitted in coastwise trade. Benedict Mason Marine Co. alone own 16 vessels, acquired in full expectation that the Government would maintain its protection to coast shipping. Please do all you can to save this investment from destruction.

JOHN T. MANSON.

Mr. BURTON. I have a telegram from the Pacific coast, which I ask to have read.

There being no objection, the Secretary read as follows:

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL., August 13, 1914.

Hon. THEODORE E. BURTON,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

We most earnestly protest against bill admitting foreign ships to coastwise trade. The American coastwise merchant marine has been brought to a point second only to that of Great Britain by paying the higher standard of wages to American labor. Our ships have cost fully 50 per cent more than the foreign ships it is proposed to admit to direct competition, and this extra money was money that was spent in American labor in American shipyards. Only last year the Matson Navigation Co. spent two and a quarter million on two ships that could have been built in Great Britain for not to exceed one and a half million, and if this bill becomes a law these two vessels alone have depreciated three-quarters of a million in value. It would be a positive crime to let foreign owners step in on an equal basis and earn the fruits of our labors.

MATSON NAVIGATION CO.,
WILLIAM MATSON.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. O'GORMAN. I do.

Mr. SMOOT. I was simply going to say that I have a number of telegrams along the same line, but I shall not encumber the RECORD with them.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Delaware?

Mr. O'GORMAN. I do.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I have received a cable from a friend of mine who happens to be in Amsterdam regarding the shipping bill which is being considered.

I desire to say that the gentleman who sends this cable is a great personal friend of mine. I know him very well. He has been largely interested in shipbuilding in this country at the old Roach shipyard. However, he is not now in any way connected with the shipbuilding interest that I know of, but Mr. William C. Sproul is a man of large affairs in Pennsylvania.

He has been president of the Pennsylvania State Senate for many years, and is a man who is engaged in enterprises throughout the country, in West Virginia chiefly, where, with the senior Senator from West Virginia [Mr. CHILTON], he is interested in many large enterprises. He knows as much, possibly more, about the real shipping interests in this country as any man of my personal acquaintance. I ask that this telegram be read in conjunction with the others.

There being no objection, the telegram was read, as follows:

AMSTERDAM.

Senator SAULSBURY, Washington, D. C.:

Century's greatest commercial marine opportunity for America in speedy enactment of liberal registry laws for ships in foreign trade, but protecting coastwise commerce.

SPROUL.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from California?

Mr. O'GORMAN. I do.

Mr. PERKINS. I have a telegram which I send to the desk and ask that it may be read for the information of Senators.

The VICE PRESIDENT. In the absence of objection, the telegram will be read.

The Secretary read the telegram, as follows:

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL., August 13, 1914.

Hon. GEORGE C. PERKINS,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

We must most earnestly protest against bill admitting foreign ships to coastwise trade. The American coastwise merchant marine has been brought to a point second only to that of Great Britain by paying the higher standard of wages to American labor. Our ships have cost fully 50 per cent more than the foreign ships it is proposed to admit to direct competition, and this extra money was spent in American labor in American shipyards. Only last year the Matson Navigation Co. spent two and a quarter million dollars on two ships that could have been built in Great Britain for not to exceed one and a half million, and if this bill becomes a law these two vessels alone have depreciated three-quarters of a million in value. It would be a positive crime to let foreign owners step in on an equal basis and earn the fruits of our labors.

MATSON NAVIGATION CO.,
WM. MATSON.

Mr. O'GORMAN. Mr. President, I desire to call the attention of the Senate to the changes in the bill which have been made in conference and to allude to some of the reasons for those changes.

The first change appears on page 3 of the bill as it passed the Senate. At the suggestion of the senior Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS], a provision was inserted at that point requiring that 51 per cent of the stock of all American corporations purchasing foreign ships must be held by American citizens. The conferees after very careful consideration reached the conclusion that the retention of that requirement would go far toward impairing the beneficent results expected of this legislation, that it would operate as a deterrent rather than an incentive to American corporations to purchase ships to be sailed under the American flag.

On the same page there is a provision stricken out which imposed a tax on foreign-built yachts. It seems that in the Payne-Aldrich tariff law of 1909 a tax was imposed upon foreign-built yachts, and in the Panama Canal act of 1912, by specific language, we retained that act, but in 1913, in the Underwood-Simmons law, the provision with regard to the imposition of a tax on foreign-built yachts owned by Americans was stricken out. Experience had shown that the Government derived no benefit from such a tax, because the American owners of foreign-built yachts did not bring their yachts into our ports or harbors, and they thus escaped the tax. When this bill was passed the attention of the committee was not called to the fact that in 1913 in the new tariff law the tax provision on foreign-built yachts which was inserted in the Panama act of the previous year had been repealed. Therefore it is stricken out of this bill, so as to harmonize its provisions with the tariff act of last year.

In lines 22 to 25, page 3, there is a provision that foreign-built vessels may engage in the coastwise trade if registered pursuant to the provisions of this act within two years from its passage. There were various reasons which induced the conferees to make this recommendation.

In the first place, it was demonstrated by the report of the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries in the other House, not more than a year ago, that 92 per cent of all the vessels in the American coastwise trade are either owned or under the control of the railroads of the country or of shipping combinations which are operated in disregard of the Sherman antitrust law.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. O'GORMAN. I do.

Mr. GALLINGER. The Senator from New York doubtless has observed that that statement has been controverted, and that the statement he quotes only alludes to the regular lines, which include a mere fraction of the entire coastwise shipping of the United States—about 8 per cent of it, I believe.

Mr. O'GORMAN. Mr. President, the fact has not been disproved that to-day the railroads of the country and the great shipping combinations are in absolute control of 92 per cent of the vessels engaged in the coastwise trade.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I absolutely deny it, and the proof has been presented and can be presented again if it is necessary. There is only about 8 per cent so controlled.

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. President, will the Senator from New York permit me to make a suggestion?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from New Jersey?

Mr. O'GORMAN. I do.

Mr. HUGHES. The Senator from New Hampshire is undoubtedly taking into consideration the large amount of shipping from port to port at short intervals along the coast which, in any event, will not be affected by this legislation. The Senator from New York is undoubtedly referring to the big steamships making long trips between distant ports along the coast.

Mr. GALLINGER. If the Senator from New York will state it in that way, that about 8 per cent, which includes the regular lines, may be controlled by a corporation or corporations, I have no objection; but when he asserts that 92 per cent of the coastwise shipping of the United States is controlled by corporations or the railroads, I must absolutely and utterly dissent from that statement.

Mr. O'GORMAN. Assuming that 92 per cent of the large vessels engaged in the coastwise trade are controlled by the railroads and shipping combinations operated in violation of the antitrust law, it follows that there are but 8 per cent of the vessels engaged in the coastwise trade available under the provisions of the Panama Canal act for passage through the Panama Canal, because it will be remembered that in the Panama Canal act of 1912 Congress provided that no vessel owned by a competing railroad or by a trust operating in violation of the Sherman antitrust law would be permitted to use the Panama Canal.

The Commissioner of Navigation, testifying before the Interoceanic Canals Committee some months since, estimated that of all the thousands of craft, large and small, engaged in our American coastwise trade there were probably not more than 33 ships available for use through the Panama Canal. That is the testimony of an expert, of a high official of the Government—the Commissioner of Navigation of the United States—who estimated that under the existing law probably not more than 33 ships flying the American flag would pass through the Panama Canal. If that be so, it must be apparent that it is a negligible representation of the United States through this great waterway. It is impossible for 33 ships to meet the demands of our internal commerce through that canal; and in this emergency it was thought well to permit foreign-built ships, owned by American corporations, which may be registered within the next two years, to enter the coastwise trade.

It has been stated—and it was suggested in one or two of the telegrams read this morning—that this will work a great hardship upon the American shipbuilder and the American citizen now owning American-built ships engaged in the coastwise trade. It has been stated that foreign-built ships can be purchased for 50 per cent of what it will cost in this country to build similar ships. Opinions differ with respect to that fact. I have heard the statement made that the same ship might be built on the Clyde 50 per cent cheaper than it could be built in this country, and yet I have heard the statement repeated by those familiar with the subject that the shipyards of the United States can to-day build a ship approximately as cheaply as the same ship can be built in any yard.

Certain instances were called to the attention of the committee a few months ago tending to prove that fact, and the statement has been repeatedly made—and I do not think challenged; it was made here recently by the senior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS]—that there is no substantial difference between the foreign-built ship and the American-built ship in respect to the cost of construction; but there might be a great discrimination between the navigation laws of the United States respecting the operation of an American vessel and the navigation laws of other countries, which are far more liberal. That discrimination, however, will not affect any American shipowner under the provisions of this bill, if enacted into law, because the American corporation, under the provisions of this bill that takes into the coastwise trade a foreign-built ship must operate it in the coastwise trade pursuant to every provision of our navigation laws.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President——

Mr. O'GORMAN. Once the ship enters the coastwise trade, the foreign-built and the American-built ship stand on a perfect equality with respect to the burdens incident to operating ships in our domestic trade under our navigation laws.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, that was about the question I was going to ask the Senator. One of the telegrams read this morning indicated that if foreign-built vessels were admitted to the coastwise trade the result would be to lower wages paid on American coastwise ships.

Mr. O'GORMAN. Those who make that claim do not know the provisions of this bill.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Foreign-built ships would be compelled to comply with American navigation laws and to employ American labor in their coastwise trade, would they not?

Mr. O'GORMAN. There is a subsequent provision in this bill which is the same provision that was adopted by the Senate a few days ago, permitting the President, whenever he finds that the number of available persons qualified under existing laws to fill the position of watch officers is insufficient—

To suspend by order, so far—

That means, of course, to such extent as he may deem desirable and with such limitations as he may impose—and for such time as he may find to be necessary, the provisions of law prescribing that all the watch officers of vessels of the United States registered for foreign trade shall be citizens of the United States.

That provision was designed for the emergency confronting us regarding our over-seas trade, and it was thought that certain foreign-built ships might take advantage of this act to fly the American flag, but that they would not do so if they were compelled to dismiss their foreign crews and officers.

Mr. BURTON. Mr. President, will the Senator from New York yield for a question?

Mr. O'GORMAN. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. BURTON. That provision was evidently drawn before it was contemplated that foreign-built ships could be registered for the coastwise trade, and it seems to me to be ambiguous in its meaning. The provision as stated by the Senator from New York is as follows:

SEC. 2. Whenever the President of the United States shall find that the number of available persons qualified under now existing laws and regulations of the United States to fill the respective positions of watch officers on vessels admitted to registry by this act—

"Admitted to registry by this act" would include not only those intended for the foreign trade but those intended for the domestic trade as well.

Mr. O'GORMAN. But does the Senator think——

Mr. BURTON. One moment; let me make myself clear——

Mr. O'GORMAN. That the President would suspend the requirements of existing law with reference to vessels in the domestic trade?

Mr. BURTON. What does this mean?—

Is insufficient, he is authorized to suspend by order, so far and for such time as he may find to be necessary, the provisions of law prescribing that all the watch officers of vessels of the United States registry for foreign trade shall be citizens of the United States.

That may make the rules in regard to American citizens more binding as to vessels engaged in the domestic trade, but the paragraph does not seem to have been drawn to fit the case of boats registered for the domestic trade. How does the Senator from New York interpret that? What is its meaning?

Mr. O'GORMAN. It was not drawn in anticipation of the provision that foreign-built ships were to be permitted to enter the domestic trade; but the language of lines 13, 14, and 15, on page 4, is so broad as to make that particular section applicable only to vessels which will engage in the foreign trade.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President——

Mr. O'GORMAN. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. CUMMINS. I can not quite agree with the Senator from Ohio, and much less with the Senator from New York. I do not think the words are ambiguous or admit of more than one interpretation. It is perfectly clear to me that the President, under this proposed law, will have the power to suspend our navigation laws with regard to those ships built abroad which have obtained an American registry for foreign trade and which will be permitted by this act to engage in the coastwise trade. I desire to call the attention of the Senator from New York to the language of the proposal now before the Senate.

In the first place, provision is made for the registry for foreign trade of foreign-built ships owned by an American citizen or an American corporation. Then follows this sentence:

Foreign-built vessels may engage in the coastwise trade if registered—

That is, for the foreign trade—

pursuant to the provisions of this act within two years from its passage.

Therefore, any foreign-built ship owned by an American citizen or a corporation that is registered for the foreign trade under this act is entitled, by reason of its registry for the foreign trade, to engage in the coastwise trade.

We then turn to section 2 and find that the power of the President to suspend the navigation laws with respect to watch officers applies to all vessels registered under this act for foreign trade. Of course, if the President has the power to suspend as to a particular ship the restrictions that were formerly imposed, that ship, being entitled to engage in the coastwise trade, will engage in it with the freedom and with the latitude provided in section 3; and what I have said with regard to the first paragraph of section 3 applies with equal force to the last paragraph.

Therefore, if this bill becomes a law as it now is, we shall have the amazing spectacle of a foreign-built ship, which may be officered entirely by foreigners and with a crew of foreigners and without the survey and inspection and limitations which are provided as to seaworthiness and safety, doing our coastwise business in competition with other ships which must comply with all the coastwise regulations. I do not believe the conference committee intended to do that, but that is just what it has done.

Mr. O'GORMAN. The Senator has overlooked the vital language in the second paragraph of section 2, on lines 17 and 18, where it is provided that whenever in the judgment of the President the needs of foreign commerce may require——

Mr. CUMMINS. Precisely.

Mr. O'GORMAN. Not domestic commerce. Whenever the needs of foreign commerce may require, he may suspend the requirements as to survey, inspection, and measurement. That provision has no relation whatever to the domestic or coastwise trade.

Mr. CUMMINS. Whenever, by reason of the necessities of foreign commerce, he suspends these regulations with regard to any ship, if that ship is registered for the foreign trade, it may engage in the coastwise trade. There are no limitations about that.

Mr. O'GORMAN. With respect to both of these requirements and the possible suspension by order of the President it is distinctly stated that the suspension will operate only so far and to such extent as he will permit.

Mr. CUMMINS. Precisely.

Mr. O'GORMAN. I think we may safely confide to him the proper exercise of that power.

Mr. CUMMINS. I agree that if the President does not want to suspend these regulations, or does not think it wise, he need not do it; but when he does it in behalf of any ship registered for the foreign trade, that ship, instead of engaging in the foreign trade, may, without any limitation, without any permit thereafter granted, engage in the coastwise trade.

Mr. O'GORMAN. Under the language employed, if the President finds it desirable to suspend either or any of these requirements touching the foreign trade, he may state that the suspension shall not apply to ships actually engaged in the coastwise trade. He has that power under the act.

Mr. CUMMINS. I am not certain about that, although I am not prepared at this moment to deny that conclusion; but we have it admitted, then, that the President can put a foreign-built ship registered for foreign commerce into the coastwise trade with the same freedom respecting its watch officers and its seaworthiness that obtains with regard to the foreign trade.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. O'GORMAN. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. JONES. If I understand the Senator's position, it is that the President, upon permitting foreign-built ships to be registered, can make it a part of the suspension of the law or granting of the registry that such suspension or registry shall operate simply while the vessel is engaged in the foreign trade.

Mr. O'GORMAN. In the foreign trade. He has power to stipulate that it shall not be applicable to the foreign-built vessel while actually engaged in the coastwise trade.

In addition to the changes to which I have called the attention of the Senate there were two other changes. The Senate adopted an amendment providing that the navy yards of the United States might be used, when necessary in the judgment of the President and the Secretary of the Navy, for the repair of vessels engaged in American commerce. It was thought, after an exchange of views, that the private shipyards of the country had sufficient facilities to meet all demands that our shipping might make upon them.

Mr. BURTON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me for a moment?

Mr. O'GORMAN. I yield to the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. BURTON. Is there not a regulation already, or is it not the custom now, that the dry docks of the navy yards are open to merchant ships when they are not occupied with work on naval ships? I understood such was the case. For instance, take the one at the Puget Sound Navy Yard; is not that available for merchant ships?

Mr. JONES. The Senator asks about the Puget Sound Navy Yard?

Mr. BURTON. Yes.

Mr. JONES. I think so, whenever it is not in use by the Government.

Mr. BURTON. So I understood. I think that is already the law.

Mr. JONES. I do not know whether there is a statutory provision with reference to that or not. I know that private ships have gone there and have been repaired.

Mr. O'GORMAN. There was a further provision that the Secretary of the Navy, in his discretion, might permit naval officers of the United States on the active or retired list to accept temporary service on board vessels engaged in commerce. It was thought that there was no need for that provision, and it was not insisted upon and is withdrawn.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, will the Senator state what was the reason for withdrawing that amendment? It was discussed at some length in the Senate and was considered quite valuable, in view of the admitted scarcity of officers in this country.

Mr. O'GORMAN. I do not know that the provision received much attention in the Senate. The House conferees objected to it, and the Navy Department did not think it prudent to have such a provision in the bill. On the whole, the conferees concluded it was not necessary to provide for service by naval officers on merchant ships.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I understand that we have actually more naval officers on the retired list than we have on the active list. Many of those men are still in the prime of life. On the other hand, it seems to be admitted that in the merchant marine we actually lack enough officers to man the new vessels that are to be brought into the service.

Mr. O'GORMAN. I have an impression that if an emergency should arise where officers on the retired list could be advantageously employed on vessels of commerce that there is nothing to prevent them accepting this or any other employment; and as to officers on the active list, they can enter similar employment if granted leave of absence.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. That might be a reason; but it seems to me, if that is the case, this can do no harm. It certainly argues itself that if there is a scarcity of men available for the duty of officers in the merchant marine it would be better to permit these men who are now in enforced idleness on the retired list to take those places than to permit foreigners to have the places, with more or less danger of embroiling us in trouble with other countries that are at war.

Mr. O'GORMAN. Whether or not there is an emergency in that respect is yet to be seen. There are those who think that such an emergency will not arise. Men who are active in the seamen's unions throughout the country insist that there is no emergency, and that there are available American citizens qualified under existing law to fill any of these positions. In that situation it was not thought well to press the amendment, in view of the attitude of the House conferees.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from North Carolina?

Mr. O'GORMAN. I yield to the Senator from North Carolina.

Mr. SIMMONS. I should like to inquire of the Senator from New York whether there might not also be some complications in case a vessel under the American flag were commanded by a naval officer?

Mr. O'GORMAN. That phase of the matter was brought up and was taken into consideration, too. It might lead to complications where an officer on board a vessel of commerce was also an officer of the Navy of the United States.

Mr. SIMMONS. I will say to the Senator that I am advised that in time of war it is necessary to obtain permission for a naval officer, even of a neutral country, to enter the ports or land upon the soil of a belligerent nation.

Mr. O'GORMAN. The only other change made was the striking out of section 3, which was the amendment of the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES] as modified by the amendment of the senior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS]. The advantages of that provision are secured under the provision on page 3, permitting foreign-built ships registered within two years to enter the coastwise trade.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. O'GORMAN. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. THOMAS. I wish to inquire of the Senator from New York whether, when in 1852 Great Britain threw open her coastwise traffic to foreign-built and all other ships, the same forebodings of ruin and disaster to British ships were not indulged in that have been presented here by telegrams from various parts of the country?

Mr. O'GORMAN. The same outcry was made against that departure from a long-established policy on the part of Great Britain in 1856; and that suggests another observation, Mr. President. The American shipyards may think that they will suffer if we admit foreign-built ships into our domestic trade. These foreign-built ships will more than compensate the American shipyards through the increased business they will bring to them in the way of repairs. These ships will have to be repaired in American shipyards from time to time, and instead of inflicting a financial loss upon American shipyards this change may work a substantial benefit.

Mr. GALLINGER and Mr. LIPPITT addressed the Chair.

Mr. THOMAS. But is it not a fact, Mr. President, that from the shipyards' point of view the business of repairing ships is the more valuable trade of the two?

Mr. O'GORMAN. It is so regarded.

Mr. THOMAS. That is to say, is not the business of repairing more profitable than the business of shipbuilding?

Mr. O'GORMAN. It is generally so regarded.

Mr. THOMAS. Just one other question and I will be through. I wish to inquire of the Senator whether any of these prophecies of injury and disaster which were indulged in and so freely made in 1852 in Great Britain were verified by events?

Mr. O'GORMAN. According to my information they were not, and the coastwise trade of Great Britain was retained by the British shipowners, although Great Britain extended to the ships of the world the privilege of coming into British ports and competing with them.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit me, my attention was attracted to a statement the Senator made that the repairs of these ships would more than compensate American shipyards. What is the Senator going to do with these additional ships? There are a great many American coastwise ships lying idle now. Is the Senator going to add hundreds of foreign ships to the coastwise trade and have them all in business?

Mr. O'GORMAN. I am surprised that the Senator from New Hampshire states that there are many coastwise ships now lying idle. I can not imagine that they are more than ferry boats, yawl boats, rowboats, and similar craft. We have the evidence of Senators from the Pacific coast that at this time they are in crying need of shipping facilities to permit them to transport to market the products of that coast.

Mr. GALLINGER. We have the evidence of one man who sent a telegram here to that effect. I will show the Senator that there are new American ships lying idle to-day. What I want to ask the Senator, however—and I ask it in all seriousness—is this: He is going to add hundreds of foreign ships, I apprehend, to the American coastwise trade. Are not they going to displace American ships?

Mr. O'GORMAN. No; I hope there will be business for all of them.

Mr. GALLINGER. Oh, well, the Senator may hope so, but it is a vain hope.

Mr. O'GORMAN. Does the Senator believe that an American fleet of 33 vessels plying through the Panama Canal will meet the demands of our internal commerce?

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I believe that there will be a much larger fleet engaged in that trade.

Mr. O'GORMAN. The Senator is doubtless aware that the Commissioner of Navigation estimated that the number of ships available for that trade is but 33.

Mr. GALLINGER. Yes; but manifestly the Commissioner of Navigation did not take into consideration a good many vessels that are in course of construction and that were in course of construction at that time in anticipation of trade through the Panama Canal.

Mr. O'GORMAN. Does the Senator know how many vessels have been in course of construction for that trade?

Mr. GALLINGER. I can not say definitely, but there are a good many; and I will present proof to that effect in my own time. What troubles me, however, is that the Senator says that the American shipyards are going to be more than compensated by repairs to these vessels. Why, we can not indefinitely increase the number of ships in the coastwise trade. We have enough now, and more than enough, to do the business. If the Senator adds a fleet of foreign ships to the coastwise trade, they must displace American ships, or else have no work for themselves to do, one or the other.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

Mr. O'GORMAN. I yield to the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, in regard to the supply of ships for western commerce, I do not know myself what the condition is. I doubt if anyone here upon the floor knows the actual situation. I do know, however, that long prior to the time this matter came before the Senate the representation had been made to me by parties greatly interested in affairs on the Pacific coast that there was a want of ships, and I was urged weeks ago and months ago to lend my aid to any effort possible to secure more ships to carry the commerce along the Pacific coast. This urgency comes from business men and from those familiar with the condition of the want of transportation means to carry our farm products. I can not imagine any reason for misrepresentation of that fact upon the part of those who made the representation. On the other hand, I must believe that they were in a position to know whether or not it was true, and my opinion is that there is an utter poverty of shipping capacity upon the Pacific coast.

Mr. O'GORMAN. Mr. President, I move that the report of the conferees be adopted.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, it will not be adopted at once. On the point that has just been raised—and then I will take up the general question—I wish to read a letter dated August 11, 1914, from the Luckenbach Steamship Co., a large company engaged in the steamship business:

LUCKENBACH STEAMSHIP CO. (INC.),
New York, August 11, 1914.

Senator J. H. GALLINGER,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: I beg to advise you that we have American steamers lying idle, looking for business, some of them having been idle for six months, and we would be pleased to entertain offers from the Pacific coast lumber interests at the same rate as foreign steamers.

I write this because I have been informed that the lumber interests on the Pacific coast have made the statement that there is not American tonnage available, and they therefore are favoring the enactment of a law for admitting foreign vessels to the American coastwise trade.

Very truly, yours,

EDGAR F. LUCKENBACH, President.

Mr. BORAH. May I ask the Senator where these people are located? Where are their headquarters?

Mr. GALLINGER. Their headquarters are in New York City; a very great city, by the way.

Mr. BORAH. A very promising burg.

Mr. GALLINGER. Quite as big as the State of New Hampshire or the State of Idaho in the matter of business.

Mr. BORAH. It was not for the purpose of reflecting upon any particular portion of the country that I asked the question, but it was for the purpose of ascertaining whether or not they were on the Pacific coast trying to secure any business. It can not be possible that men who want their goods carried on the Pacific coast are finding ample means to have them carried and at the same time representing to the representatives in Congress that they have no means. They would have no occasion to make that representation as to their business. It may be that these ships are floating upon the Atlantic coast. I do not know anything about it, but I have every reason to believe they are not engaged and are not willing to engage in business on the Pacific coast.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. Luckenbach says they are. Perhaps the Senator knows better than the Luckenbach Co.

Mr. BORAH. I apprehend that if he was willing to do the business he would be there trying to do it. Nevertheless, he is in New York City and his business is in New York City. It is on the Atlantic coast. Why does he not go to the Pacific coast?

Mr. GALLINGER. He proposes to go through the Panama Canal to the Pacific coast, to take business in competition with foreign steamships at the same rate.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I wish to ask the Senator from New Hampshire if he has any information as to whether the steamships spoken of by his correspondent come under the ban of the Panama Canal act; whether they are permitted under that act to use the canal?

Mr. GALLINGER. I have no information on that point, but I imagine if they were under that ban that Mr. Luckenbach would not make the proposition he does. He is a business man of great experience.

Mr. BURTON. If the Senator from New Hampshire will yield to me, I have no desire to take one side or the other in this controversy, but I have sought to ascertain the facts. According to the best information I have, there is a very large number of boats on the Pacific coast that are not employed. The president of the Masters and Mates of Pacific Coast Ports, Capt. Wescott, stated to me this morning that there are as many as 53 ships on the Pacific coast at present without cargoes and some 400 men—watch officers—who were unable to obtain positions. He stated further that in the steam-schooner service there was a very large number of boats plying between local points on the Pacific coast which could bring lumber to the Atlantic coast.

Mr. BORAH. How does the Senator account for the fact that these ships are lying there for want of cargoes and the cargoes are lying there for want of ships?

Mr. GALLINGER. It is easily explained. The lumber from Puget Sound is now being sent by rail across the continent, or otherwise it would have to go around the Horn, which would be very expensive. As soon as the Panama Canal is open the lumber will be sent through the Panama Canal, and these ships will then be available.

Mr. President, I want to read a letter I received yesterday from a gentleman who is now in Washington. He is a man who has been quoted over and over again, and has been quoted in this debate—Capt. Robert Dollar, of San Francisco, a well-known shipping man. The letter is dated yesterday. Capt. Dollar lives in San Francisco. He is a shipowner. He writes me as follows:

WASHINGTON, D. C., August 13, 1914.

MY DEAR SENATOR GALLINGER: On my arrival here I was astounded to know that the conference committee had decided to allow foreign ships that accept American registry to engage in our coastwise trade. Owning British ships, my financial interests would be in favor of such a change, but I must protest and say that it is unfair and unreasonable, as in every port there are idle American steamers. In San Francisco alone there are over 30 at present. In this emergency, however, I am very strongly in favor of allowing foreign ships to get American registry, but to engage in foreign trade only. I do hope that the Senate will reconsider and prevent the throwing down of the bars to permit foreign ships to engage in coastwise trade.

Very truly, yours,

Capt. ROBERT DOLLAR
(of San Francisco).

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Let me ask the Senator, if it be true that these ships are lying idle in every United States port, where does the clamor come from and what initiates it for this emergency bill? In other words, why should there be a demand for the admission of foreign-built ships to carry the commerce of our country over-seas if the ports are now encumbered with unladen vessels?

Mr. GALLINGER. I suppose Capt. Dollar knows what he writes about. The Senator does not impugn Capt. Dollar, and no man in this body will do it. He has given testimony before committees and commissions in this body and the other House.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I will say this for Capt. Dollar, that I have very great confidence in him, but the Senator must not forget that he has foreign-registered as well as American-registered ships.

Mr. GALLINGER. So he says. And he says that this bill, by putting foreign ships under American registry in the coastwise trade, would be an advantage to him, but he does not think it either wise or fair.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I would say that Capt. Dollar is a patriotic man, so far as I know.

Mr. GALLINGER. I think Capt. Dollar is well known to be a patriotic man. I never heard his integrity or his patriotism questioned before; but in this debate every man who stands for American interests in this country is unpatriotic. That is about what it amounts to. I repudiate it. Capt. Dollar is known to a great many of us, and he is known to be a patriotic citizen.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New Hampshire yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. GALLINGER. Certainly.

Mr. McCUMBER. Will the Senator state whether or not those 40 ships mentioned by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. BURTON] can engage in foreign commerce?

Mr. GALLINGER. I am only giving the facts as I have them before me.

Mr. McCUMBER. I am asking for information.

Mr. GALLINGER. I am not going to speculate about it at all.

Mr. BURTON. I should like to answer that I do not believe most of these boats would be available for foreign commerce. Of course those built for the coastwise trade are built with that object in view, and they would not go far from the coast. There are passenger and freight accommodations provided under different conditions and in a different manner from the provision on trans-Atlantic steamers. Some of them would be available for the foreign trade, but I think it would be a comparatively small share. Of course these boats for the coastwise trade could, many of them, go across the ocean, but naturally they would not do so.

Mr. LIPPITT. I should like to say to the Senator from Ohio if these vessels are efficient for the performance of the coastwise trade for which they were built, they would be seriously interfered with by the admission to that same trade of foreign-built vessels, I presume.

Mr. BURTON. I think so. Of course the regulation in regard to masters and watch officers can be suspended. That makes a very serious difference in the cost of operation. I have some figures given me by a company operating boats from New York to the effect that they have a certain class of boats under the Norwegian flag, chartered boats, under an arrangement by which the lessors of the boats furnish officers and seamen. The Norwegian owners pay $85 a month to their captains, yet the same company pays $250 and $225 to the captains of boats having American registry.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, so far as this dearth of steamships on the Pacific coast is concerned, the only testimony that has been presented has been a telegram from one citizen of Seattle. I have forgotten his name. I will ask the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES] if he knows him and what means he has of determining this question. Has he looked beyond Puget Sound to see whether there are American ships available for that trade?

Mr. JONES. I did not understand the first part of the Senator's question.

Mr. GALLINGER. I asked the Senator if he personally knew the man who telegraphed him.

Mr. JONES. Bloedel.

Mr. GALLINGER. Bloedel.

Mr. JONES. Who sent the telegram. I do know Mr. Bloedel. I have known him for a great many years. He is one of the leading business men upon the Pacific coast and a man of great intelligence, and I know that he is familiar with the conditions out there, especially with reference to the lumber trade and with reference to shipping facilities, and that he is thoroughly reliable. Of course I do not know just what he referred to with reference to the particular statement referred to. It has been suggested that there are a great many ships on the Pacific coast that are idle. There may be some ships that are idle, but they are not suitable for the trade we were especially anxious about. There may be some ships that are idle in the local coastwise trade. There is no showing with reference to the vast number of ships mentioned that those ships may be suitable for the trade through the Panama Canal, which is practically over-seas trade.

Mr. GALLINGER. The presumption is that Capt. Dollar would not say that there are 30 ships idle at San Francisco unless he knew they were available for the trade that it is contemplated to put them in.

Mr. JONES. He does not say that those ships are suitable for the over-seas trade.

Mr. GALLINGER. That is to be assumed.

Mr. JONES. Why assume it? That is assuming the whole case.

Mr. GALLINGER. Not at all. In addition, Mr. Luckenbach, of the Luckenbach Steamship Co., says he has ships and that he will take cargoes from Puget Sound to the Atlantic ports in competition with foreign ships upon the same terms. He must have some ships that are available that were properly constructed for that trade.

Mr. JONES. I wish he had given a little more detailed information in reference to the character of ships if he wanted those people to know that he was prepared to carry their products. I do not question Mr. Luckenbach's integrity, but I wish he had stated more facts about his idle ships.

Mr. BORAH. It would be well for him to communicate with the people who have cargoes.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, that is neither here nor there. One man sends a telegram here who has not looked beyond his nose to ascertain whether there are ships or not, but the men who have ships and say they are ready to put them into the service have their motives impugned, and the suggestion is made that they are not to be relied upon.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President——

Mr. GALLINGER. I yield to the Senator from North Dakota.

Mr. GRONNA. The Senator from Washington says that Capt. Dollar does not state that these ships are suitable for over-seas trade, but it seems to me that that is not the question. They certainly would be valuable for the coastwise trade.

Mr. JONES. That is not the question which was involved in the matter that I was especially interested in in the original proposition. The conference committee has broadened the proposition as it passed the Senate, so that it will include the coastwise trade generally and permit all vessels of American registry to engage in the coastwise trade.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Mr. President——

Mr. GALLINGER. I yield to the Senator from New Jersey with pleasure.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Mr. President, in this committee report, which is the veritable Jones amendment that I voted against with all interest and gusto, and it was carried by 1 vote. This committee, strange to say, found it wise to incorporate it in their report. When I read the names of O'GORMAN, THORNTON, SHIELDS, and BORAH I feel astounded, and I wonder what next. I am utterly opposed to this report carrying with it this amendment. My State is up in arms against it. The shipbuilding interests and the labor interests are protesting against it.

In answer to the argument that there is no coastwise tonnage available, I had a statement handed to me by a gentleman who knows and who is interested and identified with the great maritime interests of our country. He states that the total American coastwise tonnage to-day is 771,000 tons, American-owned foreign registry 1,062,000 tons, making a grand total of available tonnage of 1,833,000 tons. He gives a list here. He says all vessels in the above list could be made available at the port of Boston within 30 days, and many of them are immediately available.

It is estimated that there is to-day available for foreign commerce under the American flag a dead-weight tonnage of approximately 1,000,000, distributed on an average of approximately 6,000 to 7,000 tons, and that this tonnage can take care of about 30 per cent of our normal foreign trade. Normal marine insurance available at from 3 to 3½ per cent. Insurance upon shipments in vessels of foreign registry converted to the American flag since the outbreak of hostilities would not be available at not less than 12½ per cent, which is deemed prohibitive.

The congestion of trade has been brought to my attention in Galveston, Tex. I ask you to hear what he had to say on that subject. He says it is because of the withdrawal of the German steamship lines from service. He says that the Southern Pacific representatives will verify the statement.

Lewis K. Thurlow, of Crowell & Thurlow, gives the following explanation of the character of competition to which our merchant marine will be subjected if the so-called Jones amendment prevails. A steamship now building for this company at Newport News is to cost $400,000. This identical vessel could have been built in England two months ago for $250,000. Low cost in England is attributable, first, to inexpensive plant, and, second, to specialization in this branch of industry. When this vessel is completed and put in service under American navigation laws, it is up against four specific disadvantages as against its English competitor: First, food, said to be better than that provided in the Navy; second, space for more quarters, much greater than in English ships; third, more men; and, fourth, shorter hours. A still further disadvantage is the fact of higher wages. For instance, on a vessel carrying a crew of 35 men an English master would receive approximately $75 per month, while under American registry the average captain would receive from $160 to $225. The wages paid the crew are in like proportions about double these paid on foreign vessels. All deck and engine officers are required to be American citizens.

Here is the list. It comprises a large number of vessels, which he states, on his own knowledge and judgment as a marine man, are utterly available.

At all events, Mr. President, I am willing to do all I can to advance foreign shipping. I want some method proposed that shall again float our flag on the blue ocean and under our laws. Our marine has multiplied beyond parallel along our coast. We have just opened at great expense the Panama Canal, and now it will give renewed opportunity for American genius and American money and American handiwork to build craft for trade with the Pacific coast. In God's name, at this crisis do not let us give away that advantage which we have gained.

Mr. HUGHES. I wish to ask my colleague if the figures he has given the Senate were furnished to him by the New York Shipbuilding Co.?

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. No; they were not given me by the New York Shipbuilding Co. They were given to me by another source entirely.

Mr. GALLINGER. Suppose they were; what argument would it be?

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I would not care if they came from New York City. That is my birthplace, and I am proud of it, but I do not want to help any one place above another; I want to help my country.

Mr. HUGHES. Does not my colleague know that New York City is the headquarters of the Shipbuilding Trust; that they have built two large cruisers and have others on the ways now in competition with all the shipbuilders of the world?

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I am glad of it.

Mr. HUGHES. That disposes of that question.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I am not apologizing for them. God knows I think they are capable men, men of genius.

Mr. HUGHES. Why should the Senator insist, then, that they should be protected from pauper labor?

Mr. GALLINGER. On the other hand, why should we buy foreign steamships if we can build them ourselves?

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. If we have them, as I believe we have, for the Pacific trade, why in the name of Heaven throw down the bars and open the doors to English competition? This is what I am arguing for in opposing the Jones amendment, which has been incorporated here by the conference report.

Mr. GALLINGER. No; it has been very greatly enlarged.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I know; but still it is the same old dog.

Mr. GALLINGER. It has been greatly enlarged, and is in open violation of the rule that governs conference committees.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Mr. President, I trust most earnestly and seriously that this step shall not be taken, that would break down our coastwise marine. This step carried into execution would be madness upon our part and disaster to our country.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I know that anything which comes from a shipbuilder or a shipowner, or if he chances to live in the city of New York, is under a ban in this body. I perfectly understand that. Yet there have been times, Mr. President, when the perpetuity of the Government was maintained because of the fact that we had a New York City and a Boston and a Baltimore and a Chicago. I think we had better not be too radical or too hasty in denouncing men who are engaged in a legitimate business and who properly contend that their business interests shall be protected under the laws of the United States.

Mr. President, I want to read another telegram from the A. H. Bull Co., who are engaged in the shipping business in the city of New York. They say:

NEW YORK, August 11, 1914.

Hon. JACOB H. GALLINGER,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

We are anxious to extend our business in foreign trade; are most anxious to see legislation that will extend our merchant marine to foreign commerce, but are opposed to hasty legislation, as we do not believe it will result in permanent benefit. We control 12 American steamers—10 built in American yards during the last four years—all well adapted for foreign trade.

I wish that Senators cared to listen to this side of the controversy. The telegram continues:

In anticipation of the passage of the Alexander bill—

That is the same bill that came to the Senate—

have obtained prices for foreign cargo steamers. Foreign owners have increased prices from $50,000 to $150,000 on boats from 4,500 to 7,000 tons dead-weight capacity, according to age and size of steamers. At this price, with further uncertainty as to the cost of operation when conditions become normal, makes the investment extremely uncertain and hazardous. Coastwise trade already overstocked with tonnage.

I suppose this firm knows something about that matter; I do not imagine they are talking nonsense or trying to mislead the people of the country or the Congress. Listen further:

We have one steamer built two years ago now loading for Frisco, which will not receive sufficient freight money to pay at rate of 5 per cent on investment and nothing toward depreciation. Therefore believe immediate legislation is not needed, and think more real good can be accomplished by taking sufficient time to frame a bill which will be permanent in its effects than to hurry one through which, so far as one can tell, merely permits a gamble to the length of the war and the prospective needs of transportation for that uncertain period.

A. H. BULL & CO.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New Hampshire yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. GALLINGER. I do.

Mr. THOMAS. I should like to inquire of the Senator from New Hampshire how, if the coastwise trade is already overstocked with tonnage, this measure can in any wise affect the coastwise shipping trade or coastwise shipbuilding, and how outside foreign-built ships can be attracted by this law when there is no business for them to do?

Mr. GALLINGER. Oh, Mr. President, they will be here. The foreigners want to get into our coastwise trade, and as their ships cost much less than ours, they can compete with us on unequal terms. Foreigners have spent a great deal of money to break down the coastwise laws of the United States, both by direct expenditure and by advertising in the great newspapers of the country.

Mr. LIPPITT. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from New Hampshire, if I may be allowed to do so, if it would not be something of an injustice to allow foreign-built ships to come into the coastwise trade when they have been built abroad at from a third to a half of the sum that our American shipowners have been obliged to pay for their vessels?

Mr. GALLINGER. Certainly it would.

Mr. LIPPITT. It seems to me that the mere statement of that case is a sufficient reason for not admitting foreign-built vessels to the coastwise trade, particularly as the Senator from Colorado is apparently prepared to argue there is no use for them anyway.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, if it be true that the supply of tonnage for the coastwise shipping is already in excess of the demand for it, it is inconceivable to me that this bill, if it shall pass, will in the slightest degree prove attractive to the registry of foreign vessels. Foreigners may be desirous of getting a part of the coastwise trade, but they certainly will not be desirous of getting it when there is nothing to be gained.

Mr. GALLINGER. Does not the Senator from Colorado think that this country can manufacture all the textiles it wants and needs for its own people?

Mr. THOMAS. If they are manufacturing——

Mr. GALLINGER. I will ask the Senator to answer the question directly. Does the Senator from Colorado take the position that we can not manufacture the textiles for this country, if we are given the opportunity to do so by keeping out foreign competition?

Mr. THOMAS. We can do it; yes.

Mr. GALLINGER. Yes.

Mr. THOMAS. But if we are already manufacturing more than we need we need not be afraid of any importations of foreign textiles when the market is in that condition.

Mr. GALLINGER. Why not, if the foreigners are manufacturing them cheaper and they can be sold cheaper in the American market?

Mr. THOMAS. Simply because the fact that we can manufacture for our market is an indication; it is a proof of the fact that our production is just as cheap as the foreign production. There has to be a demand, Mr. President, before there can be any invasion of either foreign goods or of foreign tonnage.

Mr. LIPPITT. Certainly, Mr. President, if the Senator from New Hampshire will allow me——

Mr. GALLINGER. I yield.

Mr. LIPPITT. The Senator from Colorado knows that while we may be able to manufacture certain products in this country, we can only sell them at certain prices, and if the market of this country is so arranged that somebody outside of it can make a given article at a lower price than we can, it would make no difference at all what our ability might be and what the capacity of our machinery to manufacture that article if we could not manufacture it at a profit.

The Senator from New Hampshire asked the Senator from Colorado whether we could not manufacture all our textiles, and the Senator from Colorado said yes, and then went on to say that it would make no difference whether that machinery was run or not if some foreign country was allowed to land its textiles at a lower price than we could afford to manufacture them.

Mr. THOMAS. I did not say that.

Mr. LIPPITT. Certainly the Senator can not mean to put himself in such a position as that.

Mr. THOMAS. I did not say that, Mr. President.

Mr. LIPPITT. I can not think the Senator did mean to say it, but, if my ears heard correctly, that is what he did say.

Mr. THOMAS. It is possible that I may have said it, but I do not think so. What I said, in substance, was that this country could manufacture all textiles necessary for consumption, but if it did manufacture textiles sufficient for the consumption of the country it would be because of the fact that it could do so at a price that would make importations unnecessary.

The argument of the Senator from Rhode Island as applied to the statement in the telegram just read by the Senator from New Hampshire, if it means anything, means that there is at present a surplus of tonnage for the coastwise traffic because the charges or rates for its use are practically prohibitive, and that the danger lies in the addition to our tonnage of foreign-built ships which will result in a reduction in the rates of traffic. That is what we want, Mr. President, and we want it at this juncture. If it be true that coastwise shipping is idle because of the rates they charge, then no better argument can be advanced in favor of the measure as it has been reported from the conference committee.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, a free trader is never consistent. The Senator from Colorado is a man who has now discovered that coastwise shipping is idle because of the rates they charge. Nobody else has ever suggested that, and that is not a fact.

I have a letter here from a firm of which I never heard before, and they belong to the list of bankers of this country, who are somewhat under the ban in the view of some people. They live in New York City, which is never alluded to here without a sneer on the part of some Senators. I am going to read the letter myself to save the overworked clerks. It is dated August 12, and is as follows:

PROPOSED SHIPPING MEASURE.

NEW YORK, August 12, 1914.

HON. JACOB H. GALLINGER,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: Referring to telegram sent to you to-day on this subject, of which we inclose copy, this matter is not only of tremendous importance, but there is no immediate hurry about admitting foreign ships to the American flag in the coastwise trade, for the simple reason that there are many ships especially built for the coastwise trade now lying idle for the lack of business.

We are quite prepared to agree that there is an urgent need to transport American products to foreign ports, and we are in favor of admitting foreign ships for the purpose of engaging in this trade, provided this is not contrary to the international laws.

Under the present American navigation laws it costs about 35 per cent to 40 per cent more to operate an American vessel than it does a foreign one, irrespective of the question as to the first cost of the American vessel, which is probably equal to from 30 per cent to 50 per cent additional. It is for this reason that there are practically no American ships available for foreign trade. It has not paid to build American ships and operate them in this class of business.

DOMESTIC TRADE.

When it comes, however, to the question of admitting foreign ships to trade between American ports, we beg to say that, while it is undoubtedly within the discretion of Congress to amend the present shipping act, this should not be done without giving an opportunity of all parties in interest to be heard.

Just there, Mr. President, I want to dwell upon that matter. A tremendous change is to be made in the navigation laws of the United States. Those laws which have stood the test for more than a hundred years, which have been debated in both Houses of Congress over and over again by distinguished men, are to be swept off the statute books, practically without the question ever having gone to the committee having that matter in charge or having been debated in either House of Congress. It is to be done on a conference report brought in here under the plea that there is an emergency existing to-day which demands that the part of this legislation relating to over-seas trade shall immediately be passed.

The letter continues:

The following question must be weighed: What will be the effect of admitting foreign ships to this class of trade on the vested interests in vessel property now existing?

I think that is worthy of the consideration of men who want to be fair. An American vessel has cost $1,000,000, a foreign vessel has cost $750,000; both are of the same capacity, of the same tonnage, and of the same speed; and yet we are going to admit that foreign vessel into our coastwise trade in competition with the American vessel which cost $250,000 more, and we call it equity! It is arrant discrimination against our own people and against American interests, and nothing else. My correspondent further says:

If boats costing one-third less and doing business for about one-third less are admitted in competition with our own ships in our domestic trade without reasonable notice to the owners thereof, then this would be the annihilation of a good many millions of dollars of capital invested in such property, and amounts to a calamity.

Undoubtedly the purpose of the proposed bill is to encourage American shipping, ship construction, and investment in ships. The effect of the bill it is proposed to pass would be the opposite. Capital in American shipping would be destroyed and it would encourage speculation in foreign ships. The American shipyards would be without work, would close down and go out of business, and in case of war, in which the United States might become involved, there would be no shipyards to look to for building our ships, especially so as the navy yards of the United States are proposed to be opened for the repairing of ships—thus competing with privately owned companies which at the present time are lacking in work.

That provision has been eliminated in the conference report—

We have placed in the last few years several million dollars' worth of bonds throughout the Eastern and Central States secured by ships built in American yards along the Great Lakes and the Atlantic coast. The effect of this bill would be to destroy the value of these bonds, which are held by individuals and banks throughout the eastern part of the country, and the sequence would be that none of these investors, individual or corporate, would ever again be willing to invest in vessel property. In placing these securities we have been pioneering and have contributed toward the upbuilding of the American mercantile marine. The proposed bill destroys our work and the confidence which we have built up in the permanency of maritime investments.

Furthermore, we would like to direct your attention to the following clause in the proposed bill, which actually discriminates against American ships and gives foreign-built ships a preference: American-built ships have to undergo inspection and to conform to certain regulations and specifications. Under the proposed bill the President has the right to waive these provisions as far as foreign-built ships are concerned, thus putting foreign bottoms into preferential position as against American bottoms.

Further comment is unnecessary on this kind of hasty legislation, which is accelerated by hysteria for an American merchant marine to carry our products to foreign ports.

The real trouble about the stoppage of our export traffic to-day is not due to the lack of ships but to the unsettled condition of the exchange market and to the difficulty of arranging for insurance. There are lots of American boats tied up to the docks ready and available for commerce if the rate of exchange and insurance can be arranged.

The act is so loosely drawn that the section which provides for the ownership of boats by American citizens can easily be circumvented.

Our suggestion is that a joint committee from the House and Senate should be empowered to go into this matter thoroughly and investigate all phases and then draw up a bill.

Very truly, yours, F. J. LISMAND CO.

Mr. President, a few days ago, when the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES], who is one of the ablest and most adroit Members of this body, and whose words always carry a great deal of influence, proposed the amendment that he did, I said that that was entrance of the camel's head into the tent and that in due time the entire animal would be found inside of that inclosure. The amendment of the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] put a portion of the camel's body into the tent and the conference report puts it all in, unless it be that the two-year limitation may allow the tail to remain out; but, as I believe that the tail ought to go with the hide, it seems to me that the entire animal is there now.

I am somewhat astounded, Mr. President, that any portion of the Democratic Party should commit itself to this legislation. I have been accustomed to hear Thomas Jefferson called the patron saint of the Democratic Party, and I have been a great admirer of that very distinguished man, whose services to the Nation can not possibly be overestimated. In studying the subject of the American merchant marine, which I have done with some care, I have turned to the writings of those men who more than 100 years ago discussed this question. I was impressed with the attitude that Thomas Jefferson took on the question of American shipping, and I want to read just two brief extracts from his works. They were written in 1794. Jefferson said:

To force shipbuilding is to establish shipyards; is to form magazines; to multiply useful hands; to produce artists and workmen of every kind who may be found at once for the peaceful speculations of commerce and for the terrible wants of war. * * * For a navigating people to purchase its marine afloat would be a strange speculation, as the marine would always be dependent on the merchants furnishing them. Placing, as a reserve, with a foreign nation or in a foreign shipyard the carpenters, blacksmiths, calkers, sailmakers, and the vessels of a nation would be a singular commercial combination. We must, therefore, build them for ourselves.

Again Jefferson said:

The loss of seamen unnoticed would be followed by other losses in a long train. If we have no seamen our ships will be useless; consequently our ship timber, iron, and hemp; our shipbuilding will be at an end; ship carpenters will go over to other nations; our young men will have no call to the sea; our products, carried in foreign bottoms, be saddled with war freight and insurance in time of war.

Prophetic, Mr. President, and prayerfully commended to the consideration of my Democratic friends.

Now, I want to discuss the conference report calmly and dispassionately, in the hope that the Senate in its wisdom may see not only the propriety but the necessity of rejecting the report when it is voted on.

Mr. President, an emergency bill to meet the crisis of a great foreign war and to admit foreign-built ships to American registry for over-seas carrying would have been enacted at least a week ago if it had not been for a determined effort to utilize this war emergency for a sectional and partisan attack upon the coastwise or domestic shipping laws of the United States. For whatever undue delay there has been in the meeting of this emergency the authors of the attack upon the coastwise trade are entirely responsible.

OUR GREAT COASTWISE FLEET.

The emergency bill, as originally framed and passed by the other House of Congress, was a measure of somewhat doubtful wisdom in many of its details, but it was at least an honest attempt to grapple with an extraordinary situation. It can not be emphasized too strongly that no extraordinary situation existed in the coastwise trade. The American shipping engaged in this domestic trade, from which since the days of Washington and Jefferson all foreign ships have been excluded, has increased as steadily as the other and unprotected branch of our shipping has declined. In 1883 there were 2,858,570 tons of American shipping enrolled for coastwise commerce on the Great Lakes and the rivers of the country and the ocean. In 1913 this thoroughly American domestic fleet had increased to 6,726,340 tons, and I believe it now exceeds 7,000,000 tons.

Allowing for the fact that the coastwise fleet has come to be composed more and more of steam tonnage and that one ton of steam tonnage is usually reckoned as equivalent in efficiency to three tons of sail tonnage, the growth of the American coastwise fleet is one of the notable achievements of our industrial history. This American coastwise fleet, engaged exclusively in carrying freight and passengers from one American port to another, has a tonnage nearly one-half as great again as the total foreign-going and coastwise tonnage of the German Empire, more than thrice the total tonnage of Norway, and twice the total tonnage of France and Italy combined.

The coastwise shipowners, shipbuilders, and sailors have been given absolute protection by our Government, and they have "made good" under it. They have created a coastwise fleet, all American, incomparably the greatest in the world, and incomparably the first in its general seaworthiness and efficiency. It is not merely a trade of short and sheltered voyages. The distance from New England to Galveston is 2,000 miles. The distance from New York to San Francisco, around the Horn, is 13,000 miles, one of the longest voyages on which ships sail in all the world. Even when the Panama Canal is opened, as it is to be to-morrow, and that short cut is available, the distance from Sandy Hook to the Golden Gate will be 5,000 miles, or nearly twice the distance from Sandy Hook across the North Atlantic to Liverpool.

AN ATTACK ON AMERICAN OFFICERS AND SEAMEN.

In the coastwise trade to-day are 24,756 out of 27,070 American vessels and fully seven-eighths of our American officers and sailors. All of the officers are required by present law to be American citizens, and the records of the Government show that of the crews shipped by Federal commissioners on American vessels substantially one-half are American citizens, the great majority of whom are American born. Twenty years ago scarcely one-third of the crews so shipped were American citizens, so that the number of American officers and American seamen afloat in our coast trade has steadily increased with the increase of the ships themselves. It is in the coast fleet, so wantonly attacked in this conference report, that the great bulk of the American officers and men are serving, on whom, as an indispensable reserve of our fighting Navy, the Nation would have to depend in a foreign war.

This conference report will open the way to a destruction of our naval reserve by admitting to the coastwise service not only foreign-built ships but the foreign officers and the men who man them, with whom in cheapness of fare and cheapness of wages self-respecting Americans can not possibly compete.

BREAKING THE NATION'S PLEDGE.

There is a lamentable lack of American ships in over-seas trade; that is generally admitted; but there is no lack of American ships in coastwise carrying. American coastwise vessels built in 1912 numbered 1,505, of 233,669 tons; in 1913, 1,475, of 346,155 tons. For several years construction in American shipyards has been particularly active, largely owing to American preparation for the coastwise trade through the Panama Canal. The men who built those ships, the men who own them and who man them, did not dream that they were going to be betrayed by their own Government, and that the great canal, which $400,000,000 of American money had created, was going to be diverted under the guise of an "emergency" measure to the enrichment of the shipbuilders and shipowners of Europe and Japan.

The United States, by its century-old policy, invited the shipbuilders, shipowners, and seamen of America to prepare to carry the great coast-to-coast trade that would flow through the canal when it was opened. The Government virtually said to them: "Build and launch your new ships, equip and man them, make your plans, prepare your terminals—you will not be able for reasons you know well to send American ships through the canal in over-seas trade, but the coastwise commerce you have always had and always will have—it is your right and your own."

Accepting this, American shipowners have placed so many American vessels in readiness that it is estimated that the American ships of regular freight-carrying lines already scheduled will provide a sailing from the Atlantic or the Pacific every business day throughout the year. One of the American steamship companies is said to have enough vessels available for the canal service and for the naval reserve in time of war to be able with its own ships to carry coal enough to supply the entire battleship fleet of the United States Navy in another voyage around the world.

But this conference report not only strikes down at one blow all the costly and elaborate preparations that have been made for coastwise commerce through the Panama Canal, but all the existing shipping business between the various ports up and down the Atlantic, the Pacific, and the Gulf of Mexico. Nor are the Great Lakes spared. Steamships approximately 260 feet in length and of a carrying capacity of about 4,000 tons can be brought out from Europe through the Canadian canals under the terms of this conference report and placed upon the coastwise routes along the whole chain of lakes between Duluth and Buffalo. No trade, no route escapes. This conference report applies the principle of absolute free trade to the great industry of shipbuilding, which Jefferson exhorted his countrymen to regard as one of the most vital safeguards of their prosperity and independence.

A BLOW AT LABOR.

All materials for the construction, equipment, or repair of vessels in this country for either the foreign or the coastwise trade can be imported free of duty. Steel plates and beams are usually no higher in price in America than in Europe. Yet it is the concurrent testimony of informed men that it costs on the average from 40 to 50 per cent more to build a ship of a given size and type in the United States than it costs in Europe. The difference manifestly is not one of material. It is almost wholly a difference in labor—and it is American labor, the skilled American labor of our national shipyards—that is deliberately sacrificed by the provisions of this conference report admitting free of all duty to the coastwise trade all foreign-built ships that for the next two years are given American registry.

Is it a wonder, Mr. President, that the laboring men of this country are alarmed over this proposition? Is it a wonder that they are protesting against any legislation that strikes a blow at the industry in which they are engaged?

Mr. President, while I do not claim to be a prophet nor the son of a prophet, I assert here to-day that if this legislation becomes a fact the men who are responsible for it will be called to a very severe account by the laboring men and the labor unions of the United States. It is equivalent to a provision to place absolutely on the free list for two years all cotton or woolen or silk fabrics, or tools or cutlery or other highly finished products of our manufacturing industry. The party that, though only a minority of the American people, now controls this Congress and rules this Nation did not dare to go to such an extreme as this in its recent reduction of the tariff, which before war was declared in Europe had brought grave loss and suffering upon all the chief industries of the United States.

This conference report singles out the manufacturing industry of shipbuilding for special and utter sacrifice. It is not given the advantage of even the incidental protection of a duty of 5 or 10 per cent. It is left with no protection whatsoever against the shipbuilding industries of other lands, which pay one-half of the American wage or less, and, in addition, have long enjoyed the subsidies and bounties of solicitous governments.

PROTECTION A NATIONAL POLICY.

I make the statement—and I make it advisedly—that absolute free trade never would have been suddenly, without warning, forced upon this industry if it were an industry that could have been pursued in all or most of our States. But natural conditions confine this business to the seaboard, and, unfortunately, chiefly to the northern seaboard and to the northern Lakes. The authors of this attack upon the industry, themselves rejecting the whole idea of protection as iniquitous and unconstitutional, have invited, and, I regret to say, have received in this instance, in the amendments adopted in the Senate, the cooperation of some Senators from inland States who are insistent protectionists, so far as the agricultural industries of their own people are concerned.

In all sincerity and fairness, I would like to ask the Senators from the Mississippi Valley and the Rocky Mountains or the farther West who voted for free trade in great ocean ships for coastwise traffic between our Atlantic and Pacific seaboards, or for coastwise traffic from the Gulf to the Atlantic coast, how they can reconcile their action with their avowed support of the protectionist principle, and particularly with their earnest demand for a restoration of adequate tariff protection upon their wheat and corn, their wool, their barley, cattle, meat, vegetables, and dairy products—something that I will gladly help them to secure?

Go to a seaport on the Atlantic coast or the Pacific. There on the wharf stands a bag of wool from Idaho or Wyoming. Alongside the wharf floats a great coastwise ship, the consummate product of technical skill and manufacturing efficiency, into which a hundred trades have entered. By what political sophistry or economic philosophy can protection be justified to the American growers of that raw wool and denied to the other Americans who wrought that steamship?

Is protection right for the prairie and the mountain range and wrong for the shore of the sea? The Republican Party in its victorious and glorious past has upheld protection as a national policy. It can never be justified as a sectional policy for the benefit of farmers, ranchmen, or any other class of our citizens and refused to shipbuilders and seamen. I say with all kindliness to those who profess adherence to protection and yet voted free trade to American shipbuilding, that for them will inevitably come a day of regret and reparation.

NO LACK OF COASTWISE SHIPS.

A vote for this conference report, and therefore for free trade in shipbuilding in America, can not be defended by any plea that more ships are needed for our coastwise commerce. A real emergency exists in the over-seas trade—the export and import trade of the United States—because in that trade we have left 92 per cent of our foreign carrying to the ships and men of foreign Governments. Both ships and men are now unavailable to us under the flags of the principal carrying nations because of a great and deadly war. But there is no war in the coast trade. There are ships and men enough there—and more than enough for all the commerce to be carried now—and more than enough, when the Panama Canal is opened.

The other day there was presented to the Senate a list of more than 160 steamships from which lumber carriers, coal carriers, grain carriers, and general cargo vessels could be selected for the traffic through the canal from the North Pacific coast, where it had been asserted in telegrams to the Senate that only two American steamships were available, although there are on the Pacific coast a million tons of American shipping, or averaged up, a thousand vessels of a thousand tons gross register each. A single shipping company, since that telegram was read in the Senate, has formally offered to contract to carry all the lumber that will be shipped this year through the canal from Puget Sound. Many companies are going into this canal coastwise service. Lumber tonnage will be offered to the Puget Sound people by many independent competing steamship companies of the Atlantic coast. The unvarying testimony of practical shipping men who are going into this trade is that there will be more shipping space than there will be lumber for a long time after the canal is opened. Nowhere else except on the North Pacific coast has there been in the entire debate over the impending bill the slightest pretense that any scarcity of coastwise ships existed.

I can assure the Senate that throughout the past spring and the present summer, because of the general depressed and halting condition of business, the volume of coastwise commerce has been seriously reduced. In every important port on the Atlantic and the Pacific coasts many coastwise carriers have been lying idle—17 at Boston, for example, more than 30 at New York, and nearly 40 at San Francisco. Even some of the newest and most capacious cargo steamers of the coast fleet have been swinging at their anchors or tugging at their cables alongside deserted piers.

It is in the face of this condition of depression and unemployment that this conference report now strikes a wicked blow at what is left of the American merchant marine and American shipbuilding by establishing absolute free trade in the industry and throwing against our unemployed American coastwise ships the unemployed ships of all the world. It is heaping misfortune on misfortune to American ships and American crews for the benefit of foreigners.

MISUSING THE AMERICAN FLAG.

The bill passed by the Senate was bad enough, but the conference report is vastly worse. In the Senate bill, on the motion of the Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS], an amendment had been inserted requiring that in the case of any corporation hereafter purchasing and registering a foreign ship pursuant to the act a majority of the stock should be held by American citizens. This wise safeguard is dispensed with in the conference report, which leaves ownership by corporations defined only by the loose and dangerous language of the Panama Canal act of August, 1912; that is to say, the conference report would allow the Cunard Steamship Co., subsidized by Great Britain, or the North German Lloyd Co., subsidized by Germany, or the French line, or a Japanese line, to take its older and slower ships, built by subsidy and long run under subsidy, and put them into the coastwise trade of the United States from Boston to Savannah, from New York to New Orleans, from New York or Philadelphia to San Francisco, from New York to Porto Rico, from San Francisco or Seattle to Hawaii.

All that would have to be done in such a case—all that is required by the conference report, which the Congress of the United States is now asked to enact—is for the British or German or Japanese or French steamship managers to step across from New York to Jersey City, organize there a dummy corporation, with one of their naturalized clerks as president, and stenographers or office boys as directors, and then transfer their foreign-built ships to the American register, with their foreign officers and crews complete, under the discretion given to the President to remit not only the requirement imposed on all American-built ships that their masters and officers shall be American citizens, but the further requirement that the ships must comply with the United States inspection laws as to seaworthiness, safety, and efficiency in carrying.

Of course in every such case as this a solemn affidavit will be made that no American officers duly qualified could be found, and these foreign officers will be retained on these foreign-built ships at wages not very much, if any, greater than are paid on real American ships to the seamen in the forecastle or the coal passers in the fireroom.

A BILL FOR THE BENEFIT OF FOREIGNERS.

This bill in the shape in which the conference report has left it is a bill for the benefit of foreigners and for the injury and ruin of real Americans. It is a bill that proposes to dishonor our flag by allowing it to be hoisted over ships in the coastwise trade that are absolutely alien from keel to truck—not only foreign-built but foreign throughout in control and ownership. It is one of the most dangerous and indefensible measures in its present form ever proposed in the American Congress, and I have no doubt that if it could be submitted to-morrow to the votes of the American people it would be condemned by an overwhelming majority of our patriotic citizens East and West, North and South. It is entirely within the range of possibility that within a month after its enactment, if it is enacted, we shall see foreign steamships, foreign owned, foreign officered and manned, with nothing American about them except the flag under which they are masquerading, running in our domestic trade between American ports under subsidies of foreign governments.

The flag means nothing to these people. Has the Senate of the United States so quickly forgotten our experience in the Spanish War of 1898? Merchant ships were desperately needed then for transport and auxiliary service. The resources of our coast fleet, not so large and efficient then as now, were soon exhausted. Before the outbreak of actual hostilities the Government bought ships of foreign register, seeking first those supposed to be owned and controlled by American citizens. Let the Senate consider this well, that in many cases where those foreign ships were actually bought they proved worthless to the Government, because they were promptly deserted by their foreign officers and crews, who refused to risk their lives for a flag they did not love in a war in which they had no interest. These ships lay idle and useless until officers and men could be summoned from all along shore—real Americans, citizens and residents of this country, whose allegiance was given to the flag that was endangered.

MAKING WAR ON AMERICAN SEAMANSHIP.

This bill in its present form not only destroys American shipyards and the art of shipbuilding, American ship owning and all its allied interests, but American seamanship as well, for when these foreign-built ships are brought by their foreign owners through the expedient of a dummy corporation beneath the American flag, the British owners will give the preference to British subjects, the German owners to German subjects, and so with the French or Japanese. There will be no work for American officers or sailors. The national prejudices of the foreigners who will monopolize our domestic trade exactly as they now monopolize our foreign trade will move them to discriminate against Americans in every possible way.

Mr. President, there are boys growing up in our seacoast towns, boys on the school ships maintained by our maritime States, who have an honorable ambition to follow the calling of their fathers. The steady growth of the American merchant marine in coastwise trade has been giving these lads an opportunity. The number of thoroughgoing American sea officers has been increasing, as has the number of American citizens serving on shipboard in more humble capacities. This proposed bill strikes not only at the American shipbuilders of Bath and Boston, of New York, the Delaware, Chesapeake Bay and Newport News, Seattle and San Francisco; not only at the shipbuilders and shipowners all along the shore, but also, and in a most direct and deadly way, at the American officers and sailors, wherever born and wherever found. These men, as their fathers were before them, are the best seamen in the world, as the world's records show. The lowest insurance rates in the world are rates given to American steamships of the coast trade, and given to them because they are the most efficiently and safely handled. The real American sailor on the bridge or on the deck is to-day, as he has been for two centuries, the consummate master of his calling in peace or war.

This conference report, if adopted, will not only rob the American shipbuilder and shipowner of his dividends, but it will rob the American sailor of his livelihood. Where, then, will be our Naval Reserve in time of war? Do you think that we can hire British and Germans and French and Dutch and Italians and Scandinavians and Japanese to officer and man our auxiliary ships and fight our battles? It is an unerring instinct of self-preservation that requires that all the officers and enlisted men of the American Navy shall be American citizens, and it is an eloquent fact that to-day practically all the officers and 90 per cent of the men are American born.

This bill as it is now framed, with its absolute free trade in foreign-built ships and its attack upon the wise regulation that ship officers shall be American citizens, is a measure for the destruction of the sailor's profession in the United States—more fatal to our national defense than the actual broadsides of an enemy.

We have lost our over-seas shipping, or all but a fragment of it, and with the ships we have lost our American officers and men. Seven-eighths, or perhaps more, of all our officers and seamen now employed on the ocean are in the coastwise trade. This bill in the form in which it is now proposed would sweep these Americans off the seas. I repeat again that the bill is a measure for the ruin of Americans and for the benefit of foreigners.

WHY AMERICAN CHIPS COST MORE.

A good American steamship like the newest of those now running in the coastwise trade costs in an American shipyard, if of 5,000 or 6,000 tons gross register, equipped both for freight and for a moderate number of passengers, a sum not far from $675,000. Its materials are all free of duty under the existing law; but, simply and solely because American wages in the shipyard are from 80 to 100 per cent higher than European wages for the same kind and amount of work, this American steamship costs about $200,000 more than a foreign steamship of similar size, speed, and equipment.

Who will pay $200,000 more for an American steamship when under free trade in shipbuilding a foreign steamship can be purchased? The American master of such an American-built ship will be paid about $200 a month. A foreign master can be secured for $100, or perhaps $125, and the wages of his officers and crews are in like proportion. Under the Japanese flag wages are lower still. Japanese seamen receive $8 a month, as compared with $20 to $50 a month for Americans, and Japanese shipyards pay their mechanics 30 or 40 cents a day, while the Japanese Government, besides, gives a bounty of $12 per ton for new construction.

WHO ARE THE BENEFICIARIES?

I will invite the attention of the distinguished Senator from New York, the chairman of the committee (Mr. O'GORMAN), to the fact that the principal beneficiaries under this bill will be the shipyards, the shipowners, and the seamen of Great Britain, Japan, and other foreign countries.

The United States is nominally neutral in the great war now convulsing Europe. But by this bill in the form in which the Senator from New York presents and supports it the American Congress is actually in effect conferring upon England and English sea power, and also upon Japan and Japanese sea power, a greater boon than could be secured by a victory in war. British shipyards are the fruit of $400,000,000 of British subsidies given in 60 years to British steamship services. With such an industry so lavishly and persistently protected, backed at every point by Government and national support, American competition is absolutely impossible. The bill which the Senator from New York champions is in its present form the greatest advantage which the American Congress can possibly confer on Great Britain. Are the people of the Senator's own State of New York, as of my State of New Hampshire, under any obligation of duty or affection to the British Government that they should sacrifice American shipbuilding and American navigation in the way which this bill proposes? I think not, and I am sure that at any other time and under any other conditions he and I would be in entire agreement on any such proposition as this, so vitally involving the safety and the welfare of our country in peace and war alike.

A BILL TO DESTROY OUR SHIPYARDS.

Mr. President, these American commercial shipyards, which the absolute free trade proposed in the pending bill will inevitably destroy, are the yards which have built nearly all of the present battleship fleet of the United States. Imagine the incalculable value of the destruction of these shipyards, and the crippling of our means of national defense, to foreign Governments, our rivals in trade and possible enemies in war. There never was a time when the need of an adequate fighting Navy was more manifest and better understood than now by the American people. No part of the responsibility for the destruction of American shipyards, and the consequent impairment of our power to build battleships and to repair them in peace or war, will be assumed by me, and I earnestly hope that none will be assumed by the political party of which I am a member. If this bill is passed it must be passed with the assured understanding that only one of the Government navy yards of the United States is yet equipped to build a dreadnought. There are at least six private shipyards on the Atlantic coast and two on the Pacific that are equipped to build these heavy men-of-war, and if you close and destroy these shipyards it will cost the United States Government at least $100,000,000 to replace the plants that are eliminated.

This, Mr. President, may be looked upon as an extreme statement, but I will nevertheless say that this bill, if it becomes a law in its present form, will make the grass grow for at least two years in every shipyard on either coast of the United States.

Mr. President, if we can get a foreign ship costing $500,000 in its construction as against $750,000 built in an American shipyard, is it conceivable that a single American ship will be built in an American shipyard through these two eventful years? And it must not be forgotten that these foreign ships when they are admitted to our register and become part of our coastwise fleet are to continue there indefinitely.

PARALYZING THE COAST TRADE.

The enactment of this proposed legislation will throw 25,000 mechanics and laborers out of employment in American shipyards, and give employment, if it provides any work at all, to mechanics and laborers in Europe and Japan. It will turn our ship-owning business over to the subsidized and bountied steamship companies of foreign Governments. It will drive American officers and seamen off the ocean. It will give to foreigners, who now control 92 per cent of our over-seas carrying, the monopoly also of our domestic carrying. The American flag borne by these foreign-built, foreign-owned, foreign-officered, and foreign-manned steamships in American domestic commerce will be a fiction and nothing more. In time of war and trouble these ships, whose actual control will be in Europe and Japan, will inevitably be taken out of our coast trade, as foreign ships have been out of our over-seas trade. The American flag will be hauled down and the foreign flag of the real owners substituted. We have let foreign ships control the carrying of our imports and exports. They have failed us in this emergency. Pass this bill, turning our coastwise commerce also over to foreigners, and in the case of any war like the present one it will be possible for foreigners to paralyze the carrying trade between Boston and Savannah, between New York and New Orleans, between Seattle and San Francisco, and between the Atlantic and Pacific ports of the United States as completely as our trade is now paralyzed from American ports to the ports of foreign nations.

NO COASTWISE SHIPPING TRUST.

Mr. President, just a word as to the alleged shipping trust or combination in the coastwise trade. The Senator from New York [Mr. O'GORMAN] gravely stated this morning that 92 per cent of the coastwise trade was dominated by a trust.

It is stated in the report of the House Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries that investigated recently steamship trusts and combinations in the foreign and domestic trade that—

> All told, the 30 lines referred to, * * * as controlled by railroads or shipping consolidations, operate 330 steamers of 868,741 gross tons, or nearly 70 per cent of the total number of steamers and 74 per cent of the tonnage.

The Senator from New York put it at 92 per cent. This statement refers to the entire coastwise and Great Lakes trade of the United States, but, as the report distinctly says (p. 403), the statement deals exclusively with the "regular-line services."

Mr. President, in this connection I can not refrain from saying that it always interests me to hear the declamations against American combinations and America shipping trusts, when every sane man who has given this subject one moment's consideration knows that the greatest trust in all this world is the shipping trust of Great Britain. There is no escape from that statement, and yet we discuss American combinations and American shipping trusts, and propose to legislate to turn our coastwise trade over to the mercy of the shipping trust of foreign countries.

This statement of the House committee has been misinterpreted as meaning that 74 per cent of the entire tonnage in the coastwise trade of the United States was controlled by "railroads or shipping consolidations."

This is a grave error, as I pointed out on a former occasion, but it does not seem to have found lodgment in the minds of some Senators.

The truth is that most of the coastwise tonnage of the United States consists not of regular liners but of tramp vessels, steam and sail, going wherever cargoes are to be found. A small part relatively of this tramp tonnage may consist of tugboats and barges used chiefly for coal and owned by railroads. But the ownership of by far the greatest part of the coastwise shipping is wholly independent of and competitive with railroads and shipping combinations.

This is clearly seen from the fact that the 868,741 gross tons of steamships described in the House report as "controlled by railroads or shipping consolidations" is only a fraction of the total coastwise shipping which, according to the report of Commissioner of Navigation, consisted of 6,736,340 tons on June 30, 1913.

In other words, only one-seventh or less of the total tonnage of the American merchant marine in the coastwise trade appears by the House committee report to be controlled by the "railroads and shipping consolidations" mentioned.

On the other hand, the House report brings out the fact that the most formidable, aggressive, and oppressive shipping trusts and combinations are those of foreign flags and foreign ownership in the foreign trade of the United States.

The committee says (p. 415), in summarizing its findings, that—

> The facts contained in the foregoing report show that it is the almost universal practice of steamship lines engaged in the American foreign trade to operate, both on the inbound and outbound voyages, under the terms of written agreements, conference agreements, or gentlemen's understandings. * * * Eighty such agreements or understandings, involving practically all the regular steamship lines operating on nearly every American foreign-trade route, are described in the foregoing report.

It is to the tender mercies of these foreign steamship combinations, monopolizing our foreign commerce, that the pending bill proposes to turn over the coastwise trade of the United States.

It may be added, Mr. President, that in the Panama Canal act of 1912 an important beginning is made in an effort to divorce existing American steamship companies from the control of railroads, and proceedings are already being brought to that end. Moreover, ships owned by railroads or illegal combinations in restraint of trade are forbidden by that act the use of the Panama Canal.

The six American commercial shipyards that can build dreadnoughts are the Bath Iron Works, of Bath, Me.; the Fore River Shipbuilding Corporation, of Quincy, Mass.; the New York Shipbuilding Co., of Camden, N. J.; the William Cramp & Sons Ship & Engine Co., of Philadelphia; the Maryland Steel Co., of Baltimore; the Newport News Shipbuilding & Dry Dock Co., of Virginia; the Union Iron Works, of San Francisco; and the Seattle Shipbuilding Co., of Seattle, Wash. Why not give employment to the men in these yards rather than to foreign competitors?

Again, if foreign ships are cheaper to build in foreign yards, why should not most of them be built there and why will they not go there for their repairs as well as for construction?

AN INCONCEIVABLE PROPOSAL.

Mr. President, I have never before felt so profoundly a duty that I owe, not to the people of my own State, because we have no shipyards and only a few ships in New Hampshire, but to the people of this country, as I do at this moment. These laws, as I have before said, have been on the statute books since the days of Washington. They have been amended and liberalized from time to time. They are not perfect. Beyond a doubt they need revision. They have been discussed by great men in this body and in the other House of Congress. They have been discussed in maritime journals and in the great papers of the land. But no one, Mr. President, in his wildest dreams ever thought that those laws would be stricken down through the instrumentality of a conference report presented to the two Houses of Congress. To me it is inconceivable that that should be attempted, and while it may be thought that this is a dream of my fancy, I will venture the suggestion that I do not believe the Senate of the United States will agree to this conference report.

I regret, Mr. President, that we have not a rule in this body, such as obtains in the other House of Congress, that a point of order can be made against a conference report, because this conference report, in my opinion, absolutely violates every rule and tradition of the Congress relating to reports of that kind.

What has been done? The House sent a bill here without any provision relating to the coastwise fleet of the United States. The Senate amended it by providing that the coastwise trade should be open to a certain extent in this country. If I understand what is submitted to the conferees, it is the differences between the two Houses, and the conferees can not go beyond those differences. In other words, the question is, Shall the House measure, which has no provision in it concerning this matter, be agreed to, shall the Senate provision be agreed to, or shall the Senate provision be modified, reducing it from the terms in which it is found in the bill? But the conferees, apparently in their great desire to accomplish by this short cut what they know can not be accomplished if bills are presented to the two Houses, submitted to the scrutiny of committees and to the discussion of the bodies, insert an entirely new provision, which has never been submitted to either House. Of course, they paid no attention to what the House did, because the House did nothing on that point, and by violating our rules they open the entire coastwise trade of the United States to foreign ships for two years.

I am not going to discuss that matter at length. I am either correct or not correct in my statement, and if I talked two hours I could not make it plainer than I have made it in these few words.

Turning to the rules of the Senate, on page 440, paragraph 29, I read:

> Conferees may not include in their report matters not committed to them by either House—

And so forth.

I might occupy a half hour reading matters relating to conference reports from the rules of the Senate, from Jefferson's Manual, from Cushing's Manual, and from every other authority on parliamentary law, showing that when the conferees exceed their authority they go beyond what is permitted to them by the rules of any legislative body on earth. So I say that the conferees in this case absolutely and utterly went beyond their authority in enlarging this provision to the extent that they have.

But, Mr. President, no point of order lies in the Senate against a conference report. Hence I will not make it. In the early days, and until recently, a motion to recommit was in order in the Senate, and a great many conference reports have been recommitted. But I observe on examining the rules that the custom of the Senate in that regard has been departed from of late years. So I shall make no motion of that kind.

I must content myself, Mr. President, with making the appeal that I have made and in repeating that appeal, that the conference report be rejected and sent back for further consideration, with a view and in the hope that this obnoxious provision may be stricken from it.

But Mr. President, if the Senators who are interested in good legislation, and if the Senators who have this great industry in their own States, see fit to vote for this report and do this great wrong, as I conceive it to be, I have no remedy but to bow in acquiescence.

Mr. BRISTOW. Mr. President, I will detain the Senate but a moment. I can not understand why the conferees should have agreed to the report that they have. It seems to me that it is turning over the domestic commerce of the United States to foreign ships. It is a little dangerous now, because of the European war, for the ships of certain nationalities to engage in foreign trade. We started out here to legislate in the interests of the export business of the United States and to get vessels under our own flag to carry our products to European countries, but when it was discovered that it might be unsafe for the ships that are flying a foreign flag to change flags and undertake to carry the products of the United States to foreign countries under the United States flag with still a foreign ownership, then, in order to open a field for these foreign ships that are now tied up, it seems that there dawned upon the gentlemen who were promoting this legislation that they could open up the American domestic commerce to these foreign ships. It is now proposed that these ships that are now driven off the sea by the European war can come in and take the commerce of our own country from our own ships that have been built to carry that commerce, and make the American ports and American commerce the harbor of refuge for foreign ships that have been driven off the ocean by the war.

It is the most amazing proposition that has been presented to the American Congress for a generation. It seems to me that an American citizen ought to have some rights in his own country and that the American Congress should not deliberately begin to confiscate the property of the American shipowner. This legislation is nothing but confiscation of property that has been acquired under our laws—laws that have existed for more than a century—and this seems to be done in order to protect foreign ships that can not now safely pursue the commerce which they have been pursuing for recent years because of the war.

It is now proposed to permit them to come into our domestic commerce to the destruction of our own domestic shipping. The result will be that our domestic trade will soon be carried in foreign bottoms, as has been our over-seas trade. It is proposed that ships carrying our domestic commerce need not have a dollar owned by an American citizen. They need not have a man or an officer who owes fealty to the American flag. It is the most astounding proposition I have ever known presented to the American Congress. Under the assumption that we do not have any over-seas merchant marine, and that the American foreign commerce is carried in foreign bottoms, and foreign ships now being handicapped by the war, it was proposed to temporarily obtain ships to carry our products abroad by suspending our navigation laws as to such foreign commerce. That is what we started out to do.

But now we have gone far beyond that, and if this report becomes a law we will destroy our domestic merchant marine, just as our foreign merchant marine has been destroyed. This bill now, instead of being a bill to benefit American producers, is a bill to destroy American industry. None of these ships will go into the foreign trade. They will engage in our domestic trade, and our products will still be without ships.

I could not resist the inclination to express my views as emphatically as I could against this report, which, in its present shape, I regard as an unpatriotic and infamous piece of legislation.

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. President, I rise with a sense of the deepest responsibility to discuss this conference report, because this legislation means much to my State. The shipbuilding industry is one of the oldest there. Early the sound of the ax and the hammer and the saw was heard along its coast, and from our harbors sailed its fine clipper ships, which were the pride of our sailors and which were looked upon with admiration by the citizens of the world. We had the oak and pine in the forest; we had the harbors, and we launched upon the main those grand ships, some of which were commanded by the senior Senator from California [Mr. PERKINS], who knows the history of that industry. Now, with no hearings, and when for the first time in 60 years a Democratic Senator from Maine takes his seat with his colleagues from the South and the West in this Chamber, with no warning, it is proposed to strike down that old industry which has existed for more than a century in our State. It is unfair; it is unjust. It is unjust to the State; it is unjust to the citizens of this Republic. It is a subject which demands and should receive more considerate attention. Such legislation should not be placed upon this great emergency bill as a mere incident.

I am afraid that many of my colleagues fail to appreciate the importance of this legislation. What does it do? Opening up our whole coastwise trade to foreign vessels at a time when there is nothing for them to do, when war has made it dangerous for men to sail the seas under their own flag, they can now be purchased at much less than their cost and put into our coastwise trade to compete with our American vessels.

We have some 200 vessels owned by the citizens of my State. I know but little about the so-called coastwise shipping trust. I only know that my whole political life has arraigned me on the side opposed to monopoly or special privilege; but in my State the vessels that we build are not built by trusts. They are built by the citizens who wish to provide a vessel for a sea captain, a master proud of his calling. His friends unite, each taking a sixty-fourth, a thirty-second, a sixteenth, or an eighth interest. Under his command the vessel is launched upon the waters. The owners may receive some return from the first voyage, but possibly on the second voyage disastrous gales strike her and she goes into port, crippled, for repairs and her earnings are absorbed. Perhaps upon a third voyage she may go to the bottom with captain and crew, and the whole investment is lost. Even if she continues to sail, the return is not large. If her owners get her insured, it will take nearly all the earnings to do so. The only hope for an investor in such property is to own a small share in a great many vessels and take his chances. Even that is not profitable. That is the condition of the shipping industry in my State.

There is no trust. The sea captain, when he takes his vessel, goes to Boston or to New York and seeks a cargo to the West Indies or to the south. He meets hundreds of other vessels with which he has to compete. If he gets a charter party, he will only get it because his rates are lower. There is no combination. That is his calling, out upon the broad sea, unfettered by any contracts, unfettered by any understanding. It is as free as the ocean and as the breezes that fill his sails.

Now, at this time, with no opportunity to be heard, you strike at him; you strike at that industry. No legislation has been attempted since I have had a seat in the Senate when we did not give opportunity to interested parties to be heard. You have not heard these people. With no warning and out of a clear sky you launch this disastrous blow upon an old and honorable industry, one that has brought dignity and power to our country and also to our State, and to the Union has given some of the most splendid seamen who have served not only upon your merchant vessels but have entered your Navy as well. It has furnished whole pages of illustrious names of men who, from their knowledge of the sea, could perform great services for the country.

What is the need at this time, when we are considering the demands of our export trade, to make this attack upon our coastwise laws? If it becomes necessary later, if vessels can not be obtained for our coastwise trade, if it be true, as the distinguished Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES] thinks, that the Pacific coast will suffer because of the failure to obtain vessels—if that appears later, then we can legislate; but why at this time, before this need is made apparent, should we deal this blow at our coastwise trade? Why not leave this measure as it came to us, a broad national measure dealing only with our export trade, and provide vessels to carry our over-seas commerce, and then, later, when the need becomes apparent, if it does, legislate in regard to our coastwise trade? But let us do it with consideration; let us give the people who are engaged in it a hearing; let them come here as people have come in other matters and place their case before us.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I signed this conference report, and I did not sign it under any misapprehension or any impulse. I have felt for some time that it was perfectly fair to do precisely what this report purports to do with reference to the coastwise trade and coastwise shipping. There have been a number of things which have led me up to this point, transpiring in the legislation of this country for the last two or three years. I say, therefore, that it was upon no impulse or lack of reflection that I signed this conference report, and I am prepared to support it. The law protecting coastwise shipping is a form of the protective policy.

Some few years ago, Mr. President, there began an agitation in this country among our eastern friends along the Atlantic seaboard, in Massachusetts and other places, for the placing of all agricultural products upon the free list, for open, untrammeled competition as between the farmers of Canada and those of the United States. No one could doubt that that was, as a practical proposition, distinctly and unquestionably a sectional measure for the purpose of placing the great producing regions of the West and the South in the open markets of the world for sale and in the protected market of the United States for purchase. Unfortunately, the party of which I am an humble member and which had been adverse to that view for nearly 50 years, took up this doctrine of raw material and applied it to the farming interests and the agricultural interests of the country and attempted to engraft it upon the revenue laws of the country and upon the policy of protection. The scheme was to leave the manufacturing interests in the great manufacturing centers of the East as fully protected as they had ever been, but to put that great region of the West and South—because that has come to be the great agricultural producing region of the country—under another rule entirely. That was defeated through no act of ours, but through the act of Canada, for which we owe her a great debt of gratitude.

When we come to the tariff bill, the Underwood bill, which passed Congress during the last session, we find the same discrimination. Everything which the farmer raises, practically everything which comes from the field of his production, is upon the free list, while the articles which he must purchase still carry a reasonable amount of protection, in many cases sufficient, in others, perhaps, not so; but he is now placed in a position where he is not only in open competition with his neighbor upon the north but he is in open competition in the free markets of the world, with the agricultural producers throughout the civilized world. At the same time most everything he buys carries some duty.

Following those steps, we took another, and that was to repeal the toll-exemption clause of the Panama Canal act. That was to place the West, and the producing interests of the West especially, at a further disadvantage. Every substantial important movement along this line of legislation for the last three years has been to place the great producing regions of the West at a disadvantage. That has been accomplished and about made perfect by every bill which led in that direction which has been before the Senate.

Now, Mr. President, so long as that condition continues I am for free ships. I am not willing that the American farmer, the agriculturist of this country, the producer generally, shall send his products to an open market in a protected ship. When the American people come to the conclusion that they want free trade, and this coastwise law, as I say, is a mere form of protection, there is no reason why that principle of free trade should not be extended to all alike. On the other hand, if they conclude that they want the system of protection restored we will be glad to meet them and restore it as a system. The American protective policy is either a system, nation wide and applicable to all, a system which should be applied to every citizen and every industry that comes under the purview of its principle, or if not that then it is a special privilege and indefensible and intolerable. There is nothing unjust, nothing unfair, in giving a man who goes to an open market a system of transportation built upon the same principle upon which his market is constructed.

I would not strike down a single industry; I have no reason to assail the shipping industry; but if it is possible in any way to ameliorate or assist the situation for the western producer by bringing to the same principle all industries, I propose to cast my vote to accomplish that purpose. I am a protectionist, but I am for it as a great national system, a national policy, a policy which gives employment to labor and a better wage, which sustains and upholds American enterprise and American industry. But I can not get my consent to see it applied with discrimination, sectionally, or according to the doctrine of a favored few. It undoubtedly, in my judgment, to some extent will militate against the interests of the coastwise shipping at the present time, but, in my opinion, it will inure to the benefit of another class of people, who have been signally discriminated against in our legislation for the last two years, and thus even to some extent the burdens which are upon us.

So I say, Mr. President, that so far as I am concerned my action in signing the conference report was not a matter of impulse or due to want of reflection. There has never been an hour since the President attached his signature to the bill repealing the exemption clause of the Panama Canal act that I have not been ready to take this step.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the adoption of the conference report.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, just a word. As I understood the Senator from Idaho—and he was rather frank—he suggested that the people of the Atlantic coast had at some period—I do not know when it was—entered upon a movement to discriminate against the products of the great West. Am I correct in that?

Mr. BORAH. I do not know that that is the exact language, but I am willing for the Senator to take that basis upon which to make his argument.

Mr. GALLINGER. I am not going to make an argument. I am only going to say to the Senator from Idaho that he will search the RECORD in vain, during the past 15 years certainly, to find a single vote that has been cast in this body by New England representatives that was calculated to harm in any way the industries of the Western States. We have stood, as I have stated, for protection; we have tried to make it a national question; and I am sorry that the Senator has been led to feel that at any time the people of New England especially were antagonistic to the interests of the West. There may have been perhaps a little faction somewhere in New England—Massachusetts has given us more or less trouble in several directions first and last—but, as a whole, we have stood unflinchingly by the interests of the Western States. I think the Senator will agree with me as to that.

Mr. BORAH. No; I can not agree to that. I agree that that is true so far as the vote of the Senator from New Hampshire is concerned; but the reciprocity bill would not have been carried through the Senate without the aid of New England; it could not have been put through as a law without the assistance of representatives from New England, and the bill repealing the exemption clause of the Panama Canal act could not have been put through, in my judgment, without their assistance. The Senator has been loyal to his convictions; he has stood by them. But New England started the scheme to put all farm products upon the free list; and if she sees now the principle returning, to take up its abode amid her own distressed industries, it might be said to be a quick and significant application of the divine law of retribution.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I will agree to that. I had overlooked the reciprocity bill, which I fought tooth and nail as best I could, and I have neither sympathy nor apology for any eastern man who voted for that measure.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I merely want to say a few words before action is taken on the conference report. When the Senator from Maine [Mr. JOHNSON] was speaking with reference to the disastrous effect the provision of the bill admitting foreign-built vessels to the coastwise trade would have upon a great industry in his State, I could not help thinking of a suggestion which he made to me in connection with the tariff bill. I was trying to show him the injury which the passage of the tariff bill would do to the shingle industry of my State if shingles were put upon the free list. He suggested to me that they wanted to try the experiment. It has been tried and has proven very disastrous for us. The shingle industry is greatly crippled, many men are without work, and the home market is being taken by foreign shingles. I will not say that we want to try this as an experiment on the industries in Maine, but I do not believe that the passage of this bill will have the effect which the Senator anticipates. I hope I may not be so much mistaken as he was.

Mr. President, this is an administration measure brought in here as an emergency proposition. Personally, I doubt very much the necessity for it; I doubt very much if any great good will come from it; I doubt very much if what is hoped for from the bill will be realized at all. If I vote for it, it will simply be to help the administration in what it thinks necessary in the emergency existing, and not because I believe this to be especially desirable legislation.

When the bill was before the Senate I thought, and I still believe, that there was such an emergency on the Pacific coast that our people were affected so much in the same way as the industries of the Atlantic coast that brought forth this bill as to warrant the presentation of the amendment which I submitted. It was not offered simply because the situation afforded the opportunity, but in the hope of meeting a situation most serious with us. That amendment, with the suggestion offered by the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS], was adopted and went to conference, and now the conference committee has brought back that provision in effect, but, as has been suggested by the Senator from New Jersey, has made it broader. While the substance of my amendment is covered fully by the conference report, the conferees have gone beyond the action of either the Senate or the House.

The Senate simply provided that foreign-built ships admitted to American registry could engage in the intercoastal trade; that is, in trade between points on the Pacific coast—and when that language was used it meant the entire western coast of the United States—and points on the Atlantic coast, and when that language was used it included what the people of the East recognize as the Gulf ports, but which we in the west always recognize as part of the Atlantic coast, or the east coast line of the United States. That was as far as it went. It was designed to meet an emergency that existed on the Pacific coast in even a greater degree than on the Atlantic.

As statements have been made here that there are idle ships in the coastwise trade on the Pacific coast, I desire to say that there has not been any showing made that those ships are of a character that can engage in ocean or seagoing trade; and it will require ocean or seagoing vessels to engage in trade between Atlantic and Pacific ports through the Panama Canal. Such a voyage is even longer than the voyage between New York and Southampton, and is even more of an ocean-going voyage than that, if there can be any difference at all. The vessels that are idle are not such vessels.

That was the emergency; that was the situation which the Senate endeavored to meet. As I have suggested, the conference committee, I think, have gone further than they had any authority to go, either under the rules of the Senate or under general parliamentary procedure. Nevertheless, they have gone that far and have extended this provision to the coastwise trade generally, and their report is before us.

While I agree with practically everything which the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER] has said with reference to the desirability of preserving the coastwise trade to American-built ships, and as to the desirability of encouraging American shipyards, the employment of American labor in those yards, the building of ships out of American material, and so forth, I do not believe that the results that are predicted from this provision will come about at all. If I thought they would to any very great extent, I would not be in favor of the provision, although I agree very much with the sentiments of the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH]; and I said when the bill repealing the exemption clause of the Panama Canal was passed that that meant the death knell to the American-built ships occupying exclusively the coastwise trade of the United States, because you can not maintain in this country, Mr. President, coastwise laws that are applied to one section of the country differently from the manner in which they are applied to another section of the country.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. JONES. Certainly.

Mr. BORAH. The Senator says that we can not maintain that situation, and I agree with him; but if we could do it, if we had the power to do it, upon what theory of justice would you compel the western farmer to sell his goods in an open market and to pay for shipping them on a protected ship?

Mr. JONES. There is not any theory upon which that can be maintained. That is the very reason why it will not be maintained; justice must be meted out impartially to every section of the country and to all the people of the country. That is the very basis upon which our laws should be maintained, and when we undermine or break down that principle, then the system is going to fall.

It has been shown apparently that the shipping industry is in very much the same depressed condition in which we find many of the other industries throughout the country. This is not the time and this is not the place to go into the reasons for that depression. I have my ideas about it; I have my views with reference to the cause of this depression, not only in the shipping industry but in the other industries of this country; I think I know the causes of it, and the people know it; but if we grant that there are many coastwise ships now without business and now tied up, that proves, at least to my mind, that there is no serious danger to be apprehended from this legislation, because foreign-built ships are not going to go into a business that is stagnant and, in fact, where there is no business, so I doubt if very many foreign-built ships will enter the coastwise trade at all. They may, and that is my hope, enter the intercoastal trade wherever ships are lacking.

Furthermore, under this proposition the privilege is limited to a period of two years; no foreign-built ships registered for the foreign trade can be admitted into the coastwise trade after two years, unless, of course, Congress should extend the time or should provide other legislation, and if it does, of course that will be very carefully considered. So that, upon the whole, this legislation, it seems to me, is very much restricted.

I believe that it will furnish to the people of the Pacific coast some relief from the situation that confronts them. I know that our people do not want to see the domestic trade generally opened up to foreign-built ships, and I have some telegrams here which I think it but fair that I should place in the RECORD, if the Senate will permit. I ask permission to have published in the RECORD a couple of telegrams with reference to this matter.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Washington? The Chair hears none, and the telegrams referred to will be printed in the RECORD.

The telegrams referred to are as follows:

SEATTLE, WASH., August 13, 1914.

Hon. WESLEY L. JONES,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

We are much opposed to emergency shipping-bill legislation as reported in to-day's dispatches, but do not want to stand in the light of what is best for the United States as a whole; but if Congress insists upon passing bill, then they should give short coastwise owners a bonus on vessels they have recently built at American yards, paying 50 per cent more therefor than our neighbors in Canada that have built in England and brought their vessels out here.

JOSHUA GREENE.

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL., August 13, 1914.

Hon. WESLEY L. JONES,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

There is absolutely no occasion for admission of foreign steamers to domestic service on this coast. There is now a large number of American steamers tied up here on account lack of business. This company alone has five steamers tied up. It will be a grave injustice to American shipowners to admit cheaply built and cheaply manned foreign steamers into competition with them. It will put American shipyards out of business other than for repair work.

J. C. FORD,
President Pacific Coast Steamship Co.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, some telegrams have referred to vessels in the coastwise trade that are now idle, but there is no suggestion that these vessels are available or would be available for trade through the Panama Canal or for the overseas trade. Of course some foreign-built ships might come into our local coastwise trade on the Pacific; but I think that the great benefit which is likely to come by reason of making available ships for the Panama Canal trade far overbalances any anticipated or any probable or possible injury that might come to local domestic trade.

Furthermore, Mr. President, we are confronted in this matter by the same conditions that we are always confronted with when we propose to change any long-established system or policy or principle. There are always those who will protest most vigorously against any action that may interfere with their business, and if any change, however slight, is proposed, they see nothing but ruin confronting them. That is natural; I do not find fault with the gentlemen who protest in that way; they are looking after their interests, and, as I have said, I find no fault with them for it. I do not believe they are unpatriotic in making such protests and such suggestions, but I do think they overdo it oftentimes. While men are selfish, they should not allow their selfishness to close their eyes to the wants and needs of others. We, as legislators, must look at all sides and at all the people who are interested in these matters. The shipbuilder and the shipowner are not the only ones who are interested in this question. The producers of the country and the producers of my section, the consumers of the country and the consumers of my section are interested in this matter. They are interested in what they have to pay for the transportation of their products to market; interested in having ample facilities for the transfer of their products to market, and even if it were granted that this legislation might bring into the coastwise trade some additional competitive ships, it would simply furnish to our producers and to our consumers increased facilities for getting their products to market and a check upon extortionate charges that come from a lack of transportation facilities.

One reason why I doubt if this bill will accomplish the great purposes of those who present it, even in the foreign trade, is that while there is a showing here as to the great amount of tonnage in the coastwise trade that is suitable and available for the foreign trade, these ships do not seem to be availing themselves of the opportunities presented. They are not seeking and are not registering for the foreign trade. We have seen in the last few days an example of how the shipping industry acts, animated, if you please, by the same spirit and feeling and motive that animates all of us, for that matter, when we have an opportunity to take advantage of a situation. When the Government needed ships to send across to bring our citizens from abroad it was reported at least that they were asking exorbitant rates for such service—such exorbitant rates that our Government officials contemplated an investigation, or absolutely refused to consider their offers. If there are so many of these ships that are available for the foreign service, if there are so many of these ships that are idle, how does it happen that some of these transportation companies apparently try to hold up the Government in its hour of distress, and the hour of distress of its citizens, and charge exorbitant rates for carrying those people home, so that it becomes almost necessary for the Government, in order to furnish relief, to take some of its naval vessels and use them for this purpose?

Mr. President, if in the coastwise trade we have conditions where there are not sufficient ships to do the business, those that are in it will charge all the traffic will bear, and they will make their charges high, and the consumers and producers of the country will have to pay them or have their products rot in the fields for lack of transportation. This should be avoided if possible, and this it is hoped to avoid by the provisions of this bill to which I am referring.

As I said, if there are so many of these ships in the local coastwise trade now that are idle, there would be no inducement for these vessels admitted to American registry to come into that trade. Again, if there are so many ships in the domestic trade that are suitable and fitted to carry on the over-seas trade, with the conditions that are arising and that are likely to arise from the war situation, many of these ships will go into the foreign trade. They will leave the domestic trade for the higher profits in the foreign trade. Now, if there are no ships to take their places, we will have a dearth of ships in the domestic trade, and that means increased rates and increased charges for the consumers and producers of the country. So I see nothing that is likely to happen from the passage of this act except a sort of balancing of the situation, and that possibly conditions will remain, with the passage of this legislation, just about where they are now, with a possible increase in the ships for such trade and routes as need them, and this will be a benefit and not an injury to anyone.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. JONES. Certainly.

Mr. NORRIS. I wish to ask the Senator his idea of the international aspect of this particular legislation, if he thinks it has any, as to whether or not the easy means by which this bill will permit foreign ships to carry the American flag will not perhaps, under existing conditions in Europe, get us into some difficulty?

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I am very much afraid that is true, and therefore I voted for the amendments of the Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS] and the Senator from Delaware [Mr. SAULSBURY]. I regret very much indeed that the conferees have left out that provision. The administration, however, seems to think that will not lead us into trouble. I very much fear that it will. I have anticipated that from the beginning, and it is one thing that makes me hesitate about voting for this measure.

Mr. NORRIS. The Senator, in his answer, brings up another idea. He says the administration thinks this will not make any difference. Is it true that the conferees in the first instance had agreed to bring in a conference report that contained in substance the amendment of the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. JONES. I do not know. The Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] was on the conference committee, and can answer that question better than I can.

Mr. NORRIS. The Senator referred to the administration.

Mr. JONES. I probably should hardly have said that. I based that statement entirely upon the fact that the Senator from New York [Mr. O'GORMAN], in charge of the bill, and most of the majority Members were very much opposed to that proposition, and not only opposed it here on the floor but now sustain the conference report in its omission. I have heard nothing at all myself from the administration, nor from anyone who purports to speak for it. From the fact that the great majority, I think, on the other side of the Chamber, including the Senator from New York, who has charge of the bill and has had charge of it from the time it came into the Senate, think that amendment would be a great injury, I simply assume that the Senator from New York is speaking with the approval, at least, of the administration, and not in opposition to its wishes. I have not any doubt but that if the administration had expressed, even very slightly, its desire that some amendment of this kind should go in here, it would have gone in.

Mr. NORRIS. I wanted to suggest that matter to the Senator from Washington, not in a critical sense, for I have a good deal of sympathy with the object of this legislation, but because I have my doubts as to the wisdom of doing it now. Now, why is it that it is limited to two years? What is the object of that limitation?

Mr. JONES. That limitation was put on in the conference committee. It was not even discussed in the Senate. The Senator will notice that that limitation applies only to the coastwise trade. It does not apply to the admission of vessels registered under this act to the foreign trade. The time is unlimited with reference to that. I suppose the conferees put in this limitation out of a desire to protect the coastwise trade to a certain extent from the encroachments of foreign-built ships. I assume that to be the case. The Senator from Idaho probably can give us more direct information with reference to the idea of the conference committee in making that limitation, and I yield to him to make any suggestion he may desire to make.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, referring first to the amendment of the Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS], I do not know that the administration had anything to do with the conference. If so, I was not cognizant of the fact myself. The conferees upon the part of the Senate presented thoroughly the matter of the amendment of the Senator from Iowa, and the discussion continued during practically the whole afternoon upon that subject, but there was no agreement. There was only a tentative understanding with reference to the bill. When we came back next morning the amendment was finally dropped out. So far as any outside suggestion was concerned, I know nothing about it, if it was made.

Speaking of the amendment, if I had felt that there was any real effect to flow from the amendment I should have felt more earnestly that it was a mistake to leave it out; but the amendment simply provided that at the time of the registration a majority of the stock should be held by American citizens. The Senator can see that there was no way to protect that situation 15 minutes after the registration took place; there was no way to make it a permanent proposition. The stock is owned by individuals, and flits here and there. Anybody can transfer it to anyone he wishes, and there is no way to control the situation.

I think the principle involved in the amendment was probably a commendable one and a wise one; but I could not see how there could be any possible result flowing from it unless we could find some way by which to make it effectual.

Mr. NORRIS. If the Senator from Washington will continue to yield, I should like to say, in reference to what the Senator from Idaho has said, that while my fears may be groundless—I have not been here during this debate, and have not heard it all, and am not very well posted on the subject—I feel that there is great danger in passing a law of this kind now, while the great nations of Europe are at war with each other, when we have made no attempt to pass it prior to the war; and we make it so easy to transfer the flag of a foreign nation from the ship and put an American flag in its place that we are going a good way to expect the civilized nations of the world not to look at least with a great deal of suspicion on that kind of a proceeding. Assuming that we pass the bill in good faith, the shipowners desiring to take advantage of it, as I understand the bill, have not much more to do than to haul down the other flag and run up the American flag, and then go out on the ocean and demand protection from the United States Government. It seems to me that would naturally create a suspicion that the transfer was not a bona fide one.

Mr. BORAH. Suppose the other nations of the earth should dislike it? Upon what ground would they lodge any objection to the United States amending its laws in this respect? Upon what theory would they make any suggestion with reference to it? I know that in thi country the opinion prevails in some quarters that we ought not to legislate until we consult certain foreign interests, but I did not think that belonged to the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. NORRIS. No; it does not; and the Senator can not charge that up to me.

Mr. BORAH. No; I do not think that belongs to the Senator; but upon what ground would they rest their objection? Upon what theory would they say that the United States should not change her laws to take care of her commercial interests in a crisis? I know of no ground upon which they could lodge an objection.

Mr. NORRIS. It seems to me it might be lodged upon the fact that there has been no attempt to legislate during time of peace for the last 100 years, and that just as soon as the war begins we pass a law such as this, which says to the owner of the foreign-built ship, "You can pull down your flag, if you want to, and put up ours, and we will defend you." It seems to me that ought not to be expected.

Mr. POINDEXTER Mr. President——

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I do not want to be discourteous to the Senator from Nebraska—and he knows I would not be—but the Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS] is going to discuss that particular proposition very soon, and just in the interest of time I would suggest that he can then discuss it with the Senator from Iowa, and it will save a little time, because I did not intend to go very much into that feature of the matter myself.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Washington yield to his colleague?

Mr. JONES. Yes; certainly.

Mr. POINDEXTER. In connection with the point made by the Senator from Nebraska, no such difficulty as that would arise with reference to foreign-built ships engaged in the coastwise trade of the United States. No foreign country could claim that the United States did not have such a peculiar interest in its coastwise trade as justified protection of it under its own flag wherever the ship may have been built or however quickly the transfer may have been made.

Mr. NORRIS. But the question was asked by me originally with particular reference to the over-sea trade. I do not know that there would be any objection even to that. I am simply trying to bring out the facts and get information.

Mr. JONES. I would not shut out the Senator if I had not suggested that the Senator from Iowa is going to take up that matter fully.

Mr. NORRIS. I will say to the Senator that that is perfectly satisfactory to me.

Mr. JONES. Yes; I thought it would be.

Mr. NORRIS. I have no disposition to crowd my question now.

Mr. JONES. There was one other question that the Senator from Nebraska inquired about—I do not know whether he expected an answer to it or not—and that was this limitation of two years for admission into the coastwise trade. I did not know but that the Senator from Idaho might give the Senator from Nebraska some information as to why that limitation was made.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey in the chair). Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. JONES. Certainly.

Mr. BORAH. I supposed that was somewhat of a concession to the present established principle against throwing open the matter entirely. The argument was also made that it would be calculated to hasten these ships to assist at the time of the existence of this emergency. So far as I was concerned, I was willing that the door should be opened wide, and that it should be made impossible to reclose it until the whole system of the American policy—the protective policy—was taken up and restored to all industries.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, a word or two more, and I am through.

As I have said, this conference report does not suit me in very many respects. In fact, as I expressed my views on the bill before, I do not see any particular good to come out of the bill. I was in favor of the amendment offered by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS]. I voted for it. I was satisfied that it was a wise amendment, and I think it would have been the part of wisdom to have had it in this conference report now. I am not fully satisfied that we should not send it back to conference in the hope of having inserted some provision along this line.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. JONES. Certainly.

Mr. McCUMBER. Before the Senator reaches another phase of the question, I should like a little information from him, and I ask him simply because I believe he is well qualified to answer.

The Senator has indicated an inconsistency between the claim of some of the shipowners, to the effect that there were over 40 vessels upon the coast now lying idle that might be used, and the telegrams received from the coast cities stating that lumber and other forms of merchandise could not be shipped away because of the lack of vessels to carry them. Now, we all know that the Panama Canal is to be opened in a very short time. May it not be a fact, and is it not a fact, that these ships are waiting and this merchandise is waiting until the Panama Canal may be opened, so as to get the advantage of the shorter haul; and may not that explain entirely the difference, or apparent difference, between the statements of the shipowners and the owners of lumber and other merchandise?

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I do not think there is any real inconsistency between those statements. I am satisfied that practically all the ships that it is stated are now idle are ships that are not suitable and not fitted for the Panama Canal trade and that they would not come into it at all. They are probably ships that have been running on the local routes, short routes. They are not suited for over-seas trade, and probably a great many of them are not at all suited for the lumber trade.

Of course lumber is not the only product we have; that is used because it is the predominant product out there; but, as I suggested the other day, 40,000,000 bushels of wheat are produced in the State of Washington and twenty-five or thirty million in Oregon. Then, too, we have a great deal of fruit, and our people hope to ship a great deal of that.

When the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. MARTINE] the other day read a list that had been handed to him of ships on the coast that were idle I recognized some of the ships, having seen and ridden on some of them. They are not at all suitable for foreign trade; they are not suitable for the lumber trade, even in the domestic trade; and if they are idle, it is simply because they have not the local domestic coastwise trade to employ them. I am satisfied that the reports as to the ships that are idle, 40 or 50, or whatever the number may be, relate largely, if not entirely, to ships that are not suitable for use in the Panama Canal trade.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Washington further yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. JONES. Certainly.

Mr. McCUMBER. Right on that point, will the Senator explain wherein is the difference between the trade, say, between Seattle and San Francisco and the like character of trade between San Francisco and New Orleans passing through the canal that would make the ships fitted for trade between the former points and not between the latter points?

Mr. JONES. I suppose the length of the voyage would make some difference. There is some difference between the length of the voyages. The distance from Seattle to San Francisco is only six or seven hundred miles, while the other distance would run into the thousands of miles.

Mr. STONE and Mr. CHAMBERLAIN addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Washington yield, and to whom?

Mr. STONE. The Senator was taking his seat when I rose.

Mr. JONES. I was not intending to take my seat, because I had one or two other points I wished to make.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I desire to make one suggestion to the Senator from Washington in answer to a point that has just been touched upon.

Mr. JONES. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. There are some vessels that are competent to do business between Seattle and San Francisco that would not be profitable as vessels to go through the Panama Canal. Testimony was given before the Interoceanic Canals Committee to the effect that vessels of less than a certain capacity could not profitably use the Panama Canal at all.

Mr. JONES. Yes; I think it was 5,000 tons, was it not?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Yes.

Mr. JONES. Yes; I think so. Of course there are some of those ships running between Seattle and San Francisco that could be used probably in going through the Panama Canal, but they will not be so used, because they have an established business now and they would not desire to give it up, and it would be a misfortune for them to give it up.

Mr. LANE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. JONES. Certainly.

Mr. LANE. I want to say, for the information of the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. McCUMBER], that some of those vessels which carry lumber between the ports where the lumber is produced and other ports down the coast where the lumber is consumed are auxiliary gasoline schooners and other light-draft vessels. They have not a great deal of bottom on them, and they use gasoline for motor power, and would not do for the other trade. There are quite a number of those vessels that carry a great deal of lumber back and forth.

Mr. McCUMBER. But are those included in the 40 vessels that were mentioned in the letter read here by the Senator from New Jersey?

Mr. LANE. I do not know whether they are or not; but some of those vessels are engaged in that traffic, and it might be that they are among that number.

Mr. BURTON. Mr. President, in a statement made to me on the subject they were not included; and the steam schooners, the overwhelming majority of which are small, as stated by the Senator from Oregon, were separately stated. There is a certain number of those, perhaps 20, over 2,000 tons.

Mr. LANE. Yes.

Mr. PERKINS. A larger number than that.

Mr. BURTON. The Senator from California informs me that there is a larger number than that over 2,000 tons.

Mr. JONES. I want to say, Mr. President, that, of course, I am not a shipping man, and I am not acquainted with the character of these vessels. When they read the name off here I can not always tell what kind of a vessel it is, or anything of the sort; but I want to say this:

Our business men are just about as active, energetic, and capable business men as you can find anywhere in the country. They are just as anxious as anybody to get their products to market, and they will take every step that is necessary to get them to market. If there are facilities for getting those products to market, they are going to get hold of them, and yet telegrams come here from the chambers of commerce of Bellingham and Everett and Seattle and Tacoma, made up of the business men of those sections; not shipping men altogether, but business men of those sections. They have sent telegrams here, which I have put in the RECORD, in which they state that their business is paralyzed because of a lack of ships, and that they have not the ships that can be used to carry their products around through the Panama Canal. I am satisfied, Mr. President, that those gentlemen know what they are talking about, and that they know what they are telegraphing about, and that they know the situation, and they would not make these representations if they did not know them to be true.

The conference committee has accepted what we passed in the Senate—I do not know but that it was part of the bill as it came from the House—giving to the President very much discretion with reference to the suspension of the coastwise laws. I think that provision was in the bill as it passed the House, so it was not a matter for the conferees to change. We have, however, given a great deal of discretion to the President, and while I feel satisfied that he will exercise that discretion wisely, I would have much preferred to have Congress lay down the rules and the regulations and make specific provision with reference to these matters. I am willing to accept this, however, and to leave it to the discretion of the President, feeling that he will act wisely.

I am satisfied that the President will not admit to the coastwise trade these foreign-built ships manned by foreign officers. I do not believe he is required to do it under this bill. I appreciate the point made by the Senator from Iowa, and I wish this had been made a little bit freer from doubt; but I am satisfied that under the language of section 2, which gives to the President the power to suspend by order these certain laws, so far and for such time as he may deem wise, the President, when application is made for registry of a foreign-built ship, can place in the permit granting that registry the condition that if the vessel should go into the coastwise trade these suspensions should not apply, and I am sure he will do it. It would be unfair, unjust, and monstrous to permit foreign-built ships under an American registry to do business with foreign crews and officers in competition with American-built ships manned by American officers and crews and paid American wages. If I thought for a moment that he would do this or if I thought he did not have the power to prevent it I would not think of voting for this report. In other words, any vessel to go into the coastwise trade should be surveyed; it should be examined; it should be inspected to see that it was a proper vessel for the coastwise trade; it should be manned by the officers and the crews required by the coastwise laws; and if it should not be willing to accept a registry under those conditions it should not be granted such registry. Of course after they get the registry, the provision of the law is that then they are entitled to engage in the coastwise trade; but, construing the two provisions together, I am satisfied that the President would follow the construction that would at least protect our coastwise trade according to the evident purpose of Congress that, while we will admit these foreign-built ships to the coastwise trade, we want those ships to be such as will conform to our survey and inspection laws, and that they must compete with vessels in the coastwise trade upon the same basis in the matter of operation as the vessels now engaged in the coastwise trade. That is the meaning and intention of this act. The only advantage the owner of such a vessel will have will be in the cost of the vessel; in its operation he will be and should be on exactly the same basis as other ships.

Mr. President, if I support this conference report I will do so because I feel satisfied that it will bring to the people of the Pacific coast relief that they need in this emergency, if any relief can be secured. The responsibility for these other provisions I think will have to rest upon the administration and those who have brought in this legislation. I regret that the conferees broadened this particular provision, although I do not fear that it is going to bring any harm, and it may bring some good. It may bring some good to the producers and to the consumers of our country; and if it does that, then it will have served a good purpose. It is limited in time to two years, so that after two years from now, unless Congress otherwise provides, no foreign-built ships can get into the coastwise trade; and there is also the point that these ships are not admitted to the coastwise trade on the same basis that foreign ships get into the foreign trade.

Any ship flying any flag can engage in our foreign trade now—can trade between New York and any foreign port. They do not have to have any particular kind of crews, any particular kind of accommodations, or anything of that sort, except according to the law of the flag under which they sail. Those ships can not come into the coastwise trade. This bill does not admit them into the coastwise trade. They must first get American registry, and in order to get American registry they must get at least under some form of American ownership, and then they come in under American control; so that there is an additional safeguard.

In other words, this is not an unlimited, unqualified opening up of the coastwise trade to foreign-built ships, even for two years. Every foreign-built ship, in order to get into the coastwise trade even under this act, must get American registry, and must show a certain class, at least, of American ownership. Of course I understand that it may be a corporation in which all the stock is owned by foreign people, but nevertheless that is an American corporation and an American ownership which we recognize now.

Mr. LIPPITT. I was just going to ask the Senator from Washington if that limitation was not confined merely to having a dummy president and a few dummy directors?

Mr. JONES. That may be true. The Senator and I are not at issue on that proposition. I was for the amendment that would prevent that condition of things.

Mr. LIPPITT. I was in hopes the Senator was as much opposed to it as I am.

Mr. JONES. I think I am, but I am not going to argue that, because the Senator from Rhode Island can do it much more ably than I can. However, I think I can safely say in advance that I shall agree with practically everything the Senator from Iowa may say with reference to that matter, because we had a discussion here for two or three days. I know the arguments made for and against it, and I am heartily in favor of the proposition, and if I thought by rejecting this conference report we could get some provision of that kind in the bill I might vote to reject it, because, as I have intimated, I am not greatly enamored with this measure.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, while we are talking, the present condition of things is continuing. There was hope of relief by the operation of the Weeks bill. I hold in my hand a clipping from one of the Washington papers which shows how little may be hoped for from that quarter. I shall take the liberty of reading it to the Senate:

The House Naval Affairs Committee yesterday—

It was day before yesterday now; I took this from the paper of yesterday—

The House Naval Affairs Committee yesterday, after hearing a statement from Rear Admiral Blue to the effect that a line of freight vessels made up of some of the older naval cruisers and scout ships for the South American trade might prove an expensive experiment, decided to refer the Weeks bill to a subcommittee of five members in order to obtain complete information on the subject, together with recommendations as to what should be done. The Weeks bill passed the Senate August 3.

It tells what it provided for; I will not read that.

Among the Democrats of the House Naval Committee there was a general desire to make a favorable report on the bill yesterday. Republicans of the committee were opposed to such action.

Admiral Blue, who is Chief of the Bureau of Navigation of the Navy Department, informed the committee that four of the vessels which it was proposed to utilize in this new kind of work could carry only 150 tons of freight and 50 tons of mail—

And 50 tons of mail is no very immense mail—

these being the cruisers Minneapolis, Columbia, Salem, and Chester. The freight, he said, even then would have to be in small-package lots in order to make it fit in the magazines of the ships.

"Would it not be cheaper for the United States to buy some of the foreign vessels which are tied up on account of the war than to use expensive naval vessels for freight or mail service?" asked Representative ROBERTS, Republican, of Massachusetts.

The Senate will remember that my proposition was to buy these ships and within four months, at any rate after the close of the war, to sell them. I introduced a bill with that end in view.

In this connection I want to say that I got the information from one of the Senators from New York to-day, who got it from a reliable quarter, that some of these German ships lying in port now could be bought for 50 cents on the dollar. If so, when the Government got ready to sell them the Government would not lose any money—on the contrary, would make some—but even if the Government lost money it would not be a drop in the bucket as compared with the great good that would be done.

This was Admiral Blue's answer to that question:

It would be much cheaper—

Was the response of Admiral Blue, and then the admiral goes on in the interview to tell why. I will ask that it be inserted in the RECORD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, permission is granted.

The matter referred to is as follows:

"It would be much cheaper" was the response of Admiral Blue. The admiral agreed also that a vessel constructed for the express purpose of carrying freight would be able to transport a much larger cargo than a cruiser with no room for anything but machinery, coal, and guns.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Now, I want to dwell upon another phase of the subject. As I said a moment ago, while we are talking the present condition of hardship for our farmers, manufacturers, and mine operators is continuing. Whether this bill will do any great amount of good or not is doubtful; but that it will do some good I do not doubt. But while this condition of things is going on, Mr. President, a combination, tacit or expressed, of wholesale or retail robbers, or both, is holding a clutch upon the throat of the American people, for which they ought in some way to be punished by law, if there be any legal way of punishing them.

Of course it was naturally to be expected in a great European war that there should be some rise in the price of foodstuffs, not because the world is going to consume any less than was consumed last year, but because the supply will be less, and to that extent there would have been a legitimate economic reason for a rise in the price of bread and meat. But the rise that has taken place here lately is not a mere discounting of the future effect of the operation of that natural economic law. As far as the rise that took place would naturally take place under that law goes, it would be thoroughly justified. The farmers ought to have the advantage of an economic condition when it faces them as much as any other producer is entitled to his advantage accruing from a natural economic condition. But this condition to-day is one of extortion by combination. Here are our warehouses and elevators full, produce threatening to spoil on our hands; no transportation for it. Then somebody here in some way raises prices, so that an already high price becomes an extortionate price.

In this connection—and that was the main object in my rising—I want to read an editorial from the New York World, nearly every word of which I indorse, strong as it is; it is headed "The fight for food":

Various dealers in food, big and little, have declared war upon the American people. The aggression of which they are guilty is as ruthless in some of its aspects as that shown by nations in arms against their enemies. No autocrat ever proceeded with bolder assumption. No conqueror ever devastated a prostrate state with a lighter heart.

At a moment when the people in Congress are making extraordinary efforts to provide an outlet across the seas for the surplus food of this country the owners of and gamblers in that food are kiting prices. If the Government should do nothing to relieve the situation as to exports, food is so abundant that it would soon be rotting in our warehouses and much of it would never come to market at all.

This is the state of affairs which, with war in Europe, has led the gluttons of the granaries and groceries to anticipate famine, to monopolize plenty, and with no excuse better than a speculative theory as to the future to inflict upon their own countrymen burdens that would not be endured if imposed by Government. Never before was there such widely organized eagerness for gain. It is a rapacity which can not wait. In the belief and hope that there is soon to be starvation in Europe, where all is war, it introduces privation in America, where all is peace. It is continental. It is also local.

Nothing of this kind comes about by accident. The men who are cornering food in the United States operate with the precision of a well-trained army. They act in concert. They have a plan of campaign. They have their captains of tens and their captains of thousands. From highest to lowest the one controlling motive is greed. They do not advantage by circumstances. They take advantage of circumstances. Scarcity is not making them rich. It is forestalling and coercion and extortion that they are depending upon to make them rich.

In the presence of a conspiracy so monstrous every prosecuting officer in the country, Federal, State, county, and city, is bound no less by decent manhood than by his oath of office to assail this piracy. The assertion that we see merely the law of supply and demand in operation is false—

Of course it is false; it is self-evidently false; plainly, palpably, obviously false.

Our supplies of most food products greatly exceed the demand and are likely to do so for months to come. It is no true and natural law, but an untrue and unnatural law, that is now in force. Privation has been manufactured to order, not as a result of the demands of the day—

I will add, nor as the result of the scarcity of supply nor as a result of a rational forecasting of future events.

The article goes on—but in response to the desperate theory that before another harvest enriches the earth hunger will rule in some portions of Europe. Avarice, its eyes upon foreigners, has already undertaken to strangle Americans.

There are statutory laws that will reach this crime. There is common law in many States that is even more drastic. A thousand prosecutions in as many important counties would show in a week whether food is deficient or merely monopolized, whether rising prices are due to circumstance or to combination, and whether the starvation that threatens is justified by necessity or exists only in the evil imagination and the vicious practices of a colossal commercial scoundrelism.

District Attorney Whitman, of New York, should not be the last of these prosecuting officers to act with vigor and intelligence.

Mr. LANE. If the Senator will allow me to confirm what he has stated, I wish to say that I am just in receipt of a telegram from the Marshfield (Oreg.) Chamber of Commerce, which reads:

MARSHFIELD, OREG., August 13, 1914.

Hon. HARRY LANE,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

The tremendous advance here in the price of sugar, flour, meats, and other staple foodstuffs causes our people to demand the Government to take immediate action to suppress illegal practice of forcing foodstuffs to unwarranted prices.

MARSHFIELD CHAMBER OF COMMERCE.

I am glad to see that the President has taken cognizance of the matter.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, it is not the farmer who is getting the benefit of this. It is some combination of retailers or wholesalers, or both. Produce right now is being held upon the farm because elevators are full and can not take it, and farmers right now are driving cattle and carrying corn and wheat to market and then hauling it unsold back home.

I thought I would get up and make these few remarks in connection with the time we are taking upon this conference report, because the sooner we get it through the sooner what little good it is going to do can be done. It is one of those things concerning which it may be said—

> If it were done, when 'tis done, 'twere well
> It were done quickly.

I do it all the more earnestly and sympathetically because the President of the United States, just returned from the saddest trip upon which a man can go, took up immediately and first of all upon his return to Washington this very question. Before he could discharge his mind from the grief which was overwhelming it, his heart, already sick, went out in sympathy for the American consumer who is suffering deprivation, not because farmers are getting higher prices, but because combinations of middlemen are doing it; and I wanted some voice in the legislative branch of the Government to be added to that of the executive as an inculcation upon judicial officers everywhere to execute the old common law against forestalling, if nothing else, and the Sherman antitrust law against combination and conspiracy in restraining trade.

There is no more injurious way of restraining trade in the world than by forestalling provisions and foodstuffs and making it yet more difficult for the poor to live. As this article says, using as a pretense the fact that possibly there may be starvation in Europe, they produce deprivation in America. Suppose there was starvation in Europe, the starvation would not raise the price of foodstuffs. It is the man who is not starved but who lives and can eat who raises the price of foodstuffs.

So far as the natural working of the law is concerned, everybody expected some rise in the price of foodstuffs because of the increased cost and insurance in getting to the consumer. Just as everybody knew there must be some fall in the price of cotton; but when men come in at a great crisis in the existence of the human family all over the world and begin to diabolically exploit their own people because other peoples elsewhere are in a most calamitous condition, adding suffering at home to diabolism abroad, it was time that the President of the United States had spoken and that everybody else who has at heart the welfare and the happiness of the poor among the American people should speak.

Mr. President, I hope that this conference report will be accepted. As I said when the bill was up before us, I regretted that the Senator from Washington had placed upon it the amendment which he placed there; but, as I said then, if we were to go into a change of the navigation laws of the United States for the benefit of one particular section, I wanted the amendment to run through the bill and to apply to all, so that all might have the benefit of the change if any had it.

Mr. BURTON. Mr. President, the strongest objection to the adoption of this conference report is the manner in which the proposition for the admission of foreign ships to our domestic trade comes before the Senate. That objection and the precedent which would be created should defeat it.

Not many days ago an emergency bill was brought before us here to provide for a certain object. The outbreak of war had rendered useless the ordinary agencies of the carrying trade. It was necessary for us to provide some other way to ship our exports abroad. It was an object of the greatest importance to the whole American people. It was not sectional, nor did it pertain to any one occupation. No single business interest promoted the passage of that measure. It was necessary to provide means by which our grain, our cotton, our copper, our oil, our coal, and all our varied manufactures should reach their ordinary markets.

During the last year for which we have statistics our exports amounted to $2,400,000,000, and the means of communication having been cut off the current of trade was so broken that that colossal traffic was not only interfered with but absolutely crushed.

Its restoration should awaken the attention of the whole country, from the Atlantic to the Pacific, from the Lakes to the Gulf. If that object could be obtained, no one in this Chamber would oppose it. But what happened? Whenever any measure, Mr. President, is brought before the Senate intended to benefit the whole people, up rises some section of the United States or some local interest and asks that it be the special beneficiary of that legislation. Riders are placed upon bills, perhaps, because otherwise they can not pass.

I should be perfectly willing to consider as a separate proposition the amendment of the Senator from Washington giving relief to the lumber producers of Washington. They are very strong protectionists when it comes to lumber, but they are in favor of wide-open competition when it comes to the coastwise trade. I do not say this so much in censure of them, for every man seeks his own interest; but Congress must weigh the reasons for and against such action.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. BURTON. Certainly.

Mr. JONES. I suggest to the Senator that this emergency proposition placed upon this bill was not placed there solely in the interest of the lumbering people. That, of course, is probably the leading industry out in our State, but I stated several times that there are other great interests affected in the same way. I do not think the Senator has any warrant in suggesting that the lumber people are protectionists in their business and for free trade in others, because the lumber people have not urged for free ships in the coastwise trade. Instead they have asked that ships may be available through the Panama Canal—what is practically ocean-going trade.

Furthermore, they are not entirely responsible for the position I take on the subject on this floor. As I stated a while ago, I have in mind the interest of the producers and consumers of our section. But even if the suggestion that the Senator makes is true, there is not very much reason why the lumber people should support protection somewhere else, because they do not have any protection and have not had for quite a good while.

Mr. BURTON. Mr. President, I do not see that it improves their position if they are not in favor of opening the coastwise trade to foreign ships as a general proposition; that is, they are not in favor of throwing open the coastwise trade between Maine and Texas, but they are in favor of having their part of it made free. That is sectional rather than national.

Mr. JONES. Oh, Mr. President——

Mr. BURTON. If this is a good system it is a good system as a national policy and should not be adopted merely for a portion of the country. Indeed, it seems to me, the Constitution of the United States, in its prohibition of preference for any particular ports, makes very doubtful the validity of the proposition of the Senator from Washington.

Mr. JONES. Will the Senator permit me?

Mr. BURTON. Certainly.

Mr. JONES. This provision applies to every line of industry. It does not apply to lumber alone, but to everything that must be shipped. In the next place, it applies to every port both on the Atlantic and the Pacific. There is no preference at all of one port over another. Every port on the Atlantic can ship to every other port on the Atlantic, and every port on the Atlantic can ship to every port on the Pacific on equal terms. There is absolute equality.

Then, furthermore, the lumber trade is not confined to shipments through the Panama Canal. So the suggestion that they are simply asking that their trade shall be given the benefits of foreign-built ships is hardly correct, because they do not ask that. In the local coastwise traffic they are willing to ship their lumber between those points in domestic ships.

Furthermore, I wish to suggest to the Senator what I have said several times upon the floor, that we would not be asking for our coast even this concession were it not for the exigency that is brought upon us by the very emergency that affects the Atlantic coast. If we had the coastwise American-built ships we would not ask you to let foreign-built ships come in, even though they might be operated cheaper. But we are confronted with the very situation on the Pacific coast that confronts us on the Atlantic coast, except in a greater degree. Our foreign-built ships that have been carrying our foreign trade under foreign flags are driven to port. They are tied up. We have not any way to send our products to foreign ports, and we have no ships to bring them over to the Atlantic coast. So we have lost not only our trade but we can not get to our home market.

Now, there is the situation. It is an emergency brought about to a certain extent by the repeal of the Panama toll act, but intensified and very greatly intensified by the war which has brought the condition on the Atlantic coast. That is the reason why this legislation is urged.

Mr. BURTON. I did not expect to yield for so long an interruption by any means. I supposed it was merely for a question or a suggestion.

Mr. JONES. I beg the Senator's pardon. I do not often interrupt a Senator in that way.

Mr. BURTON. Mr. President, I do not see how this can at all affect the ships engaged in the coastwise trade or boats available for carrying traffic on the Pacific and Atlantic coasts. Certainly they are not in any way prevented from participating in the same lines of activity in which they have taken part for the years past.

I want to call attention to this point. It is at least a disputed question. On the one side it is said that there is a scarcity of ships. I believe one telegram to that effect was read by the Senator from Washington. I wish to call his attention to the fact that no trade out there, except the lumber trade, maintained that there was a scarcity of ships. But, on the other hand, we have the statement of various shipowners that on both the Atlantic coast and the Pacific coast there are a large number of boats which are out of commission, that are in harbors, and that are fitted for almost any trade, either coastwise trade or foreign trade. There exists a vital difference of opinion, and yet we are asked to legislate within a comparatively few hours on the theory that one of those contentions is true, namely, that there is a scarcity of boats. Indeed, I do not know but that the suggestion of the Senator from North Dakota clarifies this situation and is at the same time convincing, that those who say there is a scarcity and those who say there is a superabundance of boats are both correct in their opinions. In view of the early opening of the Panama Canal for traffic between the two oceans, it is probable that a very large amount of shipping has been kept waiting until this shorter route afforded by the canal is open to the world. But we are asked thus hastily to legislate in regard to the Pacific and Atlantic trade. We are asked to attach the proposition of the Senator from Washington to an act which seems to be absolutely essential for the whole people and for the benefit of the whole country.

I most cordially favored the passage of the bill as it came from the House, and hoped that it would be passed promptly, but I can not favor this report in the form in which it comes before us.

Now, following this, what comes next? The House bill, amended by the Senate, goes to a conference committee, and then a proposition authorizing the acquisition for two years of foreign ships to engage in the coastwise trade is placed upon the bill. Not a word about such a proposition was in the House bill; there was not a word about it in the Senate bill. So far as I recall, no amendment was introduced in the House or the Senate having that end in view; and if there was any argument in behalf of making the domestic or coastwise trade free to foreign ships, it was answered or controverted here upon the floor of the Senate.

There was no proposition in the measure sent to us from the House, except the original one providing for foreign trade and foreign trade exclusively. There was no statement here that the provision for the general coastwise trade was insufficient. Then the bill goes from the House and the Senate to a conference committee of 10 members, and they take the liberty of putting in a provision which neither the House nor the Senate passed or even suggested.

Mr. President, is that the way in which we should conduct the public business? Is that the manner in which we ought to legislate—turning over our functions and responsibilities to a conference committee of 10 and saying to them, "We have merely erected the base of the pyramid; you may put in the superstructure anything you please. We have enacted legislation pertaining to two simple subjects, easily understood, about which there has been full discussion, concerning which the country has been informed, but you may join to it other subjects, related or unrelated, about which the country is not informed and of which the country has no anticipation."

Indeed, everything should point to the rejection of any such legislation, because, here in the Senate, in the year 1912, the proposition was made in the form of an amendment that foreign ships might be admitted to the coastwise trade. It was overwhelmingly defeated. A similar amendment, as I am informed, was introduced in the other House, and it was also voted down. The established business of the country and new enterprises as well depend not altogether upon the present but upon the anticipation of the future; and when Congress, both in the other House and in the Senate, negatived so decisively the proposition of opening the coastwise trade to foreign ships investors were justified in making their contracts to build boats upon that hypothesis, even though those boats might not be delivered for two or three years.

Was that proposition voted down because an election was impending? I want to say to Senators that this also is on the eve of an election, and that if this conference report is adopted it will, by its unfairness, by its irregularity as a legislative or parliamentary procedure, afford an issue that will be referred to in every State of the Union and perhaps from every stump in the land. We can not afford to thus legislate in this hasty manner and with so little notice to the country. Those who have built ships relying on the custom of a hundred years, relying upon a uniform policy which has been supported as partly patriotic and partly economic, were notified yesterday morning for the first time that such a proposition had been agreed upon by the conference committee. This provision in its amended form first appearing in the conference report and first reported to the country yesterday morning—possibly there may have been rumors of it the night before—is to be jammed through to-day or to-morrow. Can we justify such a course as that? Is that the way we are going to legislate in the future?

In addition to the men who are engaged in this business enterprise, let me tell you an acute interest is felt by the seamen who are employed upon the ships in the coastwise trade, perhaps the least attractive line of employment in the United States. There is hardly any class more poorly paid; but we do have a certain number of them who are engaged on our ships, whatever the wages may be, who in case of war would be an auxiliary for the Navy, and who, in some degree, can maintain the position of seamen in the United States; yet their employment is to be thrown in competition with the foreign ship and the foreign sailor under the report brought in here in this manner, and not seriously thought of by the Members of the Senate 48 hours ago; not considered by the Committee of Commerce, that has jurisdiction of the subject in the Senate; not considered by the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries, that has jurisdiction of it in the other House. The door is closed; no one is heard; and it is proposed to force through this measure, however disastrous it may be, without warning and without hearing.

Mr. President, I have never been especially identified with the interest of the coastwise trade. In the lake region where I dwell there is a development of American shipping which altogether surpasses in its growth, its health, and its prosperity that on the Atlantic coast. We are not afraid of foreign shipowners. In the first place, we have a number of highly equipped and well-advanced shipyards; in the next place, there are models peculiarly adapted to the lake trade with which those shipbuilders are familiar, and no newcomer in the field of ship construction could well compete with them. Again, we have the barrier of a canal only 14 feet in depth and a little over 250 feet in width, which restricts bringing ships into Lake Erie and the other lakes above it from any other portion of this country or from abroad.

Mr. POINDEXTER. What is the length of the locks of the canal?

Mr. BURTON. About 265 or 270 feet. They count on a boat of the length of 250 feet as the maximum which can go through. I should say that it is proposed to increase the locks on a very large scale, but that has not yet been accomplished.

On the Lakes we can defy the world in our shipbuilding, and I think we could get along very well despite this proposed legislation. So I have no local interest in this matter, but I look at it from the standpoint of the whole country, from the standpoint of orderly, fair legislative procedure, from the standpoint of doing justice to every interest in this country. We should not proclaim to the country that we have a new method here of legislating, not by Congress, which has the power under the Constitution to legislate, but by a conference committee, which may add to any bill passed by the House and Senate a proposition which will wipe out very large business interests, which will threaten the employment and the wages of tens of thousands of men, and which will reverse almost overnight the policy of a century.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, it will be impossible for me to vote for this conference report, for two reasons. I shall state them as briefly and as clearly as possible.

I feel in one respect just as the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] feels. The great volume of the products of the West and of the Middle West has been put upon the free list, and our producers are compelled to compete upon even terms with their rivals throughout the world. I have believed, therefore, that it was fair to them to have free trade in ships; and, as I have more than once said and as I have more than once voted, I am in favor of allowing Americans to buy ships abroad and to bring them into the service of the country without the payment of any duty in order to equalize as far as possible the burdens imposed by tariff duties and by transportation rates. If this report were limited to the privilege of buying ships abroad and putting them into the service of our own people, whether in the foreign trade or in the domestic trade, I would be inclined to favor it; but, Mr. President, there is in the report an injustice which, as I view it, can not be defended by any man, and no such defense has been as yet suggested in this debate.

What is done here? An American buys a ship abroad; he is permitted to register it for the foreign trade, and the President suspends for that ship practically all our navigation laws; he suspends in behalf of that ship all the regulations which make the operation of a domestic vessel more expensive than the operation of a foreign vessel; and by virtue of the registry so acquired that ship, with a foreign captain, with foreign mate, with all her responsible officers foreign and all her crew foreign, without having been burdened by the test of our survey and our inspection, enters our coastwise trade side by side with a ship built in the United States that is compelled to have American officers, an American crew, and a ship that will withstand and fulfill the test of the American rules of safety and sanitation. What chance has a home-built ship in competition with such a foreign-built ship?

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. CUMMINS. I do.

Mr. BORAH. The Senator from Iowa states the proposition as if it were obligatory upon the President of the United States to suspend these laws. Of course the Senator means that the President may do so in case the emergency appeals to him?

Mr. CUMMINS. Precisely. I am arguing the case upon the basis that something is to be accomplished. I am arguing the case upon the theory that the President of the United States will find it necessary to suspend these laws in order to induce American registry, and whenever that contingency happens we have just the picture that I endeavored to paint—a foreign ship, with foreign crew and foreign officers, with foreign barbarities and cruelties practiced upon the men, and an American ship running side by side with her, surrounded by all our regulations dictated by humanity, governed by American officers, who owe allegiance to the American flag. I want you to tell me whether that is a spectacle upon which the American people will look with any gratification. I want you to tell me whether it can possibly be defended upon the basis of justice or equality among men.

I am perfectly willing to have the ship built abroad. That is one of the consequences of the free trade which our friends on the other side of the Chamber have established in the United States; but I should like to know, after this administration gets the ship into American waters, without the payment of any duty or without the imposition of any burden, how it will defend the proposition that the ship shall not be subject to the same law that controls a ship built in the United States. This is not free trade in ships; it is paying a premium to foreign ships; it is a tax put upon American shipping in favor of foreign shipping; and it is beyond my comprehension to understand the spirit of a people that will permit or tolerate that invasion upon the commonest dictates of patriotism and justice. Why, may I ask the Senators on the other side—but few of them are here; I do not know why. I assume that their minds are already made up upon this question, or, if their minds are not made up, that the question is being considered elsewhere——

Mr. LIPPITT. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit me, I suggest that it would be a very good time to suggest the absence of a quorum, which I do.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Rhode Island?

Mr. CUMMINS. No, Mr. President; if I am asked to yield for that purpose, I will not yield.

Mr. LIPPITT. Mr. President, I should like to rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Iowa has the floor. It is in his control to yield or not.

Mr. LIPPITT. Can I not have the floor for the purpose of making a point of order?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair rules that the suggestion of the absence of a quorum is not a point of order.

Mr. LIPPITT. I was going to make the point of order that the Senate can not transact business in the absence of a quorum, and that when the lack of a quorum is suggested it is essential that it shall be discovered whether there is or is not a quorum present.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair rules that, under the plain rules of the Senate, the Senator from Iowa having the floor, it is the duty of a Senator desiring to interrupt the Senator from Iowa to address the Chair. The Senator from Rhode Island did address the Chair, and the Chair then inquired of the Senator from Iowa whether he consented to the interruption. He did not consent. The mere fact that the Senator from Rhode Island has risen gives him no right.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I have no quarrel with the ruling of the Chair. The reason why I did not yield was because I understand it is the present interpretation of the rules of the Senate that if I yield for that purpose I have yielded the floor, and I do not desire to do so, and I am not particularly anxious that a roll call shall be resorted to in order to supply me with a larger audience.

I have given one reason why it will be impossible for me to vote for the conference report. I desire simply to repeat the conclusion. This is not a proposition for free ships; with that proposition I am in sympathy; this is a proposition for granting to foreign-built ships privileges which are denied to American-built ships, and, so far as I am concerned, it is impossible for me at this time, and I hope it will be impossible for me at any time, to support a measure so contrary to our fundamental conceptions of justice and so contrary to our high instincts of patriotism.

I pass to the second point. Even if this proposal were in the same form as it was when it left the Senate, I could not and would not vote for the conference report, because I believe that when the conferees eliminated from the bill the provision which required the majority of the stock of the American corporation which purchased a foreign ship to be owned and held by American citizens they simply extended an invitation to the whole world to commit a fraud upon the laws of neutrality and to inflict an indignity upon the belligerent powers of Europe.

My friend from Idaho says that even if the provision which the Senate after a long debate incorporated in the bill had remained, it would have been of little value. I know, Mr. President, that skillful and unscrupulous people can evade a law. I do not think, however, that this particular provision would have been so easy of evasion as the Senator from Idaho believes it would have been. If, however, the amendment which I offered, and which, after serious and careful consideration, was adopted by the Senate, was inadequate in that respect, the Senate conferees ought to have amended it so as to make it adequate and sufficient, instead of eliminating it entirely from the bill. The conferees in so doing would have taken vastly less liberty with the bill than they did take in rewriting the whole measure, so far as the provision affecting our coastwise trade is concerned. I submit, Mr. President, that a provision which requires that a majority of the stock of an American corporation purchasing a ship in the future shall be owned and held by American citizens could not be evaded so easily as to take away the substance of the protection with which I sought to surround the transaction.

What have we done? We have a law which is utterly unjustifiable in itself. It was adopted, as I remember, in 1912; it was adopted, however, without any reference to the exigency for which we are now legislating; it was adopted at a time when there was no temptation and no inducement for a foreign ship to seek American registry, because our laws were such that a ship under American registry could not be profitably operated in the trade between this and other nations. The law to which I refer provided that not only a citizen, not only a person, could buy a foreign-built ship, but that a corporation organized under the laws of the United States or of any State could buy a foreign-built ship. Those of us who are familiar with the operation of corporations—and that has been a subject of general inquiry within the last few years—understand perfectly well the uses and purposes to which a corporation can be put.

Mr. LIPPITT. Mr. President, I wonder if the Senator would yield to me for just one moment, that I might make a parliamentary inquiry?

Mr. CUMMINS. I yield for a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. LIPPITT. I should like to call the attention of the Chair to Rule V, on page 7, section 2, which says:

> If at any time—

I emphasize the words "at any time"—

> during the daily sessions of the Senate a question shall be raised by any Senator as to the presence of a quorum, the presiding officer shall forthwith direct the Secretary to call the roll and shall announce the result, and these proceedings shall be without debate.

Mr. President, it seems to me that that language is perfectly definite and very strong, and that when I rose a minute ago to suggest the absence of a quorum I was doing so in strict accordance with that rule and with the ordinary precedents of this body. I should like to suggest to the Vice President that it seems to me I have the right at this time to suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Just one moment.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr President, I simply wish to suggest to the Senator from Rhode Island that the Senator from Iowa has refused to yield to the Senator from Rhode Island for that purpose.

Mr. LIPPITT. I will suggest to the Senator that the Senator from Iowa has just yielded to me for the purpose of making a parliamentary inquiry, which I am now making.

The VICE PRESIDENT. These rules must be construed together, or they do not amount to anything. Rule XIX provides:

> No Senator shall interrupt another Senator in debate without his consent, and to obtain such consent he shall first address the presiding officer.

The Senator from Iowa having the floor, the Senator from Rhode Island had no right to interrupt the Senator from Iowa without his consent; and while Rule V does provide that at any time during the daily sessions of the Senate a question may be raised at to the presence of a quorum, the ruling of the Chair is that when a Senator is addressing the Senate the interruption must be with his consent.

Mr. LIPPITT. But I had his consent, Mr. President.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair inquired of the Senator from Iowa whether he had his consent, and the Senator from Iowa said, "No; not for that purpose."

Mr. LIPPITT. When I rose I asked if I might interrupt the Senator, and he allowed me to do so. At all events, even if that had not been the case, Mr. President, where language is so unqualified as Rule V about such a question as that relates to——

Mr. CUMMINS. What I meant was that I did not know that the Senator from Rhode Island rose for that purpose, and if I had known that his purpose was to demand the presence of a quorum I would not have yielded, because I intend to pursue in the future the policy of not yielding for that object, although I did not qualify it when he rose and interrupted me.

Mr. LIPPITT. With that acknowledgment on the part of the Senator that he did yield the floor to me, and with the statement on the part of the Chair that in order to suggest the absence of a quorum it was merely necessary to get the consent of the Senator having the floor for permission to interrupt him, which I did do, and I then suggested the absence of a quorum, it seems to me that I was entirely in order and in accordance with the rules of the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair will ask the Reporter to turn back to the record and read what occurred when the Senator from Rhode Island first rose.

Mr. LIPPITT. I will say that I should not have risen to suggest such a thing, except that the Senator himself had called attention to the lack of interest in the debate on the other side of the Chamber; and it did seem to me that on a matter which I consider of such great importance the propriety of Members being present was very great, to say nothing of the interest that always attaches to whatever the Senator from Iowa says.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Arkansas will State it.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. What has become of the ruling made by the Chair some days since that debate was not intervening business?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Nothing has become of it.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will ask the Senator from Arkansas where he finds the rule which provides that business shall intervene. I have looked for it in vain.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. That was the ruling the Chair made several days since.

Mr. LIPPITT. I believe this question really is not subject to debate, and I should like to have the question decided upon the statement of the Chair.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair has sent for the Reporter who took the notes. The Chair desires the Reporter to read, starting with what the Senator from Rhode Island said the first time he rose, and the subsequent record.

The Reporter read as follows:

> Mr. LIPPITT. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit me, I suggest that it would be a very good time to suggest the absence of a quorum, which I do.
>
> The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Rhode Island?
> Mr. CUMMINS. No, Mr. President; if I am asked to yield for that purpose, I will not yield.
>
> Mr. LIPPITT. Mr. President, I should like to rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The VICE PRESIDENT. That is as far as the Chair cares to have the record read.

Mr. LIPPITT. Mr. President, I will ask to have the record read when I rose a minute ago.

The Reporter read as follows:

> Mr. LIPPITT. Mr. President, I wonder if the Senator would yield to me for just one moment that I might make a parliamentary inquiry?
>
> Mr. CUMMINS. I yield for a parliamentary inquiry.
>
> Mr. LIPPITT. I should like to call the attention of the Chair to Rule V, on page 7, section 2, which says:
>
> "If at any time"—
>
> I emphasize the words "at any time"—
>
> "during the daily sessions of the Senate a question shall be raised by any Senator as to the presence of a quorum, the presiding officer shall forthwith direct the Secretary to call the roll and shall announce the result, and these proceedings shall be without debate."

Mr. LIPPITT. Mr. President, I will ask the Senator from Iowa if he will yield to me?

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, the Senator from Rhode Island raised a parliamentary inquiry. I understand now he desires the Senator from Iowa to yield, I presume for the purpose of suggesting the absence of a quorum. That, I suggest, is not exactly the right way to get possession of the floor. He asked for the mere right to make a parliamentary inquiry, and that matter has not been disposed of yet.

Mr. LIPPITT. When I first rose I asked, in the way in which it is usually done in the Senate, whether the Senator would permit me. He did not object, and I took his silence for consent. I presume that the Chair may be able to assume a technicality there, that I should have waited and heard him say "I do." What I did say was——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair assumes only the technicality that, as the record shows, the Senator from Rhode Island took the floor without addressing the Chair. That is what the Chair assumes, and the record shows it.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, I should like to have the Chair informed of a fact which occurred when the Vice President was not in the chair. I do not know that I quite understand the question before the Chair; but if I do, it is that some Senator has made, or attempted to make, the point of no quorum, and the point was made that no business had intervened since the last roll call. I wish the Chair to know that while the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. MARTINE] was in the chair, by consent of the Senate a bill or more was introduced.

The VICE PRESIDENT. That is not the point at all. If the Senator from Rhode Island had obtained permission of the Senator from Iowa to interrupt him and suggest the absence of a quorum, there is not a question of doubt that he would have been entitled to have a roll call to disclose a quorum, and the Chair would have so ordered it.

Mr. LIPPITT. That is a little different, Mr. President, if the Chair will allow me to interrupt him, from the ruling that was originally made. I think the Chair is correct, on the basis of that statement.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Oh, no; the Senator from Rhode Island did not understand the Chair, because the Chair did not so rule. The Senator from Rhode Island did not address the Chair. The record has just been read. He rose and said: "This would be a good time, I think, to have a roll call," or something like that; whereupon the Chair, instead of suggesting to the Senator from Rhode Island that he was out of order, desiring to be courteous to the Senator, as the Chair hopes to be courteous to everybody, asked the Senator from Iowa whether he would yield to the Senator from Rhode Island, and the Senator from Iowa refused to yield.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, just a word. I know this matter is not debatable, but in the early days of my service here it was quite customary for a Senator to make the point of no quorum regardless of everything else. The Chair is entirely right, however, in interpreting those two rules together—that a Senator can not be taken off the floor without his consent. If he can not, of course the point of no quorum can not be made. I think the Chair has ruled with entire correctness upon this matter.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair has had no desire to be discourteous to the Senator from Rhode Island or to any other Senator.

Mr. GALLINGER. There is just one other point upon which I will say just a word. A fiction has grown up here that business has to intervene. A search, however diligent, will not disclose any rule of this body that provides that, but perhaps it is well enough. If we could all agree to it, I think it might be well, but that is not a rule of the body.

Mr. LIPPITT. Mr. President, if the Senator from Iowa will allow me to say just one thing, I have discovered that in the course of the discussion of this question a quorum apparently has arrived in the Senate, so that, as far as I am concerned, the necessity of calling one has disappeared.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I hope the Senator from Rhode Island will not think that I was in the least discourteous to him; but it has become distressing to some of us, certainly to me, to have repeated calls of the roll simply for the purpose of getting Senators into the Chamber, staying long enough only to answer to their names, and then immediately seeking some more desirable and comfortable place.

In view of the interruption, I shall find it necessary to restate the proposition I was attempting to argue. I am addressing myself now to the second objection I made to the conference report, namely, that it contains no safeguard whatever respecting the ownership of the stock of an American corporation which may hereafter buy a foreign-built ship.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. CUMMINS. I yield.

Mr. LEWIS. I desire to take the liberty of calling the able Senator's attention to the exact point where he left off, as I was very much interested. I understood the Senator was about to address himself to the question of how to avoid the evasion which the able Senator from Idaho called attention to as one of the invariable results of just such legislation.

Mr. CUMMINS. No, Mr. President; I think the Senator from Illinois has rather exaggerated the statement made by the Senator from Idaho. The latter statement was, in my view, somewhat unduly emphasized, but now the Senator from Illinois has multiplied it many times. The Senator from Idaho said that the provision in the bill, which had been adopted after great consideration in the Senate, could be evaded, and now the Senator from Illinois understands the Senator from Idaho to have said that the provision would be invariably evaded. The Senator from Idaho did not so say. I shall address myself to that question presently; but I had already said concerning it that if the conference committee thought the words in which the amendment was couched were inadequate it could have strengthened those words and rendered the evasion still more difficult than it would have been had the amendment remained as I originally offered it. Instead of that, understanding the danger, I think, the conference committee simply eliminates the entire provision and leaves the name of the United States open to the charge of bad faith which will be made against it from every quarter of the globe.

When I was interrupted I was discussing the way in which this unguarded provision came into the law. I think it came in in 1912. Before that time a foreign-built ship could not be registered, either for the foreign trade or for the domestic trade, under the laws of the United States. That change was made in 1912, in the Panama Canal act, which permitted an American citizen or an American corporation to become the owner of a foreign-built ship not more than 5 years old, and to enter it for foreign trade. There was no danger then, as I was about to say when interrupted; that is, the danger was not seen. We all knew that American registry was a burden upon a ship, that it involved certain expenses and involved the compliance with rules and regulations which made an American registry a very undesirable thing; and no one thought at that time of the dangers that might be lurking in the phrase "American corporation," without any guard as to the ownership of the stock of the corporation. Moreover, at that time the world was at peace, and every country was at liberty to carry its own flag over its own ships without any peril at all. The subject was not discussed. I doubt if it ever entered the mind of any Member of the Senate or any Member of Congress.

But what happens now? All Europe is at war. The great nations of the world have placed their interdiction upon commerce, and there are certain countries of the world whose ships are driven from the sea. That is to say, circumstances make it practically impossible that the ships of certain nations shall carry on their ordinary business. In 1909 a convention was held in London with regard to the rules which ought to govern neutral nations, and we took part in that convention, and there issued from it a code with regard to the purchase of ships by the subjects of a neutral power during time of war; that is to say, the circumstances under which a ship could be changed from the flag of a belligerent to the flag of a neutral power.

I shall not enter into the details of this convention. They were expressive in very large measure of international law as it was understoood before that time. There was no great innovation or change made in the established law of the world, but one of the things which was then declared, and which, I think, has always been understoood to be the international law, was that if the registry of the ship was changed in order to escape the consequences of war it would be disregarded by belligerents. There were certain periods fixed in some of the rules of the convention, but that is the substance of it all.

Let us now go forward a step and see what will happen if this bill passes as it is. German ships have no home on the Atlantic Ocean. England is mistress of that sea, and the German flag disappears from the accustomed routes of transportation and travel. But there are German ships, and many of them, in American ports. They are incapable of being used in commerce. If, under this law, an American corporation purcases one of those ships, she will be entitled to an American registry even though the actual ownership of the vessel remains exactly as it was before. Suppose a corporation were organized under the liberal laws of New Jersey or any other Commonwealth. The ship is now owned by a foreign corporation. All the foreign corporation has to do is to take the stock of the American corporation and make the transfer and the transaction is complete. The vessel is absolutely entitled, without any discretion whatsoever on the part of American officers, to an American registry. The vessel then departs upon her journey laden with either the goods of this country or the goods of some other country. England seizes the ship, and England, under the convention which I have just referred to, would have a right to seize the ship. She would be taken to the nearest port and would fall immediately under the jurisdiction of the prize courts of Great Britain, and she would be condemned as a prize of war.

Now, that does not necessarily involve the United States in war. It would not be necessary for us to quarrel with England because England chose to exert her sovereignty in that way, in a way in which she would have a right to exert it. If, however, that thing happened over and over again, as it would happen over and over again; if ship after ship bearing the American flag were borne into the ports of the belligerents of Europe, there to be condemned by the prize courts of the several countries, little by little there would arise a feeling of hostility, there would arise an irritation that would destroy the amity which now exists between the United States and these warring powers, and I predict that with such events we would be inevitably drawn into the controversies of Europe.

It will be difficult enough for the United States to stand straight and free and neutral as it is. There will be causes enough for disturbance. If this war continues six months, it will require the wisest minds and the most patriotic hearts to conduct the affairs of the United States so as to escape the entanglements which lead to war. Why should we, for the purpose of allowing the shadow of an American corporation to lift the flag of the United States over a ship that really belongs to citizens of other countries, incur this peril, which must be obvious to every reflective mind?

Let us look at it from another standpoint. The countries of Europe have not protested against the change we made in the law in 1912, for they had no reason to believe that under it there could be committed an act really hostile and unfriendly to themselves. I repeat that in 1912, when we made it possible for an American corporation to buy a foreign ship without guarding that act with the provision that the real interest of the corporation should be American, as well as the name of the corporation, we felt no danger. There was no danger. Now, however, we are facing an emergency, it is said. What is the emergency? The emergency is that we have products at our ports and no vessels to carry them abroad. I think I may say in passing that the emergency has already well-nigh gone. Every ship in the world except the ships of Germany and Austria is at liberty now to ply its accustomed business. There may be some obstacles in the way of ships that must penetrate the North Sea and the channels into the Baltic Sea, but that phase of it is negligible.

My proposition is still broadly and substantially true, that the apprehension which the shipowners of other nations naturally felt when the war first burst upon the world has well-nigh passed away, and these ships are already beginning to do what they did before. Nevertheless I am not opposed to furnishing other ships to do this business. I am very much in favor of furnishing American ships to do the business if we can, but I want them to be American ships. I do not want to see a foreign captain and foreign mates, foreign watch officers and a foreign crew sailing a foreign ship under the American flag, and whenever we permit that atrocity we are sure to incur the gravest danger.

Now, one thought more. England would have a right to complain of us if this law were to pass, France would have a right to complain of us, and every other country in Europe, with the possible exception of Germany and Austria, would have a right to complain of our act. Why, Mr. President? I will endeavor to answer. We have an unguarded law which permits nominal transfers of title without real changes of ownership. In the effort of England to block the ports of Germany, in the effort of France to destroy the power of Austria, we come and relieve, so far as we can, the very ships which England and France are attempting to render useless, and enable them to go out upon the sea under the American flag and with all the protection that such a registry and such a flag can confer upon them. I do not know how other Senators may feel about it, but as for me, if I were a subject of Great Britain I would look upon it as an unfriendly act. If we were at war with another nation, and a neutral power would do just as we are proposing to do here, I could not view it otherwise than as a hostile attempt to interfere with the rights of nations.

I would not say that, if it were not true, that we know that a ship at this time, or so long as this war lasts, transferred to an American corporation with the substantial interests of the corporation held abroad would be condemned in any prize court as a violator of the laws of neutrality. We are trying to open the way to do that very thing by this legislation.

If under our legislation as it existed before the war these things should happen, there would be no reason to complain of the Government of the United States, because we would not have taken our action in view of war, but we are taking this step in the face of war; we are taking it to avoid the consequence of war; and it is impossible for me to reach any other conclusion than that either of the belligerent powers whose commerce may be affected, whose strength in the war may be affected by what is done under this statute, would have grave cause for complaint; not against the individual citizen of the United States; not against the corporation that might become the owner of the ship—that complaint could be worked out in the constituted courts—but it would have a just cause for complaint against the Government of the United States, which, in so far as this proceeding is concerned, is represented in the two Houses of Congress and by the President of the United States.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. CUMMINS. I yield.

Mr. POINDEXTER. There is a great deal of force in what the Senator is saying, but of course it would not apply to the full extent except in a case where a vessel transferred to American registry under this law was plying between two foreign ports, for the reason that the United States itself has an interest, and a very profound interest, in the acquirement of shipping facilities for its own commerce, whether domestic or whether foreign.

I wanted to ask the Senator from Iowa if, due to the conditions arising from the war and other conditions which are accentuated and aggravated perhaps by the war, we find ourselves with a great accumulation of surplus products and no shipping, it is not manifestly to our interest to provide means of shipments, and in good faith for that purpose to allow foreign ships to be registered under our laws, even though it should exempt them from the liability of a belligerent ship as between the warring powers, whether any belligerent would have cause to complain of our action in that respect?

Mr. CUMMINS. I think so.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Would we not be justified by our own interest, and, being so justified, what just complaint would a belligerent power make against us?

Mr. CUMMINS. We have assumed the position of a neutral power. There is no profit which can arise to the United States that will justify the violation of the law of neutrality. We had the privilege of becoming one of the belligerent powers. We could declare war if we wanted to and remove ourselves from the attitude of a neutral power; but so long as we remain a neutral we must obey the law of neutrality, no matter how much it might profit the people of this country to disobey that law. I think that the Senator from Washington will admit my proposition.

Now, if what we are about to do is to open the door for a fraud upon the laws of neutrality, and a fraud which once exposed will at once condemn the transaction by the law of neutrality, I am sure that there is no citizen of the United States, however desirous he may be to provide ships for our foreign commerce, who will approve it. That is all I ask. I simply ask that these transfers shall be real transfers. As it is now, they need not be real transfers. It matters not if you put a placard upon every wall of the country that the transfer to the American corporation was made simply because the ship could not safely sail under her former registry, yet it would be valid under our law, and the ship would be entitled to the registry. Of course, if captured, the whole affair would be at once exploded, and the ship would stand in exactly the same position before the courts as though it had been captured flying its former flag instead of the flag of this country. But we are adopting this law to enable that to be done.

The Senator from New York [Mr. O'GORMAN] this morning made a declaration. I do not know whether he gave the author of the statement or not. I imagine that he did, but I am not certain enough about it to mention the name. I ask his attention. Was I right in saying that the Senator from New York gave the name of his informant this morning, when he said it had been stated to him that unless the corporations whose stock is owned abroad could buy ships and have their flags changed there would be no relief under this bill?

Mr. O'GORMAN. No; what I did say was in substance that if this restrictive requirement were retained in the bill it would seriously discourage and hamper the transfer of ships to the American flag that may be purchased by American corporations.

Mr. CUMMINS. May I ask if the Senator from New York stated his informant upon that point, or did he make it from his own knowledge? That is what I wish to know.

Mr. O'GORMAN. That has been my own personal view for some days. I gave expression to that view several times during the past week. I know it is shared by others. I believe it is shared by the administration.

Mr. CUMMINS. As I remember it, the Senator from New York gave that opinion as reflecting the view of the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. O'GORMAN. I understand that also to be his view.

Mr. CUMMINS. I do not know what opportunities the Secretary of the Treasury has had to reach a conclusion upon that subject, but I can not imagine that he has had any better opportunity than the Senator from New York or any other Senator in this body.

It means simply this: That we can not get these ships and register them under this bill if American capital is required in the transaction. That is all it means.

It means, and every man here knows that it means, and we all know it is true, that no American, no sane man, will part with his money in the purchase of a foreign ship and put it into an American registry under the indefinite suspension provided for in this bill; for the very moment that the suspension is removed, the very moment it becomes necessary for the ship to obey the laws and regulations of the United States, that moment the operation of the ship becomes impossible in competition with foreign ships of foreign register.

Mr. O'GORMAN. There are those who believe that while the foreign-built ships now acquired by American corporations will at once devote their activities to the trans-Atlantic trade, when the attractions of that trade cease they will then take advantage of the permanent permission granted to them by this bill to engage in the coastwise trade.

Mr. CUMMINS. No; Mr. President, that is reasoning in a complete circle. My proposition is that in good faith there is not one dollar of American capital to be found for investment in the purchase of foreign-built ships at this time, and no evidence can be secured or submitted to the Senate of any such willingness. The Senator from New York, with his customary candor, for which I compliment him, because he does not desire this bill to be adopted upon a false understanding, declares that if the provision in the bill which requires American ownership is retained the bill will be inoperative; that there will be no ships bought and registered under it. That is the truth, and we might as well admit it. We might as well publish to the world, as the world already knows, that we are preparing the way here for an American corporation organized under the laws of some one of the States, and probably under the laws of New Jersey, for that is the most liberal State with regard to such things, with its stock held abroad, to take a transfer that is colorable, formal, that means nothing whatsoever except the work of a clerk in preparing incorporation papers and filing a copy in the office.

And that is the sort of a transaction we are inviting, are preparing for, are telling the world that we are about to authorize. What does the Senator think of the opinion that will be held of the good faith of this country among the nations that are now at war?

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. CUMMINS. I do.

Mr. BORAH. The Senator from Iowa says it would only require the services of a clerk to make this transfer. If the Senator's amendment were adopted it would only require that clerk to work about 30 minutes longer.

Mr. CUMMINS. No, Mr. President; I do not agree with that. I was about to come to that. If the provision had remained in the bill it would have required the officers of the United States to ascertain that a majority of the stock of that corporation was owned and held by American citizens. That inquiry, if carried on efficiently, and I assume it would be, could only be satisfied by the discovery of a real investment, a bona fide investment, on the part of American citizens in the stock of the corporation. It would not be satisfied if there accompanied the transaction an agreement or understanding that after the registry had been secured the stock should be transferred to some foreign corporation or to foreign citizens. I said, when that question was asked me, that I had no doubt that the law could possibly be evaded. We have not a law upon our statute books but can be evaded. The most important of our statutes are violated without discovery every month in the year, but we do not, therefore, repeal all those statutes. We do not repeal the antitrust law because it is capable of evasion; we do not repeal the interstate-commerce law because there are ways in which its mandates can be avoided; and, as it seems to me, we plant ourselves upon unsafe and untenable ground when we eliminate the provision for the reason that it can be evaded.

The Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH], however, apparently does not put his willingness to strike out the amendment on the same ground chosen by the Senator from New York [Mr. O'GORMAN]. The Senator from New York takes the ground that it would not be evaded, and that its enforcement would prevent the transfer of ships nominally to an American corporation. I put the two positions one against the other, and I am sure that from that conflict I may justly draw the conclusion that the provision would be helpful.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, the position of the Senator from New York and that of the Senator from Idaho are not at all in conflict. The Senator from New York apprehends that in the mere matter of transfer it would be an embarrassment. I simply say that it would only be a temporary affair; if they desired to evade the law it would require but a step further. While they might hesitate, owing to the fact that the transaction would be subject to examination in a certain way, in case the amendment prevailed it would simply change the process.

The Senator from Iowa has said that we should have enlarged this amendment so as to make it effective. That was one of the things that we found it impossible to do. We did not know any way by which we could compel the individual to hold stock if he did not want to hold it; we did not know any method by which a man could be compelled to take stock and not transfer it to some one else if the owner wanted to sell it.

Mr. CUMMINS. There is not any way.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President——

Mr. CUMMINS. Just a moment. The Senator from Idaho says it will only take one step more, but that step, Mr. President, is one that would involve fraud——

Mr. BORAH. Not at all.

Mr. CUMMINS. And bad morals, whereas the bill as it now is invites a nominal transfer through a paper corporation without the commission of any fraud whatsoever.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, it would not necessarily involve fraud or immoral conduct at all. It might be a perfectly legitimate transaction.

Mr. CUMMINS. It would not be legitimate if it were understood beforehand that the stock was to be retransferred.

Mr. BORAH. That is true; but the amendment of the Senator from Iowa did not provide that it shall continue to be held by an American citizen; it simply provided that at the particular time of the registry it should be so owned and held. A man may transfer it 20 minutes afterwards and do so upon perfectly legal and perfectly moral grounds.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, how easy it would have been for the Senate conferees to have insisted that there should be put into the amendment the provision that if it appeared that the majority of the stock at any time belonged to citizens of foreign countries the registry should be canceled.

Mr. BORAH. If the Senator from Iowa had made any such suggestion as that, I think the debate would have taken an entirely different turn, because it would have been almost impossible of execution. The machinery to carry such a provision into effect would have been almost impossible to erect.

Mr. CUMMINS. Now I yield to the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I know it is not becoming in a layman to undertake to engage in a controversy in reference to matters of purely legal construction, but I was yesterday honored by receiving a letter from Mr. R. G. Bickford, of Newport News, Va., a very famous maritime lawyer, in which he has cited—and I will pass the paper to the Senator from Iowa in a moment for his examination—hundreds of instances where this question has been more or less discussed. Mr. Bickford, to start with, quotes from Glenn's International Law, section 191, in which it is said:

> The nature of such a transfer, when made in time of war, is such that a belligerent can with good reason make a most searching examination of all the circumstances connected therewith. The temptation and opportunities for committing fraud in such transfers being very great, they are not considered as valid unless the title and interest of the vendor has passed absolutely. In case there is any covenant, condition, or understanding of any kind that the vendor retains an interest in the vessel or profits, or any control over it or a right of restitution at some future period, or a power of revocation, the transfer would be invalidated.

Again, he gives certain other citations with this note—this, I think, is from a decision of Sir William Scott—

> The court has often had occasion to observe that where a ship, asserted to have been transferred, is continued under the former agency and in the former habits of trade, not all the swearing in the world will convince it that it is a genuine transaction.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, that citation does not present anything in favor of this particular amendment. There would be the same right to make an investigation, and the fraud could be declared upon the same principle, whether the transaction took place under the amendment or under the provision as reported by the conferees.

Mr. GALLINGER. Further quoting from Case No. 7,107, the Island case, 13 Federal cases, page 171—I do not know how directly this applies to the question, and I am presenting these suggestions with a great deal of modesty—

The rule of decision in some countries has been that, as to a vessel, no change of ownership during hostilities can be regarded in a prize court. In the United States, as in England, the strictness of this rule is not observed. But no change of property is recognized where the disposition and control of a vessel continue in the former agent of her former hostile proprietors.

Then, quoting from the case of the Georgia, 7 Wallace, page 43—

The question in this case can not arise under the French code, as, according to that law, sales of even merchant vessels to a neutral, flagrante bello, are forbidden. And it is understood that the same rule prevails in Russia. Their law in this respect differs from the established English and American adjudications on this subject.

I will hand the letter to the Senator from Iowa. There are hundreds of citations.

Mr. CUMMINS. I will be very glad to read the paper, although the law on this subject is very well understood. As I have said, it was elucidated and somewhat clearly stated, so far as it affects this question, in the neutrality convention of 1909; but the Senator from Idaho, in answering the Senator from New Hampshire, I think is a little in error in this, that no matter what precaution we might take, the right of seizure and of search upon the part of the belligerent power would remain the same. Theoretically that is true; but if we do the thing that will convince the belligerent powers that we are endeavoring to be fair with them, then the American flag will mean something. It will be some protection, and the belligerents will not seize and search an American vessel unless they have some reason to believe that she is violating the laws of neutrality; but if we pass this bill and notify the belligerents of Europe that we are fostering, encouraging, and inviting fraudulent and nominal transfers of a ship from one ownership to another, and if the world comes to believe that one of our corporations that has no real interest whatsoever in the vessel is yet the owner of the title under an act of this sort, then our flag will mean nothing. Every ship that bears the American flag will be looked upon with suspicion by all nations. Instead of our flag carrying with it some evidence, at least prima facie evidence, that we have not violated the laws of neutrality, it will, on the other hand, be prima facie evidence that the ship is sailing under a false color; that the flag is flying above a falsehood instead of above the truth, above dishonesty instead of honesty; and this belief throughout the world will lead to the search of every merchant ship over which the Stars and Stripes appear, and it will give rise to a severity of search and an insolence of search that otherwise would not be known.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Mr. President——

Mr. CUMMINS. Just a moment—I do not suggest that because I fear collision with a foreign power; I suggest it because I do not want the United States to give just offense, for whatever we do, whether our act is just or unjust, if it is assailed by a foreign power, we must defend it, and defend it with all our men and with all our treasure; and because the patriotism of every American would impel him to defend it right or wrong, we ought to provide some safeguard to prevent an incident for which we might be justly criticized. I yield to the Senator from Virginia.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Mr. President, I agree with the Senator from Iowa that in purchasing ships from belligerents the utmost care will be necessary; but I want to make the inquiry if offense could be given or suspicion be aroused except as to Germany? The other nations of Europe would not be likely, I think, to take any offense at dealings of that sort.

Mr. CUMMINS. On the contrary, Mr. President, while I am not skilled in diplomacy or in tracing the relations of the various nations to each other, it is my judgment that Great Britain would have more cause for complaint against us for the passage of this act than any other nation, unless it might be France.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

Mr. CUMMINS. I yield to the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I can not conceive of the situation being so serious as the Senator from Iowa seems to think. The great conflict which is unfortunately now raging in Europe has brought upon us a condition which is unfavorable to our commerce, and an emergency exists in this country with reference to taking care of our commerce. Anything that we may do which can in any sense bring us in a legitimate way the means to take care of our commerce and take care of our interests can in no sense be offensive to the neutrality laws and can not possibly be an offense to any other nation in the world. We are not seeking to interfere with their affairs at all, but we are seeking to gather to ourselves the means and the methods of taking care of our own commerce; and if we, as a Congress, deem this the wisest and the best way to take care of our commerce and provide for the existing emergency, what nation on the face of the earth can object to it?

Mr. CUMMINS. Does the Senator from Idaho think that we ought to violate the law of nations, which includes the laws of neutrality, because we might thereby for the moment help ourselves?

Mr. BORAH. No; but under this bill we will not violate any law of neutrality. The law of neutrality does not go to that extent.

Mr. CUMMINS. Let me see if it does not. Suppose that we were to pass a law that a German ship sailing into one of the ports of the United States should have the right upon application to take an American registry and use the American flag and such a transaction should occur and the ship should then sail out and be captured by Great Britain, is that ship violating the laws of neutrality?

Mr. BORAH. Yes; I think so; but we are making here a general provision for the registry of ships, and there is no presumption and no indication in the terms of the law that, so far as our act is concerned, it involves anything except perfectly valid transaction. Back of that stands the law of nations, to the effect that if indeed a transaction is fraudulent, whether or not we make any provision at all in regard to it, the ship may be seized; and there is no better safeguard and no surer guide to direct shipowners in the line of an honest transaction than the universal law of nations, that if the transaction is fraudulent the ship will be seized. That is an infinitely stronger safeguard than to require the mere transfer of a majority of stock which may be transferred back in a moment.

Mr. CUMMINS. I do not agree with the last statement, because I do not think the stock can be transferred back in a moment. Theoretically that would be possible, but practically it would never happen or rarely happen.

I return now to the former suggestion of the Senator, which is really pertinent and probably sound. I think the administration of international law through prize courts would be more drastic than any law that we could now enact. The amendment which I have offered does not go nearly to the length which the law of neutrality might require. I am simply endeavoring to put some provision in the law which will indicate to the world that we are acting in good faith; that we are not trying, through our Congress and through our administration, to enable either our citizens or foreign citizens to violate the obligation of neutrality.

I agree that we must depend, in the main, upon the enforcement of the law in the courts; but I am reluctant to see the great Government of the United States bid God-speed to the men who may engage in a conspiracy to violate the laws of neutrality and plunge the American Nation into the horrors of war; for, if I understand this bill aright, I put upon it just that construction. I think it is a letter of marque to those who have found it impossible to navigate their ships under the laws which have formerly controlled them to take refuge under the law of the United States and to lift the American flag, in the hope that our name, our prestige, and the reputation that we hold for honor and fair dealing will protect them in their unlawful enterprises.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I wish to say just a word, and only a word, on this matter, in reply to the Senator's suggestion.

The first suggestion which the Senator makes is with reference to the lines from 17 to 23, as I understand, upon page 4, and that is in regard to the proposition contained in these words:

Whenever, in the judgment of the President of the United States, the needs of foreign commerce may require, he is also hereby authorized to suspend by order, so far and for such length of time as he may deem desirable, the provisions of the law requiring survey, inspection, and measurement by officers of the United States of foreign-built vessels admitted to American registry under this act.

That I understand the Senator to regard as unfair to American ships, and so forth.

Mr. CUMMINS. I couple with that the first paragraph of section 2, which is of the same character.

Mr. BORAH (reading):

Whenever the President of the United States shall find that the number of available persons qualified under now existing laws and regulations of the United States to fill the respective positions of watch officers on vessels admitted to registry by this act is insufficient, he is authorized to suspend by order, so far and for such time as he may find to be necessary, the provisions of law prescribing that all the watch officers of vessels of the United States registered for foreign trade shall be citizens of the United States.

Mr. President, it will be observed, in the first place, that this says that "whenever, in the judgment of the President of the United States, the needs of foreign commerce may require, he is also hereby authorized to suspend by order, so far and for such length of time as he may deem desirable," these laws as to measurements, and so forth. Of course, this is an emergency. As a permanent proposition, I would be just as much opposed to that rule as the Senator; but if we are going to have any benefits from this law some condition must be therein provided for by which we can take advantage of the emergencies which may arise under it. Now, the President is limited in his action to the demands of foreign commerce, and when he deems it absolutely necessary and desirable he may do so to such extent as he deems proper and for the length of time that that controlling, impelling necessity exists. If you are going to leave anything open to be taken advantage of in case of emergency, anything to be taken care of with reference to conditions of which we can not know at this time, I do not know how you could do it in more guarded language. I do not fear that the President will suspend the law or permit this law to take effect under any other conditions than those of impelling necessity; and if there is that necessity I do not see why it should not be provided for. For that reason we are passing this law.

Now, Mr. President, just a word in regard to the second proposition. I do not say that this amendment is drawn, of course, to invite evasion; certainly not. It was drawn for a different reason, and that was to require the bona fide holding by American citizens of a majority of the stock of a corporation taking over one of these ships. The difficulty with which we are met on the threshold of the proposition is to secure anything like an observance of the intent or purpose which is contained in the amendment. The amendment provides that upon the registry there shall be at that time a holding of a majority of the stock by American citizens.

So far as the law of nations is concerned, and so far as the rights of belligerents are concerned, what is the difference whether they hold 49 per cent or 51 per cent? The corporation owns the vessel. The stockholders have no title in it at all. It is owned by an American citizen; by an American corporation. The mere fact that a majority of the stock is owned by American citizens would not, in my judgment, have any effect at all with reference to the law of neutrality or with reference to the question of interfering with the rights of belligerent powers.

If it were possible to enforce this provision from time to time and from day to day, if any method could be suggested by the Senator by which that could be made a practical proposition, the purpose and the object of the amendment could be accomplished, but no feasible plan has been suggested and none occurs to me by which the very thing the Senator desires to prevent could not be accomplished by a single step in advance of that which it is necessary to take now. He assumes that that would not be done; but why would it not be done if it was the original intent of the parties, as he must presume that it would be in the other instance, to make a formal transfer? If there is any inducement, if there is any reason for these ships to come in under cover to protect themselves, would they be retarded or impeded in accomplishing that purpose and realizing their design because it was necessary to take one step further and transfer this stock? We must assume that there will be some compelling or controlling reason for them to take advantage of this law; and if there was that reason, why would they hesitate for a moment to take the other step, which would be perfectly legitimate upon its face?

The stockholders of a corporation may be certain persons to-day and a perfectly legitimate transfer may be made to-morrow or a week from to-day or a month from to-day, and no possible reason in the world may exist for a challenge of the transfer.

The Senator has said that this amendment was discussed at length before the Senate. So far as this particular amendment was concerned, I do not understand that it was discussed at all. The other amendment, which went much further, was discussed; but this was offered and debated for but a moment, if at all, and was agreed to; and how to enforce it, how to make it effective, how to render it a substantial provision to accomplish the purposes for which the parties desired it to be agreed to was never discussed, and has not been suggested. There has not been a suggestion in the debate up to this time as to how this amendment could be made effective. The Senator does not himself suggest any method for making this amendment effective. It would hinder and retard in this emergency without accomplishing any permanent benefit whatever. The Senator argues at length and with great earnestness how the failure to adopt his amendment will involve us in war. That argument does not seem to me well founded, and I will not seek to meet it.

Mr. O'GORMAN. Mr. President, it was hoped that we might reach a final vote on the conference report to-day; but that does not seem to be practicable. I now ask unanimous consent that we vote on the pending motion not later than 12 o'clock on Monday next.

Mr. LIPPITT. There can be no amendments?

Mr. O'GORMAN. No amendments.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Gronna	Nelson	Simmons
Borah	Hollis	Norris	Smith, Ga.
Burton	Johnson	O'Gorman	Smoot
Chamberlain	Jones	Overman	Sterling
Clapp	Kern	Perkins	Stone
Clark, Wyo.	Lane	Pittman	Swanson
Clarke, Ark.	Lea, Tenn.	Poindexter	Thomas
Culberson	Lee, Md.	Pomerene	Thornton
Cummins	Lewis	Ransdell	Tillman
Fall	Lippitt	Saulsbury	Walsh
Gallinger	McCumber	Sheppard	West
Gore	Martin, Va.	Shields	Williams

The VICE PRESIDENT. Forty-eight Senators have answered to the roll call. There is not a quorum present. The Secretary will call the names of absent Senators.

The Secretary called the names of absent Senators, and Mr. BRADY, Mr. BRYAN, Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey, Mr. THOMPSON, Mr. VARDAMAN, and Mr. WHITE answered to their names when called.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Fifty-four Senators have answered to the roll call. There is a quorum present.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, anticipating the request that is to be made, and understanding that we are not to be in session to-morrow, I will ask the Senator from New York if he can not make it 2 o'clock, the bill to be taken up immediately upon assembling?

Mr. O'GORMAN. I have no objection.

Mr. GALLINGER. And that no Senator shall speak more than once. There will be no amendments.

Mr. O'GORMAN. I embody that in my request.

Mr. LIPPITT. The Senator means that no Senator shall speak more than 20 minutes in case anybody else wants to speak.

Mr. GALLINGER. Yes; certainly.

Mr. O'GORMAN. That we proceed to vote not later than 2 o'clock on next Monday, and that meanwhile no Senator shall occupy more than 20 minutes in addressing the Senate.

Mr. GALLINGER. If any other Senator desires to speak.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from New York asks unanimous consent for the following:

That from this time forward no Senator shall speak longer than 20 minutes upon the conference report if some other Senator desires to speak, and that not later than 2 o'clock on Monday next the vote shall be taken upon the question as to whether the conference report shall be adopted.

Mr. BORAH. Mr President, I understood that no Senator was to speak more than 20 minutes if some other Senator desired to speak. I do not know exactly how a Senator who was on the floor would know, unless some other Senator should go up and tell him that he would like him to quit.

Mr. GALLINGER. I think we can adjust that.

Mr. BORAH. I think it had better be limited to 20 minutes to a Senator.

Mr. GALLINGER. There is no objection to that on my part.

Mr. LIPPITT. I think there is no harm in the arrangement the way it is proposed. Certainly there could be no difficulty about a Senator getting information to the Senator on the floor that he would like to take his place. There are various ways of doing that.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is it understood that no Senator shall speak more than once?

Mr. GALLINGER. Yes.

Mr. O'GORMAN. And that no Senator shall speak more than once.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Let the Secretary state the proposed unanimous-consent agreement.

Mr. LIPPITT. I have not made any remarks on this subject, and I think I should like to occupy rather more than 20 minutes. I shall not want to make a long address, but I think I shall want to say something, and 20 minutes is a very short time. Various Senators have already occupied an hour or two. The distinguished Senator from Idaho has occupied a few minutes, and I can not see that there is any great objection to allowing a Senator to occupy more than 20 minutes, provided he is not depriving somebody else of the floor during that time.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, the Senator from Idaho has occupied perhaps 20 minutes altogether upon this bill.

Mr. LIPPITT. I have no doubt it has been very well occupied.

Mr. BORAH. Yes; I hope so, and I hope it will have an effect on the Senator from Rhode Island.

Mr. GALLINGER. And on the country. Let the agreement be stated.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It is in the handwriting of the Chair, and the Chair will read it:

It is agreed by unanimous consent that at not later than 2 o'clock on Monday, August 17, 1914, the Senate proceed to vote upon the adoption of the conference report on the bill H. R. 18202, and that hereafter no Senator shall speak more than once nor longer than 20 minutes upon the report should any other Senator desire to speak at the expiration of such 20 minutes.

Mr. SMOOT. From the statement made by the Senator from New Hampshire I take it that it has been virtually agreed that we are to adjourn over until Monday.

Mr. O'GORMAN. I understand that is the purpose.

Mr. SMOOT. I do not object to the unanimous-consent agreement, but I should like to ask the Senator from Indiana if it would not be agreeable to all to have a session to-morrow to take up the calendar under Rule VIII and consider bills to which there is no objection.

Mr. GALLINGER. Let us dispose of the unanimous-consent agreement first.

Mr. SMOOT. I have no objection to agreeing to that.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to this unanimous-consent agreement?

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I desire to ask a question. It is proposed to adjourn over until Monday. I am not informed, but I suppose there is some good reason why we should waste a day in this session, which we hope to draw to a close without unduly delaying the very necessary work that is before the Senate. I should like, before agreeing to any part of this program, to ascertain what reason there is for cutting out to-morrow as a legislative day.

Mr. KERN. There has been a pretty general desire expressed on the part of Senators, who are very tired and very much worn, to have a day's rest. Inquiry was made as to whether any Senator was prepared to go on with the unfinished business—the Clayton bill—to-morrow, and inquiry failed to develop the fact that anyone is so ready.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Then why can we not vote on it?

Mr. KERN. If we could secure a quorum, I would have no objection.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Why can we not obtain a quorum? This is a regular session of Congress. I do not see why we should not have a quorum to-morrow just as well as at any other time.

Mr. KERN. I have no objection to a session to-morrow for the purpose of calendar work. I think that would be a very wise arrangement.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the unanimous-consent agreement? The Chair hears none.

COTTON WAREHOUSE LICENSES.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I desire to ask unanimous consent out of order to introduce a bill. I think the character of the bill is one which justifies this request.

Mr. SMOOT. It is an emergency measure?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. It is. It is a bill which was prepared by Members of both the House and Senate in cooperation with the Agricultural Department looking toward the establishment of cotton warehouses licensed by the Agricultural Department. It is a very important and pressing measure, growing out of the war situation.

Mr. GALLINGER. That sounds familiar to me, but I have to go back a good many years to find the original author of it.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I do not know who originally offered it. I am perfectly willing to take the personal responsibility.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. BURTON. Mr. President, one minute. I understand it does not involve any expenditure of money by the Government unless, perhaps, for inspectors.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. That is all. There is a small cost provided in the bill.

Mr. BURTON. Not for furnishing warehouses or advancing money, or anything of that kind.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I would be glad to have the bill read. I am not asking for its present consideration, but for leave to introduce it. I do not ask to have the bill passed now.

Mr. BURTON. It is only to introduce it.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. That is all.

The bill (S. 6266) to authorize the Secretary of Agriculture to license cotton warehouses, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I ask that the bill may be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

A bill (S. 6266) to authorize the Secretary of Agriculture to license cotton warehouses, and for other purposes.

Be it enacted, etc., That this act shall be known by the short title of "United States cotton warehouse act."

SEC. 2. That the term "warehouse" as used in this act shall be deemed to mean every building, compress, ginhouse, and other structure in which any cotton is, or may be, stored or held for, or in the course of, interstate or foreign commerce.

SEC. 3. That the Secretary of Agriculture is authorized to investigate the storage, warehousing, and certification of cotton; upon application to him, to inspect warehouses or cause them to be inspected; at any time, with or without application to him, to inspect, or cause to be inspected, all warehouses licensed under this act; to determine whether warehouses for which licenses are applied for, or have been issued, under this act are suitable for the proper storage or holding of cotton; to classify warehouses in accordance with their location, surroundings, capacity, condition, and other qualities, and the kinds of licenses issued, or that may be issued, to them pursuant to this act; and to prescribe the duties of warehouses licensed under this act with respect to the care of cotton stored or held therein.

SEC. 4. That the Secretary of Agriculture is authorized, upon application to him by the owner or operator of a warehouse, to issue a license for the conduct of the same, subject to this act and such rules and regulations as may be made hereunder. Each license shall specify the date upon which it is to terminate, and, upon showing satisfactory to the Secretary of Agriculture, may, from time to time, be renewed, or extended, by a written instrument which shall specify the date of its termination.

SEC. 5. That applications may be made to the Secretary of Agriculture by the owner or operator of any warehouse licensed under this act for permission to designate the same as bonded under this act. No warehouse shall be so designated, and no name or description, conveying the impression that it is so bonded, shall be used until a bond, with such penalty, containing such conditions and with such security as the Secretary of Agriculture may require, shall have been given, and he shall have approved the same, nor unless the approval by the Secretary of such bond remains uncanceled and in full force and effect. Any person owning cotton stored in a warehouse bonded under this act, or owning a receipt for cotton therein issued under this act, shall be entitled, in an action upon the bond brought in any court of the United States having jurisdiction of the same, to recover all damages he may have sustained in respect to such cotton or receipt by reason of either the negligence or the misconduct of the owner or operator of the warehouse or of his agents or servants.

SEC. 6. That the Secretary of Agriculture may, upon presentation to him of satisfactory proof of competency, issue to any person a license to grade or classify cotton, and to certificate the grade or class thereof, under such rules and regulations as may be made pursuant to this act.

SEC. 7. That for all cotton stored or held by a warehouse licensed under this act original receipts, serially numbered, shall be issued by the owner or operator thereof, signed by himself or by his duly authorized agent. No such receipt shall be issued except for cotton actually stored or held in the warehouse at the time of the issuance thereof. No duplicate or copy of an original receipt shall be issued unless the same be plainly and conspicuously marked "duplicate" or "copy," as the case may be, upon the face thereof. While an original receipt, or any duplicate or copy thereof, issued under this act is outstanding, and uncanceled by the owner or operator of the warehouse issuing the same, no other or further receipt shall be issued for the cotton, except that in the case of lost or destroyed receipts new receipts may be issued upon the giving of satisfactory security in compliance with the rules and regulations made pursuant to this act. Any receipt issued in lieu of an original shall be upon the same terms and subject to such conditions as are prescribed by this act for such original receipt. Each original receipt shall include a true statement of the date and place of its issuance, its serial number, the location of the warehouse in which the cotton is stored or held, the weight of the cotton at the time of the issuance of the receipt, a description of the bales or packages by marks, numbers, or other means of identification, the amount or rate of storage charges, if any, which have accrued or are to accrue within six months from the date of the issuance of the receipt, and constitute a lien on the cotton which has not been waived by the warehouseman, and when payable, and the amount and period of insurance, if any, on the cotton. Each such receipt shall include statements that it is issued subject to this act and that no other receipt for the cotton described therein or any part thereof is outstanding and, in addition to complying with this section, shall contain such terms and conditions, not inconsistent with the laws of the respective States in which issued, as the Secretary of Agriculture may require for carrying out the purposes of this act. Receipts may run to bearer, or to a specified holder, or to a specified holder or his assigns. The owner of an original receipt issued pursuant to this act shall be entitled, upon presentation thereof, to receive the identical cotton described therein.

SEC. 8. That each warehouse licensed under this act, whether bonded or not, shall keep correct records of all cotton stored or held therein and withdrawn therefrom, of all original warehouse receipts, and the duplicates or copies of the same, issued by the owner or operator of the warehouse, and of the receipts returned to and canceled by the owner or operator thereof, shall make reports to the Secretary of Agriculture, in such form and at such times as he may require, and shall be conducted and operated in all other respects in compliance with this act and the rules and regulations made hereunder.

SEC. 9. That any warehouse receipt or certificate of the grade or class of cotton issued under this act may specify the grade or class of the cotton covered thereby in accordance with the official cotton standards of the United States, as the same may be fixed and promulgated under authority of law from time to time by the Secretary of Agriculture, or in accordance with any other standard. If such receipts and certificates state the grade or class, they shall show the standard in accordance with which the cotton has been graded or classified.

SEC. 10. That the Secretary of Agriculture is authorized to cause inspections and examinations to be made of any cotton which, in any warehouse receipt or certificate issued pursuant to this act, has been certified or represented to conform to any grade or class established in the official cotton standards of the United States and to ascertain whether the cotton is in fact of the specified grade or class. Whenever, after opportunity for hearing has been afforded to the owner of the cotton involved and the licensee concerned, it is determined by the Secretary that any such cotton has been incorrectly certified or represented to conform to a specified grade or class of the official cotton standards of the United States, he may publish his findings.

SEC. 11. That the Secretary of Agriculture may suspend or revoke any license issued, and may cancel his approval of any bond given, under this act for any violation of, or failure to comply with, any provision of this act or of the rules and regulations made hereunder. Any license may be suspended or revoked, after opportunity for hearing has been afforded to the licensee concerned, upon the ground that unreasonable or exorbitant charges have been made for services rendered.

SEC. 12. That the Secretary of Agriculture, from time to time, shall publish the results of investigations made under this act, the names and locations of warehouses licensed and bonded, and the names and addresses of persons licensed under this act, and lists of all licenses suspended or revoked and of all bonds canceled hereunder.

SEC. 13. That the Secretary of Agriculture is authorized, through officials, employees, or agents of the Department of Agriculture designated by him, to examine all books, records, papers, and accounts of warehouses licensed under this act and of the owners or operators of such warehouses relating thereto.

SEC. 14. That the Secretary of Agriculture shall, from time to time, make such rules and regulations as he may deem necessary for the efficient execution of the provisions of this act.

SEC. 15. That there is hereby appropriated, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $50,000, available until expended, for the expenses of carrying into effect the provisions of this act, including the payment of such rent and the employment of such persons and means as the Secretary of Agriculture may deem necessary in the city of Washington and elsewhere. He is authorized, in his discretion, to call upon qualified persons not regularly in the service of the United States for temporary assistance in carrying out the purposes of this act and out of the moneys appropriated by this act to pay the salaries and expenses thereof.

AMELIA ERICKSON.

Mr. WILLIAMS, from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, to which was referred Senate resolution 440, submitted by Mr. STERLING yesterday, reported it without amendment, and it was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to pay to Amelia Erickson, widow of John L. Erickson, late a messenger to Senator STERLING, a sum equal to six months' salary at the rate he was receiving by law at the time of his death, said sum to be considered as in lieu of funeral expenses and other allowances.

PORT OF PEMBINA, N. DAK.

Mr. SIMMONS. I ask unanimous consent to report favorably a bill from the Committee on Finance in which the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. MCCUMBER] is very much interested, and I call his attention to it.

I am directed by the Committee on Finance, to which was referred the bill (S. 5449) to make Pembina, N. Dak., a port through which merchandise may be imported for transportation without appraisement, to report it favorably without amendment, and I submit a report (No. 742) thereon.

Mr. MCCUMBER. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill.

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It extends the privilege of the first section of the act approved June 10, 1880, governing the immediate transportation of dutiable merchandise without appraisement to the port of Pembina, N. Dak.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

RATES ON SUGAR.

Mr. RANSDELL. In view of the very rapid increase in the price of food products I ask unanimous consent to print in the RECORD two very interesting letters from Mr. Paul J. Christian, for the American Cane Growers' Association. They contain very valuable information, which I think will be read with great interest by Senators. I ask that they be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the letters were ordered to be printed in the RECORD as follows:

AMERICAN CANE GROWERS' ASSOCIATION OF UNITED STATES,
Washington, D. C., August 8, 1914.

Hon. JOS. E. RANSDELL,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR: My letter of July 20 was accompanied by two charts showing the range of raw and refined sugar on the wholesale New York market from June 5, 1913, to July 16, 1914, inclusive.

Your attention was called to the action of the refiners in advancing the price of their highest price brand, "Crystal Dominoes," 25 cents a hundred pounds in the last six weeks of the period covered by the charts. In citing this advance the statement was made that it was not warranted by conditions in the raw sugar market.

Developments in Europe during the past week have resulted in a sensational advance in both raw and refined sugar. Prices now promise to soar far above the level of 1911, when the shortage of the European beet crop was followed by a world-wide advance in prices.

But the refiners should not be allowed to take advantage of the war in Europe to deceive Congress or the consuming public regarding their course in advancing prices. Their record in this connection should be made plain to the people.

They broke their promise, at the same time issuing misleading statements that the consumers were receiving the full benefit of the 25 per cent cut in the tariff on raw sugar. This was before the slightest cloud had appeared upon the horizon of European politics.

As stated in the cited case of Crystal Dominoes, the refiners began the advance during the week of May 21-28, a full month before the Austrian Archduke Ferdinand was assassinated at Sarajero, on June 28. All of the advances I cited occurred prior to July 16, but Austria did not send her ultimatum to Servia until a week after that date, July 23. Consequently the refiners can not plead the European trouble for breaking their promise.

Should a readjustment of the import duties be deemed necessary by reason of the European war, these facts should be brought to the attention of Congress in considering the sugar schedule.

Not only did the Sugar Refining Trust and its allies fail to live up to its promise to give the consumers the full benefit of the tariff cut on raw sugar, but before the war in Europe afforded them the slightest excuse they were cleaning up millions of dollars at the expense of the domestic producers.

The Department of Agriculture estimates the last Louisiana crop at 292,000 short tons. Approximately two-thirds of that crop was marketed in New Orleans, where there was but one purchaser, the Refining Trust, for practically the entire lot.

Of the 202,000 tons received at New Orleans, 187,000 tons arrived between November 1, 1913, and January 29, 1914, and had to be sacrificed by the planters at prices ranging from 3.70 to 3.23 cents a pound, less the fictitious freight between New Orleans and New York, which the trust has for years extorted from the Louisiana producers. Louisiana did not suffer alone in marketing the last crop at ruinous prices. The same treatment was meted out to Porto Rico and to Hawaii by the refiners, and yet it was this cheap sugar, bought at figures that spelled the ruin of the domestic industry as a result of the tariff cut, upon which the greedy refining combine has been clearing millions of profits both prior to and since the opening of the war in Europe.

This is but a repetition of the course they followed in 1911, when the high price of sugar became such a burden to the consuming masses. Speaking of the policy they pursued at that time, the United States Department of Labor says in its publication, "Sugar Prices from Refiner to Consumer" (p. 6):

"When raw sugar reached the extremely high prices in 1911 the refiners simply did not buy until they had exhausted the large stocks laid in at much lower prices, and in August, 1911, while the average market price for the month for 96° centrifugal sugar was 4.88 cents per pound, the average actual cost price of 96° centrifugal sugar melted by one of the large refineries was close to 4 cents per pound."

There is every promise that the refiners will clean up much larger profits in 1914 than in 1911, and it is obvious that this will not be entirely due to the European war.

Very respectfully,

PAUL J. CHRISTIAN,
For the American Cane Growers' Association.

AMERICAN CANE GROWERS' ASSOCIATION OF UNITED STATES,
Washington, D. C., July 20, 1914.

Hon. JOS. E. RANSDELL,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR: Under date of June 17, 1914, Frank C. Lowry, of the Federal Sugar Refining Co., and spokesman of the sugar-refining industry, issued a circular letter to the Members of Congress in which he said:

"DEAR SIRS: Three months operation under the new tariff show that the consumer is receiving all the benefit of the 25 per cent reduction in the duty on sugar. Since the new rates went into effect refiners' selling price has averaged 3.819 cents per pound, as compared with an average price for the last 10 years of 4.85 cents per pound."

In refutation of the statement that "the consumer is receiving all the benefit of the 25 per cent reduction in the duty on sugar," I desire to submit the following data:

First. A statement compiled from Willett & Gray's Weekly Statistical Sugar Trade Journal, showing the New York wholesale price of the leading brands of refined sugar on July 16, 1914, as reported in the last issue, compared with the price for the same grades quoted October 9, 1913, as reported in the first issue of the same publication following the passage of the tariff act, and in which issue the news was announced to the sugar trade that President Wilson had signed the Underwood-Simmons bill:

Wholesale New York prices.

Second. The statements prepared by the United States Department of Commerce, showing that the United States Treasury has been losing more than $2,000,000 a month as a result of the new import rates on sugar. They are as follows:

	New rates.	Old rates.	Difference.
March	$7,172,850.33	$9,652,208.95	$2,479,358.62
April	5,712,113.74	7,663,312.65	1,951,198.91

June	6,863,661.07	9,199,060.92	2,335,999.85
Total	25,248,440.59	33,885,857.47	8,637,416.88

Third. Excerpts taken from the advertising columns of the daily papers of almost every State, now on file in the Library of Congress. These advertisements show the retail price of sugar.

This is the fairest way of ascertaining how the consumer has actually fared. The merchants paid for the newspaper space carrying these advertisements. The prices were announced as "bargains," and in many cases sugar was offered at cost in order to stimulate the sale of other goods.

Wherever it has been possible to do so corresponding prices for a year ago have been given from the papers on file in the library.

When Mr. Lowry began the refiners' campaign of publicity to destroy the tariff on American-grown raw sugar he said in the first of his long series of letters:

"There is absolutely no question but that the consumer will get all the benefit from 'free sugar' or a reduction in the tariff rate on raw sugar, with a corresponding reduction in the rate on refined sugar."

This statement was repeated on page 2 of the publication entitled "Our High Tariff on Sugar From the Consumers' Standpoint," issued by the Federal Sugar Refining Co., with which Congress was flooded during the consideration of the sugar schedule.

You can judge from the above three exhibits whether "the consumer is receiving all the benefit of the 25 per cent reduction in the duty," also whether there has been "a corresponding reduction in the rate on refined sugar."

In the article I have quoted from Mr. Lowry, in which he promised on behalf of the refiners the reduction to the consumer, he continued:

"Those in the sugar trade fully recognize this [a reduction in refined following a reduced tariff]. It is also shown by the domestic producer's anxiety. He well knows that a reduced tariff rate means that he will have to sell his product at a lower price. If it were not so, he would not be working so hard to have the present rate maintained, but in the hope of confusing the issue he does a lot of talking about it being useless to reduce the rate because the 'consumer will not get the benefit,' knowing that this is 'rot.'"

I now wish to call your attention to one of the deceitful practices followed by the refiners to create free-sugar sentiment while the tariff was undergoing revision and continued by them "to save their face" for a short time thereafter. Sugar was marked down so low that it was sold at an actual loss. After their purpose was accomplished and public interest began to subside, they steadily advanced prices to make up their losses, and now the consumer, who was deceived for a short period, "is paying the fiddler." This is clearly illustrated by the advertisements of retail stores appearing in the Washington (D. C.) newspapers. They are easily accessible and are typical of the prices advertised throughout the United States during the corresponding period:

September 11, 1913: Atlantic & Pacific Tea Co., sugar 3½ cents per pound—tariff bill still pending. (From the Evening Star.)

October 20, 1913: Atlantic & Pacific Tea Co., sugar 3.3 cents per pound—new sugar schedule not yet operative. (From the Evening Star.)

April 2, 1914: Old Dutch Market, sugar 3.8 cents per pound—new duty effective. (From the Evening Star.)

April 19, 1914: Old Dutch Market, sugar 4 cents per pound—sugar going up. (From the Washington Times.)

June 15, 1914: Old Dutch Market, sugar 4½ cents per pound—still going up. (From the Washington Post.)

The campaign carried on by the refiners last winter to depress the price of raw sugar resulted in that commodity being depressed to the lowest point on record. Many producers were compelled to sell at less than the cost of production. Thousands of farmers were irretrievably ruined. Their protest that they were being sacrificed without warning and that no one would benefit from their ruin but the greedy Refining Trust was received as "rot."

During that period of depression the Journal of Commerce on January 7 last announced that the Federal Sugar Refining Co. had suspended the quarterly dividends of its common stock, but quoted President Spreckels as saying that the dividends would be resumed "as soon as the normal price between raw and refined sugar is resumed."

On June 24, 1914, the same paper had the following interesting announcement:

"While a great many manufacturers and merchants are complaining of business depression, and are ascribing it in part to the reduction of the tariff, Claus A. Spreckels, president of the Federal Sugar Refining Co., declares that the sugar business is booming as a result of the tariff changes, which, he says, has had the effect of reducing the price to the consumer, and has resulted in a large increase in the consumption of sugar.

"In an interview with a representative of the Journal of Commerce yesterday Mr. Spreckels said that the consumption of sugar during the past three and a half months, since the tariff reduction went into effect, had increased about 20 per cent, compared with the same period of 1913."

In view of all the facts there is small wonder that Mr. Spreckels should proclaim that: "The sugar business is booming."

For years the American public has been "gulled" as to the price it was paying for sugar by having the New York wholesale price of raw and granulated "net cash" sugar quoted as an index. These prices are given in chart No. 2 for the same period covered by the refined sugar prices set forth in chart 1.

Chart No. 1, giving the range of prices of refined sugar, shows how the warning of the domestic producers of raw sugar, that the Refining Trust would absorb for its own advantage any reduction in the tariff, has been fulfilled. By way of illustration refer to Crystal Dominoes in 2 pound and 5-pound cartons, the highest-priced product of the refiners, now selling at 6.75 cents and 7.25 cents per pound, respectively. There was no condition in the sugar market early in June to cause that already high-priced sugar to be advanced. Raw sugar had just declined from 3.39 on May 28 to 3.32 on June 4, during which period granulated had remained stationary. After remaining at 3.32 for one week raws went back to the 3.39 level, as shown by the report of June 18, but immediately declined again to the 3.32 level, as reported June 25; it was carried at that same price the next week of July 2; it declined on July 9 to 3.26, and is again repeated at the latter figure in the issue of July 16.

Notwithstanding this depression in the raw market the refiners ran their costly Crystal Dominoes up 10 cents a hundred between May 21 and 28; again advanced them 10 cents higher between June 11 and 18, and put up the price for a third time between July 9 and 16 by a further advance of 5 cents, a total of 25 cents a hundred. And Willett & Gray announced that further advances may be expected.

When the American farmers, whose industry has now been ruined, and who knew from years of experience what to expect of the Sugar Trust promises, predicted that this thing would happen, their warnings were pronounced "rot" by the refiners, and Congress chose to believe the refiners.

Whole communities that were prosperous have been reduced to actual poverty and distress; a great agricultural industry of more than a century's development and growth has been wiped out over night; the price of sugar has not only not been cheapened but actually increased to the customer; the Treasury of the United States is losing more than $2,000,000 a month, and that huge sum has been diverted into the coffers of the meanest and most criminal of all the predatory trusts that have preyed upon the public.

In your speech delivered on the floor of the Senate on June 2 last year you quoted the predecessor of the present Attorney General of the United States as having denounced the Sugar Refining Trust in his annual report as "guilty of unparalleled depravity." There was no theft or depravity too low or too mean for it to stoop to. It "monkeyed with the meter" and stole the water from the public mains with which it refined the sugar; it bribed and corrupted United States employees on the docks; it put secret springs in the Government scales on which the imported cargoes were weighed so that it could steal a pound or two on each sack; it secured secret railroad rebates, and in numberless other ways enriched itself at the expense of the American farmer, the American consumer, and the United States Treasury. In your speech you pointed out that they had been compelled to hand back to the Government about $4,000,000 of their stealings.

Many Members of Congress hesitated long before agreeing to support the new sugar legislation. They realized it marked the destruction of a great agricultural industry, and would not have lent their aid to such a policy unless they felt that they were aiding a much greater number of Americans by materially reducing the price of sugar. Surely these men will not consent to the continuation of a policy that works solely to the benefit of the Sugar Trust. Already the refiners have broken their word with Congress, as I have shown. But the worst is still to come.

Willett & Gray, in the issue of July 16, says:

"The forecast that the next change in refined, when it came, would be an advance has been verified during the week. * * * No immediate further advance is looked for, but eventually the next change when it comes will be an advance, so buyers can carry liberal stocks with confidence during the hot season.

"All refiners can ship promptly while the raw sugar supplies are so abundant.

"We advise carrying full supplies."

With their only competitors, the domestic producers, practically exterminated; with the pie-crust promise of cheaper sugar broken and prices already back at the old level and going higher; with more than $2,000,000 a month diverted from the Public Treasury into the trust treasury, it is easy to understand why the refiners are so well satisfied.

Very respectfully,

PAUL J. CHRISTIAN,
For the American Cane Growers' Association.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by J. C. South, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House disagrees to the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 1055) for the relief of T. S. Williams, asks a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. POU, Mr. STEPHENS of Mississippi, and Mr. SCOTT managers at the conference on the part of the House.

The message also announced that the House agrees to the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 14685) to satisfy certain claims against the Government arising under the Navy Department.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

The message further announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the enrolled bill (S. 1644) for the relief of May Stanley, and it was thereupon signed by the Vice President.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming presented petitions of sundry citizens of Burns and Orin, in the State of Wyoming, praying for national prohibition, which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. BRANDEGEE presented a memorial of the Woman's Home Missionary Society of the Methodist Episcopal Church of Stafford Springs, Conn., remonstrating against the enactment of legislation to facilitate the use of square No. 673, in the city of Washington, D. C., for storage-warehouse purposes, which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. SHIVELY presented the petitions of H. E. Leech, T. H. Eaton, O. H. Monger, and 125 other citizens of Greenfield, Ind., praying for the enactment of legislation to provide for recognition of Dr. Cook's polar efforts, which were referred to the Committee on the Library.

He also presented a petition of the Common Council of Muncie, Ind. praying for the enactment of legislation to provide pensions for civil-service employees, which was referred to the Committee on Civil Service and Retrenchment.

Mr. NELSON presented memorials of sundry citizens of St. Paul and Minneapolis, in the State of Minnesota, remonstrating against national prohibition, which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming (for Mr. WARREN) presented a petition of sundry citizens of Orin, Wyo., praying for national prohibition, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. BRANDEGEE (for Mr. OLIVER) presented a petition of sundry citizens of Pittsburgh, Pa., praying for national prohibition, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also (for Mr. OLIVER) presented a petition of Local Union No. 250, United Mine Workers of America, of Lattimer, Pa., praying for the passage of the so-called Clayton antitrust bill, which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also (for Mr. OLIVER) presented petitions of the First Reformed Church of Salina, Pa.; the Reformed Church of Apollo, Pa.; the Bell Point Union Sunday School, of Apollo, Pa.; and of sundry citizens of Pennsylvania, praying for the adoption of an amendment to the Constitution to prohibit polygamy, which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. BRYAN, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 6609) for the relief of Arthur E. Rump, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 744) thereon.

He also, from the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 11686) to provide that the United States shall in certain cases aid the States and civil subdivisions thereof in the construction and maintenance of rural post roads, reported it with an amendment and submitted a report (No. 743) thereon.

Mr. SWANSON, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to which was referred the bill (S. 4256) to provide for the acquisition of a site and the erection of a public building thereon at Tonopah, Nev., reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 745) thereon.

He also, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to which was referred the bill (S. 3561) to appoint Frederick H. Lemly, a passed assistant paymaster on the active list of the United States Navy, reported it without amendment.

BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION INTRODUCED.

Bills and a joint resolution were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. SHIVELY:

A bill (S. 6263) granting an increase of pension to Luther Curtis; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. MARTIN of Virginia:

A bill (S. 6264) granting an increase of pension to Oliver J. Johnson; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. VARDAMAN:

A bill (S. 6265) to establish an electric mail between cities and towns of the United States; to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

By Mr. GRONNA:

A bill (S. 6267) to provide a headstone for the grave of Scarlet Crow; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

By Mr. POINDEXTER:

A bill (S. 6268) providing for relief of settlers on unsurveyed railroad lands; to the Committee on Public Lands.

A bill (S. 6269) providing an appropriation to equip and put in the field wire-drag parties for surveying the navigable waters of the Alaskan coast; to the Committee on Appropriations.

By Mr. SHEPPARD:

A bill (S. 6270) granting to rural mail carriers December 25 as a legal holiday; to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

A joint resolution (S. J. Res. 176) for control and distribution of the flood waters of the Rio Grande; to the Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation of Arid Lands.

T. S. WILLIAMS.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives disagreeing to the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 1955) for the relief of T. S. Williams, and requesting a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. BRYAN. I move that the Senate insist upon its amendment and agree to the conference asked for by the House, the conferees on the part of the Senate to be appointed by the Chair.

The motion was agreed to; and the Vice President appointed Mr. BRYAN, Mr. LEE of Maryland, and Mr. NORRIS conferees on the part of the Senate.

RECESS—THE CALENDAR.

Mr. SMOOT. I ask unanimous consent that the Senate now take a recess until 11 o'clock to-morrow, and that on to-morrow we consider the calendar under Rule VIII, and consider only bills to which there is no objection.

Mr. GALLINGER. And no other business to be transacted.

Mr. SMOOT. And no other business to be attended to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Utah asks unanimous consent that the Senate take a recess until 11 o'clock to-morrow, at which time the calendar under Rule VIII is to be taken up, only unobjected bills to be considered.

Mr. SMOOT. And no other business to be transacted.

The VICE PRESIDENT. And no other business to be transacted.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Reserving the right to object, I wish the Senator would put the request in a different form. We have been going on and neglecting the calendar except where unanimous consent was given. Unanimous consent is not given except for insignificant measures. There are upon the calendar several very important bills, amongst others the bill to regulate the sale of opium and cocaine, and all that sort of thing.

Mr. SMOOT. There is no objection to considering that bill.

Mr. WILLIAMS. It has been objected to every time. It has been called again and again, and some one has objected to its consideration.

Mr. SMOOT. The last time the bill was before the Senate we spent an hour and a half upon it, and it was laid aside because of some amendments that were not prepared and which could not be offered at that time.

Mr. WILLIAMS. We had it before the Senate once and we discussed it for quite a while, and after that whenever there was an opportunity to bring it up, whenever it was reached upon the calendar, it was objected to and passed over.

Mr. THOMAS. The Senator is mistaken. We called it up one night when the calendar was before the Senate for consideration and it was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and then by agreement it was laid over for the printing of the new amendments. It is now before the Senate with those amendments for further consideration.

Mr. WILLIAMS. It might be objected to when it comes up. I was not present at the night session of which the Senator from Colorado tells me. I wish the Senator from Utah would modify his request to this extent, that bills which have already been considered and laid temporarily aside when reached shall be considered.

Mr. SMOOT. If I did that, on the first bill which came up the yeas and nays would be perhaps demanded, and there might be no quorum, and the whole day would be lost. I have had no other object in view than to clear the calendar of bills to which there is no objection.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The bills to which there is no objection are the most insignificant bills that come before the Senate.

I shall not object to the request, because I do not want to stand in the way of Senators' individual bills, but this is just a system of letting the private bills of Senators, which are never objected to, go through while important public measures remain upon the calendar.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Utah?

Mr. POINDEXTER. I should like to hear the request stated.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It is a request upon the part of the Senator from Utah that the Senate take a recess until 11 o'clock to-morrow, at which time the Senate will proceed to the consideration of unobjected bills upon the calendar under Rule VIII, and that the Senate shall do no other business to-morrow.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I do not think I will object to the request, but I agree with the Senator from Mississippi that what we ought to do is to take up the calendar regularly under the rule. However, I will not object.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

The Senate thereupon (at 5 o'clock and 15 minutes p. m., Friday, August 14, 1914) took a recess until to-morrow, Saturday, August 15, 1914, at 11 o'clock a. m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, August 14, 1914.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

We bless Thee, infinite spirit, our heavenly Father, that under the dispensation of Thy providence the world moves, and always to a definite purpose. In spite of the terrible calamities often visited upon Thy children on land and on sea, in spite of the appalling war which now absorbs the interests of the world and threatens destruction to life and home, out of it all shall come larger life and a betterment of conditions for all mankind: for God lives and reigns, and nothing shall thwart His plans. So we believe; so we hope and pray; for Thine is the kingdom, and the power, and the glory forever. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

REGISTRY OF FOREIGN-BUILT VESSELS.

Mr. ALEXANDER, from the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries, presented, for printing under the rule, the conference report and accompanying statement on the bill (H. R. 18202) to provide for the admission of foreign-built ships to American registry for the foreign trade, and for other purposes.

The conference report and accompanying statement are as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT (NO. 1087).

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 18202) to provide for the admission of foreign-built ships to American registry for the foreign trade, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate and agree to the same with the following amendment: In lieu of the matter proposed by the Senate insert the following:

"That section 4132 of the Revised Statutes of the United States as amended by the act entitled 'An act to provide for the opening, maintenance, protection, and operation of the Panama Canal and the sanitation and government of the Canal Zone,' approved August 24, 1912, is hereby amended so that said section as amended shall read as follows:

"'SEC. 4132. Vessels built within the United States and belonging wholly to citizens thereof; and vessels which may be captured in war by citizens of the United States and lawfully condemned as prize, or which may be adjudged to be forfeited for a breach of the laws of the United States; and seagoing vessels, whether steam or sail, which have been certified by the Steamboat-Inspection Service as safe to carry dry and perishable cargo, wherever built, which are to engage only in trade with foreign countries or with the Philippine Islands and the islands of Guam and Tutuila, being wholly owned by citizens of the United States or corporations organized and chartered under the laws of the United States or of any State thereof, the president and managing directors of which shall be citizens of the United States, and no others, may be registered as directed in this title. Foreign-built vessels may engage in the coastwise trade if registered pursuant to the provisions of this act within two years from its passage: Provided, That such vessels so admitted under the provisions of this section may contract with the Postmaster General under the act of March 3, 1891, entitled "An act to provide for ocean mail service between the United States and foreign ports, and to promote commerce," so long as such vessels shall in all respects comply with the provisions and requirements of said act.'

"SEC. 2. Whenever the President of the United States shall find that the number of available persons qualified under now existing laws and regulations of the United States to fill the respective positions of watch officers on vessels admitted to registry by this act is insufficient, he is authorized to suspend by order, so far and for such time as he may find to be necessary, the provisions of law prescribing that all the watch officers of vessels of the United States registered for foreign trade shall be citizens of the United States.

"Whenever, in the judgment of the President of the United States, the needs of foreign commerce may require, he is also hereby authorized to suspend by order, so far and for such length of time as he may deem desirable, the provisions of the law requiring survey, inspection, and measurement by officers of the United States of foreign-built vessels admitted to American registry under this act.

"SEC. 3. With the consent of the President and during the continuance of hostilities in Europe, any ship chartered by the American Red Cross for relief purposes shall be admitted to American registry under the provisions of this act and shall be entitled to carry the American flag. And in the operation of any such ship the President is authorized to suspend the laws requiring American officers, if such officers are not readily available.

"SEC. 4. This act shall take effect immediately."

STATEMENT.

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 18202) to provide for the admission of foreign-built ships to American registry for the foreign trade, and for other purposes, submit the following written statement explaining the effect of the action agreed on:

The provision of section 1 of the Senate amendment "that foreign-built vessels registered pursuant to the act shall not engage in the coastwise trade" is stricken out and the following provision is inserted in lieu thereof: "Foreign-built vessels may engage in the coastwise trade if registered pursuant to the provisions of this act within two years from its passage."

The effect of the provision agreed to by the conferees will be, first, to admit foreign-built vessels to American registry for the foreign trade if wholly owned by citizens of the United States or corporations organized and chartered under the laws of the United States, or of any State thereof, the president and managing directors of which shall be citizens of the United States, without any limitation as to time within which the vessels are admitted to American registry, and without limitation as to the age of the vessels, provided the vessels have been certified by the Steamboat-Inspection Service as safe to carry dry and perishable cargo; and second, to admit foreign-built vessels, the ownership and seaworthiness of which is as above provided, to American registry for the coastwise trade, as well as the foreign trade, if such vessels are registered within two years after the passage of the act.

The provision of section 1 of the Senate amendment amending section 4132 of the Revised Statutes as amended by section 5 of the Panama Canal act relating to foreign-built yachts, pleasure boats, or vessels not used or not intended to be used for trade, is struck out for the reason that it was repealed by the provisions of the tariff act of 1913.

The third paragraph of section 2 of the Senate amendment, which provides that the President of the United States and Secretary of the Navy may, under certain conditions named, direct the navy yards with their equipment to be used for the purpose of repairing merchant vessels now or hereafter registered under the American flag, was stricken out by the conferees. The effect will be to authorize and permit such repairs to be made only in privately owned yards.

The conferees struck out section 3 of the Senate amendment for the reason that the subject matter is disposed of in section 1, as modified by the conferees, a detailed explanation of which has been hereinbefore given.

The conferees struck out section 5 of the Senate amendment, which provides that naval officers, active and retired, and men serving and employed in the Navy of the United States, may, upon application to the Secretary of the Navy, accept temporary service upon vessels admitted to registry under the provisions of the Senate amendment.

The effect of striking out this provision will be to require such vessels to be officered as provided in the first paragraph of section 2 of the bill, or as provided by existing law, and to be manned as provided by existing law.

Except as herein mentioned, the Senate amendment is agreed to by the conferees.

RISE IN PRICES OF COMMODITIES.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to have read at the Clerk's desk a letter from the Secretary of Commerce on certain resolutions introduced touching the sudden rise of prices of commodities.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. ADAMSON] asks unanimous consent to have read from the Clerk's desk a letter from the Secretary of Commerce on the sudden rise of prices of food products.

Mr. ADAMSON. Pending that, Mr. Speaker, I wish to state that it has not been practicable to have a meeting of the committee. I have no motion myself to make at this time, but I think the letter ought to be read for the benefit of the House.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF COMMERCE,
OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
Washington, August 13, 1914.

Hon. WILLIAM C. ADAMSON,
Chairman Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SIR: I have before me copies of House resolutions 489, 318, and 590, with your request for the views of the department concerning the same. It will be a pleasure to cause a searching examination to be made into the increases in prices of commodities which are mentioned in various resolutions, to determine whether they have been arbitrarily and unnecessarily advanced, and whether artificial or monopolistic methods have been used in that connection. The department lacks, however, both the staff and the funds requisite to make an investigation of this character, and the sum of $10,000, mentioned in resolution 318, would be both necessary and sufficient. Authority should be given to employ special agents for the work.

I respectfully suggest for your consideration whether the matter could not be more efficiently handled by the Department of Agriculture, which has, in its Bureau of Markets, a force particularly well informed upon such subjects.

Possibly I may interpret the request of your committee as justifying a statement of what the situation seems to be. The crop of wheat is the largest ever grown, and there is at the moment some congestion at export points and a consequent delay in shipping it abroad. The crops of other cereals are, I think, not unusually large—in some cases quite otherwise. In shipping these there is also some temporary congested condition. Two other facts need, however, consideration in this connection. The first is that the crops of other countries are not large and the armies engaged in conflict not only draw men from agriculture and industry but add very largely to the demand for grain, through the excessive consumption and destruction incident to war. Europe therefore is not only short in her supply, but demands more than usual, and is likely to continue so doing for some time. These conditions normally tend to enhance prices. In the second place, the existing stoppage of transit is not likely to continue long; indeed, both from private and official sources, I am advised that the interruption is already passing away, and both transit and exchange are assuming a more normal condition. Certain of the combatant nations are dependent upon others for their supply of food and their supply of materials to operate their industries, and this dependence is more real than usual, because of the increased demand for food and the increased call upon their industries, arising from the war itself. Consequently it is vital to them that they should have the ocean free, and should maintain its freedom at any cost, merely because their commercial, and to a very large degree their physical, existence depends upon it. I think therefore it may be considered more than probable that the embargo will soon cease, the ordinary processes of trade will be reopened, and that ordinary economic influences will come into operation. This may mean, in the case of grains, where our own supply is not exceptionally large and the foreign supply is short and the foreign demand is large, that prices will normally rise. War prices are commonly high prices, and the present is no exception.

It would be in the highest degree wrong, however, to have this occasion seized as a means of exceptional personal or private profit by speculators or by combinations, and in so far as the powers of this department can be used to determine if such methods exist, and to expose them where they may be found to exist, I shall be very glad, if provided with the necessary funds, to undertake the work.

Very truly, yours,

WILLIAM C. REDFIELD, Secretary.

Mr. FARR rose.

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Pennsylvania rise?

Mr. FARR. To make a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. FARR. Would it be in order, by unanimous consent, to consider these resolutions at this time?

The SPEAKER. Anything is in order by unanimous consent.

Mr. FARR. I ask unanimous consent to consider the resolutions that were referred to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

Mr. GREGG. Mr. Speaker, I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. GREGG] objects.

PRICES PAID FOR WHEAT IN KANSAS.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of House resolution 571.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. DOOLITTLE] asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of resolution 571, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read the title of the resolution, as follows:

H. Res. 571. Resolution requesting the Secretary of Commerce to report to the House all facts and information in his possession concerning the prices paid for wheat to the producer thereof in the State of Kansas, and the prices at which said wheat is sold for export by dealers, concerns, and exporters at Kansas City, Mo., and how such prices are fixed and determined.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. FARR. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I feel, in justice to the gentlemen who presented resolutions on this matter, that all of them should be considered at the same time.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. This resolution has already been favorably reported and has been on the calendar for about three weeks.

Mr. MANN. Has the resolution been reported, Mr. Speaker?

The SPEAKER. No. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolution.

Whereas there has this year been produced in the State of Kansas approximately 180,000,000 bushels of wheat; and

Whereas said wheat is now being moved to markets in and outside the said State of Kansas in large quantities; and

Whereas large quantities thereof are sold to different grain dealers, concerns, and exporters at Kansas City, Mo.; and

Whereas the average purchase price of said wheat paid to the producer is 63 cents per bushel at the loading elevators within the State of Kansas, and large quantities of the same wheat are sold for export by grain dealers, concerns, and exporters at Kansas City, Mo., for 82½ cents per bushel to 85 cents per bushel; and

Whereas the cost of transportation and other expenses from any shipping point in the State of Kansas to Kansas City, Mo., is far less than 20 cents per bushel; and

Whereas it is stated and believed that a combination, agreement, and understanding in restraint of trade exists between certain dealers, concerns, and exporters of wheat in Kansas City, Mo., to depress the purchase price paid for wheat to the producer: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Department of Commerce report to this body all facts and information in his possession concerning the prices paid for wheat to the producer thereof in the State of Kansas and the prices at which said wheat is sold for export by dealers, concerns, and exporters at Kansas City, Mo., and how such prices are fixed and determined.

With a committee amendment, as follows:

Strike out the preamble, and on page 2, line 2, after the word "commerce"——

Mr. DOOLITTLE. Mr. Speaker, let the Clerk read the yellow paper.

Mr. MANN. The yellow paper can not be the committee amendment.

The SPEAKER. What is the yellow paper?

Mr. DOOLITTLE. I wish that to be considered in lieu of the reported resolution.

Mr. MANN. Let that be read for information.

The SPEAKER. That is not to be read now.

Mr. MANN. I ask that it be read for information pending a reservation of the right to object.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the proposed amendment by the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. DOOLITTLE] as a substitute will be read for information.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Department of Commerce is directed to report, if not incompatible with the public interest, to the House of Representatives all facts and information in his possession concerning the prices paid for wheat since June 15, 1914, to the producer thereof in the State of Kansas and the prices at which said wheat has been sold for export by dealers, grain brokers, and exporters at Kansas City, Mo., and how such prices are fixed and determined.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. PAYNE. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I notice that there are inserted in this resolution, as has become the custom in this Congress in resolutions calling upon Secretaries to report to Congress, the words "if not incompatible with the public interest." It is a new thing in the House and in the Congress to have any such subserviency to the chief of a department or a Secretary in the Cabinet. Heretofore Congress has directed them to report without inserting the words "if not incompatible with the public interest," not allowing the opinion of the Secretary to be interjected or permitting him to determine whether it is compatible with the public interest or not. It seems to me that Congress ought to get rid of this subserviency right here in the beginning and allow its own judgment to determine, and not the judgment of some man who happens to be in the Cabinet.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. I certainly have no objection to striking out that feature of the resolution. It was only inserted to conform to the custom.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks it ought to be stricken out. [Applause.]

Mr. MURDOCK. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. MURDOCK] reserves the right to object.

Mr. MURDOCK. Of course I am in favor of the gentleman's resolution, but I want to ask this question: Was the resolution prepared previous to the outbreak of European hostilities?

Mr. DOOLITTLE. Yes.

Mr. MURDOCK. Does the supplementary resolution which he has presented take that fact into consideration?

Mr. DOOLITTLE. It will cover everything from the 15th of June up until the time that the investigation was made.

Mr. MURDOCK. Of course, wheat is not bringing 63 cents in Kansas now. It is bringing more.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. Yes; but at the time the resolution was prepared it was bringing that amount. It went up the next day after it got into the newspapers.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. STAFFORD. Reserving the right to object, I should like to inquire why we should specify the conditions in Kansas, when those conditions prevail, I assume, all over the West? In view of the letter sent here by the Secretary of Commerce this morning, would it not be better to have a much broader resolution, investigating the rise of prices of all commodities, rather than just limiting it to the localized spot of the Sunflower State?

Mr. DOOLITTLE. I would have no objection. This is a different matter. The complaints that came to me up to the time of the introduction of this resolution were as to Kansas City. The marketing conditions are what I want investigated in this resolution.

Mr. GREGG. Mr. Speaker, seeing the drift of the gentleman's statement, I shall object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas objects.

LEAVE TO EXTEND REMARKS.

Mr. CONNELLY of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kansas asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Mr. Speaker, I make a similar request.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. GREGG. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Texas rise?

Mr. GREGG. To make the motion that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House for the consideration of bills on the Private Calendar.

Mr. POU. Will not the gentleman withhold that motion?

Mr. GREGG. I will not withhold it, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. MANN. Regular order, Mr. Speaker. I make the point of order that that motion is not in order.

The SPEAKER. The House will be in order. What point of order is it that the gentleman makes?

Mr. MANN. I first asked for the regular order, although I am willing——

Mr. POU. I want to ask unanimous consent to take up a bill that will not take more than a minute.

Mr. GREGG. I insist on my motion, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. MANN. I insist on the regular order, and make the point of order that the motion of the gentleman from Texas is not in order. The House adopted a rule the other day; I hold in my hand a copy of that rule, and will send it to the Speaker's desk if the Speaker desires it, although I have no doubt the Speaker has a copy of it. The copy of the rule as adopted, and also the copy of the report of the Committee on Rules, provides for the automatic resolving of the House into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of certain bills. The last paragraph of the rule as agreed to by the House, and also the last paragraph of the report of the committee as printed by the House, reads:

> The order of business provided by this resolution shall be the continuing order of business of the House until concluded, except that it shall not interfere with Calendar Wednesday, unanimous consent, or District days, nor with the consideration of appropriation bills, or bills relating to the revenue and the bonded debt of the United States, nor with the consideration of conference reports on bills, nor the sending of bills to conference.

Under that rule, which passed the House, the House is required automatically to resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union. Now, the day after that rule was passed my colleague, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOSTER] asked to have the RECORD corrected by inserting in the paragraph printed in the RECORD relating to the rule the exception of Friday; but the official document printed by the House, the substitute presented by the committee and passed by the House—the official document—as well as the report of the committee, officially printed, does not contain that, and a mere correction of the RECORD would not change that official document.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will read what happened:

> Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker, I notice yesterday in the order of business that was adopted that there is inadvertently left out a provision for the exception of business in order on Fridays, and I ask unanimous consent to insert, after the words "District days," the words "and business in order on Fridays."
>
> The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?
>
> Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, is that in the rule?
>
> Mr. FOSTER. That is in the rule.
>
> Mr. MURDOCK. The gentleman failed to read it.
>
> Mr. FOSTER. It was offered and read.
>
> Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr Speaker, reserving the right to object, I did not hear what the gentleman said.
>
> Mr FOSTER. I stated that Fridays should be excepted from the order of business to which this rule applies.
>
> Mr. MANN. What the gentleman wants to do is to correct the RECORD.
>
> Mr. FOSTER. That is all.
> The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I think undoubtedly the conclusive point in this matter is the Journal. If the Journal shows that Fridays were included in this rule, why, that is the action of the House.

Mr. MANN. There is no doubt about that, but the Journal does not so show.

The SPEAKER. That is true, but the House, by unanimous consent, could change that rule just as easily as it could change anything else; but the interlocutory performance which the Speaker read seems simply to correct the RECORD.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, if the Journal does not show that the rule adopted excluded Fridays, there can be no question that the rule does not include Fridays.

Mr. MANN. The Journal does not so show.

The SPEAKER. Undoubtedly the rule itself cuts out Fridays—that is the printed rule which the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] has.

Mr. MANN. If the Speaker does not have the official print of it before him, I will be very glad to send it to him.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has the official print, and also the original rule.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker, I think if the Chair will look at that rule he will find that after the rule was typewritten it was gone over and any mistake that was made in it was corrected, and it was the intention of the Committee on Rules, and it was so stated at the time, when the Committee on Rules met, that they were to except these various days, including Fridays.

The SPEAKER. Here is a statement of the case. The words "and Fridays" are written into the rule with a lead pencil, and the Clerk says that he read them when he read the rule.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker, I think there is no doubt that that is correct, and I think I can call upon the members of the Committee on Rules who will remember it.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, it seems more than passing strange that the Clerk would print the rule as adopted without that in it, and also print the report of the committee without that in it.

Mr. FOSTER. I think so, too, but I think it was simply a mistake in the printing.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that when we have a rule adopted and an official print of it, we ought to be bound by that.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I should like very much to see the gentleman from Texas get up his business under the Friday calendar, but I do not think it would be well for us to make a precedent of not standing by the Journal of the House. That is the official record of the House, and no matter if through a misunderstanding there is a mistake in the Journal, that mistake could have been corrected and should have been corrected, but we ought not to establish the precedent of taking the statements of gentlemen outside of the Journal, or even of papers that are not shown in the Journal, though they may be correct and the Journal incorrect. To do so would carry Congress into a mass of confusion, and there would be no safe basis upon which to stand.

The SPEAKER. There can be no question but that the Journal is the highest authority on what is done in the House.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that that must be conclusive as to the action of the House, regardless of what action the House took.

The SPEAKER. The reason the Chair read the colloquy that occurred was because he wanted the House to understand what had happened. It seems to be absolutely clear that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOSTER] started out to ask unanimous consent to change the rule, but wound up on the suggestion of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] by asking to change the RECORD.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I do not know just what my colleague started out to do, but he and I had a conversation about the matter before the House met, and I understood it was merely a correction of the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. What good was to come of correcting the RECORD?

Mr. MANN. I do not know. I never object to anybody correcting the RECORD in any way he pleases.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Speaker, where is the Journal? Let us have the Journal read upon the subject.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has sent for the Journal. These things are not printed in full in the Journal.

Mr. GREGG. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. GREGG. If the original rule, as introduced by the Committee on Rules, makes an exception of business in order on Fridays, would not that control, and can not we correct the Journal if it is not correct?

The SPEAKER. But the Journal was approved in due course.

Mr. GREGG. Suppose the Journal is silent, which would control—the rule itself or the Journal? Suppose the Journal does not set it out in full?

The SPEAKER. This is the practice in respect to that: The Journal is read every morning, and if anyone does not think the Journal is correct, the time to correct it is right then and there; and it is often corrected when suggestions are made that it should be corrected. I have seen the Journal corrected here two or three hundred times since I have been in the House; but it is like any other record now. The House could change the Journal and could change that rule by unanimous consent, but it did not do it.

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. TOWNER. In case the Journal does not set out in full the rule—and I do not know whether it does or not——

The SPEAKER. It does not.

Mr. TOWNER. Then it seems to me, Mr. Speaker, that what was done should be and ought to be made effective, and this is the reason for that: It would not be changing the Journal to change the text of the RECORD, and what was actually done was to change the text of the RECORD, and that was done by unanimous consent. Surely it was then within the power of the House to change the RECORD, as it did, by unanimous consent; and that is in no way challenging the correctness of the Journal. The Journal refers to the rule, but it does not set it out in hæc verba, and for that reason the change in the text of the RECORD under the circumstances, as requested by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOSTER], by unanimous consent, was certainly within the power of the House.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker, I beg to state that I had a conversation with my colleague the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] the next day in reference to this rule, when I noticed the omission—it being called to my attention—and I went down to the Clerk's desk after the Journal had been read to see if there was any reference to that matter in the Journal. Not finding any, I then asked that this RECORD be changed accordingly, thinking, of course, that that would probably correct the defect; and that is the matter as it stands, and as it stood at that time. Of course, if the Journal failed to show that, I agree with the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] and others here that we could not, when the Journal has been approved, go back upon it. That is true. I regret the mistake, but it is one of those things that has happened which we could not help; but if the gentleman is willing, I would like to ask unanimous consent that we may except the business in order on Fridays, which it was the intention to do at the time.

Mr. MANN. This is pension Friday. I apprehend that the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GREGG], judging by the documents that he has before him, thinks it is war claims Friday, but it is not.

The SPEAKER. It seems to the Chair it would be a very pestiferous kind of a precedent to make when we have the official print of the resolution and the official print of the report and the Journal and the whole thing, but still if the Chair were exercising any personal predilection he would recognize the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent, if it is in order, that this order may apply so as to except Fridays, so that Fridays shall not be embraced within the terms of the resolution.

Mr. MANN. I would have no objection to excepting Fridays under the rule devoted to claims or war claims, but I do not know why we should except Fridays devoted to pension business when there is no pension business.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the rule shall except Fridays devoted to claims and war claims under the rules.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOSTER] asks unanimous consent that the rule which was adopted last Tuesday be so modified as to except business on the Private Calendar on Fridays——

Mr. MANN. Not every Friday.

The SPEAKER. This Friday.

Mr. MANN. With the exception of pension Fridays, there being no pension business on the calendar.

The SPEAKER. The Chair wishes the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOSTER] to state over again what he desires.

Mr. FOSTER. I ask unanimous consent that exception be made in this rule to bills reported from the Committees on Claims and War Claims on Fridays under the rules of the House, and bills on the Private Calendar; I think we might want to take up some other bills.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman means coming up on the other days?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOSTER] asks unanimous consent that the rule adopted last Tuesday be so extended and amended as to permit the consideration of bills on the Private Calendar——

Mr. MANN. Except the second and fourth Fridays.

Mr. FOSTER. Why not take up those from the Claims Committee?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that the rule adopted last Tuesday be so modified as to permit business in order——

Mr. MANN. Except the second and fourth Fridays of the month.

The SPEAKER. On Fridays except the second and fourth. This is the second Friday——

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HOWARD. On the first and third Fridays what is in order under the rule?

The SPEAKER. Claims and war claims.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Speaker, do I understand the request of the gentleman only includes claims?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOSTER] seems to be endeavoring to get claims considered to-day, and, as far as the Chair could ascertain, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] wants to fix it so they would not have to-day. [Laughter.]

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. The Chair, in answer to an inquiry of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HOWARD], who inquired what business would be in order on the first and third Fridays, replied, claims and war claims. I would like to ask the Chair if business on the Private Calendar would not be in order from committees other than War Claims and Claims?

The SPEAKER. Not until claims and war claims are disposed of. Here is the rule.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, has the Chair recently considered that matter, because there is a ruling by Speaker Henderson that business on the Private Calendar on the first and third Fridays of the month was in order, regardless of what committee reported the bills, and I would ask the Chair not to make a decision at this moment that would be conclusive, because the matter may come up when this calendar is called.

The SPEAKER. In answer to the gentleman from South Dakota, the Chair will state this: Speaker Henderson did make a ruling to which the gentleman refers, and somewhere near the beginning of this Congress the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. ADAIR] was in the chair of the Committee of the Whole House for the consideration of claims, and he ruled the other way, and everybody submitted to it during this whole session; so it seems to the Chair it would be claims——

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Do I understand that the present occupant of the Chair made a ruling similar to that ruling?

The SPEAKER. No; the Chair did not do it, but the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. ADAIR] did in the Committee of the Whole, and there is nothing before the Chair to rule on, but the Chair will read this rule:

On Friday of each week, after the disposal of such business on the Speaker's table as requires reference only, it shall be in order to entertain a motion for the House to resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House to consider business on the Private Calendar in the following order: On the second and fourth Fridays of each month preference shall be given to the consideration of private pension claims and bills removing political disabilities and bills removing the charge of desertion. On every Friday except the second and fourth Fridays the House shall give preference to the consideration of bills reported from the Committee on Claims and the Committee on War Claims, alternating between the two committees.

Mr. POU. Mr. Speaker, it would be for the Chairman of the Committee of the Whole to determine the question propounded.

The SPEAKER. That is what the Chair stated. The chief trouble about this special-rule controversy is the shape in which it was reported to the House.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Speaker, will the Speaker indulge me for just a moment?

The SPEAKER. Yes.

Mr. GARNER. The situation here appears to me in this wise: The Journal does not state in full the rule as passed reported from the Committee on Rules, but only states the amendments which were offered from the floor. Now, the official document printed at the Government Printing Office does not show that it includes Fridays in the operation of this rule.

But the testimony of the Clerk who read this rule is that he read into the rule the word "Friday"; also the original rule shows on its face that the words "and Fridays" had been interlined in pencil. Now, I submit to the Chair that if the Printing Office makes a mistake and the Journal does not show that mistake, whether it occurred at the Printing Office or at the desk, then the original instrument, supplemented by the testimony of the real reading, ought to prevail, or else you permit the Printing Office to make the mistake, and it overrides the action of the House. It seems to me when the Journal does not show specifically what was done, then the original instrument, with the statement of the Clerk as to what was done, should prevail; especially is this true when this is only a House resolution and did not have to be engrossed.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. GARNER. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. Suppose we pass a bill and the Journal does not show the contents of the bill. Does the gentleman think that we could take a statement, whenever that is officially transmitted, by the Speaker, that that was in there, or was transmitted by the copy of the bill?

Mr. GARNER. It would go on to the Senate, and you could recall it by resolution. This is a special rule directing the House as to the manner of conducting its business. If the Printing Office made a mistake, which they evidently did in this instance—if they failed to print that at the Printing Office—it seems to me we ought not to exclude it here.

Mr. MANN. The Printing Office is not the one that is responsible for the error that is made.

Mr. GARNER. The original rule shows that the word "Fridays" was in it. Who made the mistake, whether the Printing Office or somebody else——

Mr. MANN. Assuming it was written in, and I assume for the purpose of argument that it was—as a matter of fact, I do not have any doubt about it, as anybody can write in something, a line or a word, in a rule, or in any other document if advisable—are we to trust to a thing of that kind instead of to the official copy? Where would we end if we did it? Now, I do not question the statement of my colleague about it at all.

Mr. GARNER. Why, if the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] will permit, here is the situation:

If it were a bill, of course you could recall it and change it if in the engrossed copy there was an error. This is merely a direction of the House, and this is the first time the question has come up as to the correction of the printed copy and a different status than a matter merely directing the proceedings in the House and one proposed to be put on the books as law.

Mr. MANN. Here is the rule as printed:

Mr. FOSTER reported the following substitute for House resolution 536, which was agreed to.

The substitute resolution was set out. This is an official print. Are not the Members of Congress and the House entitled to rely upon the official print as to what can come up and what does come up in the House? Even supposing there was an error, are we not bound by it at present?

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Granting the acceptance of the print in the RECORD, by what right does the Committee on War Claims ask for this day which, under the rule, is for consideration of pensions?

The SPEAKER. The rule simply provides that preference shall be given on certain Fridays to pensions. In the first place, this print which the gentleman from Illinois has and the one that the Speaker has were never printed until after the rule was adopted. The print was not the thing that the House was considering. The operation about a report from the Committee on Rules differs from every other one in the fact that it is never printed; that is, generally. Now, here is what happened: The Chair has been trying to piece it together for the last half hour. The Journal simply recites that a certain rule was adopted, that a certain amendment was offered, and a certain rule was adopted as amended. That is all that the Journal ever shows. The Journal does not undertake to set out these things. Now, in the original typewritten copy of the rule as adopted the words "and Fridays" appeared. It is true they were written in. The Clerk said he read them in. This printed copy we have here is simply a reproduction in a different kind of type and in a different shape of what was in the RECORD. The RECORD prints the resolution in full. Through somebody's mistake—the Chair does not know whose mistake—the words "and Fridays" were left out of the rule as printed in the RECORD and, consequently, as printed in this separate bill. On Wednesday this colloquy took place:

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker, I notice yesterday in the order of business that was adopted that there is inadvertently left out a provision for the exception of business in order on Fridays and I ask unanimous consent to insert, after the words "District days," the words "and business in order on Fridays."

After a good deal of conversation, that was agreed to. Evidently the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOSTER] was trying to get his rule agreed to as he reported it here originally.

And the House, if it understood what was being said—sometimes there is so much noise that it can not—must have understood that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOSTER] was trying to get that rule as it appeared in the RECORD, and consequently appeared in this separate print, fixed the way he sent it up here to the Clerk's desk to be reported.

That being the case, the Chair recognizes the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GREGG].

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the regular order, which, under the rules, is consideration of business on the Speaker's table.

The SPEAKER. What business is there on the Speaker's table that anybody wants to consider?

Mr. POU. I have a little bill there that I want to consider.

Mr. GREGG. Am I recognized, Mr. Speaker?

The SPEAKER. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Texas in due time. Has the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. POU] the bill on the Speaker's table?

NAVY CLAIMS AGAINST GOVERNMENT.

Mr. POU. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill H. R. 14685, with Senate amendment, and agree to the Senate amendment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina asks unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill H. R. 14685, with Senate amendment, and agree to the Senate amendment. The Clerk will report the title.

The Clerk read as follows:

H. R. 14685. An act to satisfy certain claims against the Government arising under the Navy Department.

The Senate amendment was read.

Mr. POU. Mr. Speaker, I ask that it be taken from the Speaker's table and that the House agree to the Senate amendment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina asks unanimous consent to take the bill from the Speaker's table and agree to the Senate amendment.

Mr. FARR rose.

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Pennsylvania rise?

Mr. FARR. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, a little while ago I asked unanimous consent for the consideration of the resolutions to investigate the increase in the prices of foodstuffs, and objection was made by gentlemen on that side to that request for unanimous consent. Now, in view of the fact that these resolutions concern vitally 100,000,000 of people, and that the prices of foodstuffs are soaring every day, it does seem to me that the request submitted by the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. POU] can be deferred at least until such time as we shall have acted on the other vastly more important question.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. I reserve the right to object, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object——

Mr. FARR. I desire to interrogate the gentleman from North Carolina as to how long it will take to consider this matter?

Mr. POU. About one minute.

Mr. FARR. Then I shall not object.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I wish to inquire whether this claim has ever been passed upon by the House Committee on Claims and reported in a bill by the House committee?

Mr. POU. It has not been. It was an amendment added in the Senate, but it has been carefully investigated by the Navy Department.

Mr. MURDOCK. If it is going to take only a minute, will the gentleman explain what the bill does?

Mr. POU. This bill that the Navy Department presented is to liquidate certain claims that the Navy Department admits exist against the Government. This is just one of those claims.

Mr. MURDOCK. What was the instance or the origin of the claim?

Mr. POU. It is to pay the owners on May 12, 1913, of the steamer Annie for damages arising out of the collision between their steamer and the United States ship C-5 in the southern branch of the Elizabeth River, off the navy yard at Norfolk, Va.

Mr. MURDOCK. Ship C-5 is an American war vessel?

Mr. POU. Yes. It has all been gone over carefully by the Navy Department.

Mr. MURDOCK. What is the amount involved?

Mr. POU. Five thousand nine hundred and sixty-nine dollars and thirty-five cents.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the Senate amendment.

The Senate amendment was agreed to.

T. S. WILLIAMS.

Mr. POU. Now, Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 1055) for the relief of T. S. Williams, disagree to the Senate amendment, and ask for a conference.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report it.

The Clerk read as follows:

H. R. 1055. An act for the relief of T. S. Williams.

Mr. POU. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to disagree to the Senate amendment and ask for a conference.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Senate amendment was read.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. POU] asks unanimous consent to take the bill from the Speaker's table, disagree to the Senate amendment, and ask for a conference. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, may I ask the gentleman if there is just one claim in this bill?

Mr. POU. Yes; just the one claim.

Mr. MANN. The difference between three hundred and odd dollars and something less.

Mr. POU. Yes. The difference between three hundred and odd dollars and $47.17.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection; and the Speaker announced as the conferees on the part of the House Mr. POU, Mr. STEPHENS of Mississippi, and Mr. SCOTT.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by inserting an article from the Cincinnati Post on the extension of the American merchant marine.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. ALLEN] asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks by the insertion of the article named. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

CALL OF THE HOUSE.

The SPEAKER. Has any other gentleman a bill on the Speaker's table that he wants to be considered now?

Mr. MANN. If not, Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois makes the point of order that there is no quorum present. The Chair will count. [After counting.] One hundred and thirty-seven Members are present—not a quorum.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] moves a call of the House. The question is on agreeing to that motion.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify the absentees, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

The SPEAKER. On this call 243 Members, a quorum, have responded to their names.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I move to dispense with further proceedings under the call.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Doorkeeper will unlock the doors.

PRIVATE CALENDAR.

Mr. GREGG. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House for the consideration of bills on the Private Calendar.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. HAY] will take the chair.

Mr. HAY. I will state, Mr. Speaker, that there are a great many bills on the Private Calendar that come from my committee.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. CARLIN] will take the chair.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House for the consideration of bills on the Private Calendar, with Mr. CARLIN in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the first bill.

Mr. GREGG. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. GREGG. What bills have precedence or preference today, if any?

Mr. MANN. That is provided by Rule XXIV, paragraph 6.

Mr. STAFFORD. Page 400.

Mr. MANN. Page 400 of the Manual.

The CHAIRMAN. Pension bills would have precedence, but as there are no pension bills on the calendar all bills on the Private Calendar would seem to have the same footing.

Mr. MANN. Evidently the Chair did not read the rule carefully. It provides that—

On the second and fourth Fridays of each month preference shall be given to the consideration of private pension claims and bills removing political disabilities and bills removing the charge of desertion.

The CHAIRMAN. None of those bills seem to be on the calendar.

Mr. MANN. The Chair is not correctly informed. There are a large number of them on the calendar, and they will probably take the day for their consideration.

Mr. RUSSELL. There are no pension bills, but other bills referred to in the rule.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair was mistaken. There are some bills on the calendar from the Military Affairs Committee.

That being the case, the Military Affairs Committee will have the right of way.

Mr. MANN. Either the Committee on Military Affairs or the Committee on Naval Affairs, as to bills of that character; not as to any other character of bills.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. STAFFORD. I direct the attention of the Chairman to the bill, No. 220 on the Private Calendar, a bill from the Committee on Claims, granting the pension claim of Dr. Joseph Hunter, and I wish to inquire whether that bill should not be given precedence under the rule? The rule says that preference shall be given to the consideration of private pension claims. This bill is a private pension claim, to reimburse Dr. Joseph Hunter for a pension that was withheld from him during certain years. I think that bill is entitled to precedence, if there are no other pension bills to be reported from the Committee on Pensions or the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will examine the bill.

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Chairman, in reply to the parliamentary inquiry of the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD], I desire to state that that bill is not in the nature of a private pension claim. It is in reality a claim against the Government, reported from the Committee on Claims, by virtue of the fact that a pension which he claims to have been unlawfully or illegally withheld from him during certain years was not paid by the Government. It is a bill reported from the Committee on Claims, and I submit that under the rule it would not have precedence, because it is on all fours with any other claim for the payment of money out of the Treasury of the United States.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is examining the bill.

Mr. STAFFORD. If the Chair will permit me, I call the attention of the Chair to the fact that the rule does not limit it to bills reported from the Committee on Pensions or the Committee on Invalid Pensions, but the rule is general in its phraseology, and says that preference shall be given to the consideration of private pension claims, and this bill that I refer to—H. R. 2344—is a bill granting a pension claim of Joseph Hunter. Now, whether it is a continuing pension claim, or whether it is for a deferred pension claim, it is a private pension claim within the phraseology of the rule. I can not see how the Chair can rule otherwise than that this bill is entitled to precedence under that phraseology.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair does not agree with the gentleman. This is a bill for the payment of a specific sum of money which should have been allowed under a certain pension, and not a pension bill within the meaning of the rule.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. FOWLER. Under the parliamentary status will any other bills be considered except bills relating to pensions?

The CHAIRMAN. They are to be considered in the order provided by the rule, which says that—

> On the second and fourth Fridays of each month preference shall be given to the consideration of private pension claims and bills removing political disabilities and bills removing the charge of desertion.

There are bills of that character on the calendar.

Mr. FOWLER. Will there be any other bills considered except those enumerated by the chair?

The CHAIRMAN. Not until they are disposed of.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. A parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York will state it.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Following the rule just read by the Chair, I desire to ask further, when the bills referred to in the general rule are disposed of—if they are all disposed of to-day—if claim bills may then be considered?

The CHAIRMAN. Bills will then be taken up in their order on the calendar, and claim bills will be considered after these other bills are disposed of, unless in the meantime the committee should determine to rise.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. All right.

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Chairman, I want to catch the purport of the Chair's ruling. Does the Chair hold that after these bills to correct military records are disposed of, then claims and other bills on the Private Calendar will be considered?

The CHAIRMAN. Under the motion we are in Committee of the Whole for the consideration of business on the Private Calendar, and bills will be taken up in the order mentioned in the rule. The Clerk will report the first bill.

SANFORD F. TIMMONS.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Chairman, I think the bill on the Calendar removing the charge of desertion is Calendar No. 321, H. R. 15735, to correct the military record of Sanford F. Timmons.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That Sanford F. Timmons shall hereafter be held and considered to have been honorably discharged from the military service of the United States as captain of Company C, Forty-third Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, on September 8, 1863.

Mr. MANN rose.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Chairman, I will state to the gentleman from Illinois that I am not in a position to give him any information about this bill. It was considered by a subcommittee and reported by that committee. There seems to be quite a full report upon the bill and I will ask the Clerk to read the report, if the gentleman desires it.

Mr. MANN. I am perfectly willing to have the Clerk read the report.

Mr. HAY. Then, Mr. Chairman, I ask that the Clerk read the report in my time.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the report.

The Clerk read as follows:

> The Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 15735) to correct the military record of Sanford F. Timmons, having considered the same, report thereon with a recommendation that it do pass.
>
> The record shows that Sanford F. Timmons was enrolled April 28, 1861, and was mustered into service to date the same day, as a sergeant of Company I, Thirteenth Ohio Infantry Volunteers, to serve three months. He reenlisted June 19, 1861, and was mustered into service on the same day, as first sergeant, Company I, Thirteenth Ohio Infantry Volunteers, to serve three years. He was promoted to be second lieutenant, and is recognized by the War Department as having been in the military service of the United States as second lieutenant, same company and regiment, from June 13, 1861. He was honorably discharged the service as second lieutenant on tender of resignation in special orders from headquarters, Army of Occupation, Western Virginia, dated September 24, 1861.
> The records also show that Sanford F. Timmons was mustered into service to date December 19, 1861, as first lieutenant of Company G, Forty-third Ohio Infantry Volunteers. He was promoted to be captain, same company and regiment, and is recognized by the War Department as having been in the military service of the United States, as such, from April 9, 1862. He was dismissed from the service of the United States as captain in general orders from headquarters Sixteenth Army Corps, dated September 8, 1863, to take effect September 3, 1863, for tendering his resignation on the grounds of opposition to the policy of the administration. The dismissal was confirmed by direction of the President in special orders from this department, dated June 3, 1864.

Mr. HAY (interrupting the reading). Mr. Chairman, I see from the reading of the report that this is not a desertion bill.

Mr. MANN. It is practically a desertion bill, is it not?

Mr. HAY. No; it is a court-martial bill. The man is not charged with desertion, and for that reason it is not in order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the next bill.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MANN. Where a bill comes up and is reported by the Clerk and debate ensues upon it, no point of order having been reserved, can it then be set aside? I am perfectly willing that it should be, but I just make the inquiry to ascertain what the rule is.

Mr. HAY. I suggest to the gentleman——

Mr. MANN. Oh, I am not raising the question as to whether it is entitled to consideration, but having been reported and having been debated, can some gentleman—myself, for instance—hereafter casually say to the Chair that it is not a desertion bill and thereby deprive the bill of further consideration?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks the bill is before the committee. The report having been read in the gentleman's time and debate having been begun, the bill is now before the committee.

Mr. MANN. I am sorry the Chair could not rule the other way, but I think that that is the correct ruling.

The CHAIRMAN. By unanimous consent it can be withdrawn.

Mr. HAY. Does the Chair hold, when a point of order is made against the consideration of a bill, when it is disclosed that it is not in order under the rule, that the fact that debate has occurred on the bill makes it in order?

The CHAIRMAN. The fact is that the committee had begun to debate the bill. The bill was laid before the committee for its consideration and the committee had begun its consideration, and debate had been started.

Mr. HAY. Then the Chair holds that the point of order came too late?

The CHAIRMAN. Exactly. If the gentleman wishes the bill withdrawn, it can be withdrawn by unanimous consent.

Mr. HAY. I am not asking to have it withdrawn.

The CHAIRMAN. Then the Chair recognizes the gentleman from Virginia.

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Chairman, I desire to submit a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HOWARD. The gentleman from Virginia made the point of order that under the rule which gave preference to a certain character of bills on the Private Calendar, this particular bill, not being a bill in that class, was, therefore, not in order. There was no way for the membership of the House to have disclosed to it whether or not the bill was of the particular character which made it in order until the bill was read. The bill itself did not show the technical character of the bill, and the report was read. The report showed that it was not of the character of bill that is privileged. Does the Chair now hold that because of that particular presentation of the bill, that this bill shall therefore have the right of way, when it is outlawed under the rule, over bills that are in order?

The CHAIRMAN. It is because the gentleman's statement, which the Chair considers in the nature of raising the point of order, came too late. The Clerk will conclude the reading of the report.

The Clerk read as follows:

The service of Capt. Timmons was in every way honorable, he having arisen to the rank of captain solely by his own merit in the performance of the duties intrusted to him, and he once tendered his resignation to Gen. U. S. Grant, who replied in writing: "Good officers can not be spared the service. Capt. Timmons may have 30 days' leave of absence." A short time after this a controversy arose between Capt. Timmons and the colonel of his regiment, Wager Swane, concerning the merits of the political candidates for governor of Ohio, and it was upon the expression of the individual political preference of Capt. Timmons that the question was made as to his opposition to the policy of the national administration.

He was dismissed from the service, to take effect September 3, 1863, and was kept under arrest for six weeks without any charges or specifications, then sent north under guard to Cairo, Ill., and released there by the commanding officer.

He never had a trial, and it is the opinion of the committee that the punishment heretofore inflicted upon him was so done without any reason, and that the only offense that Capt. Timmons was guilty of was that he expressed an individual preference for a certain political candidate against another political candidate, and therefore the committee believes that he should hereafter be held and considered to have been honorably discharged from the military service of the United States as captain of Company C, Forty-third Ohio Volunteer Infantry, on September 8, 1863.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Chairman, I have no further remarks to make about the bill.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I would like to be heard for a few moments.

Mr. HAY. How much time does the gentleman desire?

Mr. MANN. Well, I will take an hour.

Mr. HAY. But I have not yet yielded the floor.

Mr. MANN. I am quite willing that the gentleman shall keep the floor.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I very much regret that the point of order made by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. HAY] came too late as to this bill, because I do not think the bill ought to be passed; but under the circumstances, if the Chair had not held that the point of order came too late, there would have been inextricable confusion in relation to subsequent bills, I fear.

It is to be noted in reference to this bill that it was not sent to the War Department for any report upon it. It is impossible for Congress or for committees to learn, without access to the records of the War Department, all of the facts in relation to any matter concerning the Army during the Civil War, or, for that matter, at other times. I do not know what the fact may be, whether the committee acted upon purely ex parte statements prepared in behalf of the claimant in this case. But I suppose from the fact that there is nothing in the report of the committee to show that this bill was ever considered by the War Department, or information asked from the War Department, the committee may possibly have been led, contrary to its usual practice, to act upon ex parte statements.

What are these statements? It appears from the report of the committee that the claimant, Sanford F. Timmons, was enrolled on April 28, 1861, and was mustered into the service on the same day as a sergeant of Company I, Thirteenth Ohio Infantry Volunteers, to serve three months. He then patriotically reenlisted on June 19, 1861, and was mustered into the service on the same day as first sergeant of Company I, Thirteenth Ohio Infantry Volunteers, and served three years. He was promoted to be second lieutenant, and is recognized by the War Department as having been in the military service of the United States as second lieutenant of the same company and regiment from June 13, 1861. He was honorably discharged the service as second lieutenant on tender of his resignation in special orders from the headquarters, army of occupation, western Virginia, dated September 24, 1861.

He was mustered into service to date December 19, 1861, as a first lieutenant of Company G, Forty-third Ohio Infantry Volunteers. This was the third enlistment up to December 19, 1861. He was promoted to be captain, same company and regiment, and is recognized by the War Department as having been in the military service of the United States as such from April 9, 1862. He was dismissed from the service of the United States as captain in general orders from headquarters Sixteenth Army Corps, dated September 8, 1863, to take effect September 3, 1863, for tendering his resignation on the grounds of opposition to the policy of the administration. The dismissal was confirmed, by direction of the President, in special orders from this department, dated June 3, 1864. This man, after having enlisted three times in the course of a few months, and having been promoted to be captain, because he did not agree with the policy of President Lincoln, tendered his resignation. There is nothing to show what he said to the department, because we have not asked for the record from the War Department, but he must have stated in his resignation his reason for it, that he resigned because he was opposed to the policy of President Lincoln. At that time the very life of the Nation stood in the balance. There was a political campaign on, and this man, who now claims that he wanted to help save the Union, because he did not agree with some part of the policy of President Lincoln, wanted to turn his back to the enemy instead of fronting them with his face, and resigned and gave that as a reason, and they very properly dismissed him instead of accepting his resignation. There is not an army on earth that maintains any discipline that permits a subordinate officer to resign because he does not approve the commands of his superior officers or the policy of the Government which he is in the army to support when he offers that as a reason.

Now, the report states, and very likely it is true, that the service of Capt. Timmons was in every way honorable, he having risen to the rank of captain solely by his own merit in the performance of duties intrusted to him, and he once tendered his resignation to Gen. U. S. Grant, who replied in writing:

Good officers can not be spared the service. Capt. Timmons may have 30 days' leave of absence.

It seems, notwithstanding his efforts to prove now how anxious he was to preserve the Union, that he tried to get out of the Army before. The report states that "a short time after this a controversy arose between Capt. Timmons and the colonel of his regiment, Wager Swane, concerning the merits of the political candidates for governor of Ohio, and it was upon the expression of the individual political preference of Capt. Timmons that the question was made as to his opposition to the policy of the national administration." Well, that is his side of the tale. We do not have the other side of the tale, and we do not have a statement from the War Department as to the real facts in the case. "He was dismissed from the service, to take effect September 3, 1863, and was kept under arrest for six weeks without any charges or specifications, then sent North, under guard, to Cairo, Ill., and released there by the commanding officer." I do not know where he was when he tendered this resignation because he did not agree with President Lincoln's policy, but he was somewhere south of Cairo, and was kept under arrest for six weeks and sent, under guard, to Cairo because they were afraid that he would give comfort to the enemy. The committee says further that "he never had a trial; and it is the opinion of the committee that the punishment heretofore inflicted upon him was so done without any reason, and that the only offense that Capt. Timmons was guilty of was that he expressed an individual preference for a certain political candidate against another political candidate, and therefore the committee believes that he should hereafter be held and considered to have been honorably discharged from the military service of the United States as captain of Company C, Forty-third Ohio Volunteer Infantry, on September 8, 1863." Why, that was not his offense at all, expressing an individual preference for a political candidate. The offense was that in the face of the enemy he tendered his resignation, for the reason that he did not agree with his commanding officer. If he had been tried, he would have been shot. The committee say that he never had a trial. Well, it is very lucky for him that he did not. They put him under arrest for six weeks, sent him North under guard, to be sure that he was kept out of the enemy's country. He was allowed to associate with a number of other very good people who did not believe that the Union ought to be preserved, who did not believe in Lincoln's administration.

They were at home; they had every right to their opinion and to their preference, but the man who enlisted in the Army and was an officer in the Army had no right to an opinion that his commanding officers were wrong and to express an opinion in the form of a resignation from the Army and have it accepted. He had sworn to fulfill the duties of his office, and one of them was to obey orders. He did more damage by his action than he would have done if he had deserted from the Army to begin with or if he had gone with the enemy at first. It was the traitorous conduct of such men as he which prolonged the war for years. I can see no reason why a man who does a thing like this should escape the responsibility. It is always unfortunate when any person makes a mistake in life, but a man who makes a mistake can not always correct it. The man who slips and breaks his leg, his leg is broken; he may wish all he please that he had not slipped, but the leg has been broken. This man can not escape, except by a vote of a Democratic Congress, the result of his treasonable conduct. I do not think he ought to receive any honorable discharge and be placed upon the pension rolls and given a tribute to his conduct in showing his feeling against Lincoln's administration.

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. I will.

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. Is it not a fact that this man, Capt. Timmons, championed the cause of one Clement C. Vallandigham, who had been found guilty and banished beyond the Confederate lines?

Mr. MANN. I understand that to be the fact.

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. That is true.

Mr. MANN. I reserve my time, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that this bill be passed by. The gentlemen interested in it are not here, but are detained in their homes, and I think it would be fair to them to have the bill passed over; so I ask unanimous consent to have that done.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. HAY] asks unanimous consent that the bill be passed over without prejudice.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, I want to make just this observation. I do not think it is fair to the House on the part of any committee to present a matter to the House proposing to change an official record without giving the House the benefit of a statement of that official record. The report on this bill and a number of other bills reported and on this calendar contains statements which we must assume are accurate, because they are made by the Member reporting the bill, and yet how much stronger they would be, how much more convincing the statement would be, if supported in every detail by the official record! And where a committee refers to official records it seems to me the committee should place those records before Congress for its consideration.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. HAY] that this bill be passed without prejudice?

There was no objection.

JOHN MITCHELL.

The next business in order on the Private Calendar is the bill (H. R. 12161) to remove the charge of desertion against John Mitchell.

The bill was read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Navy be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to remove the charge of desertion against John Mitchell, late of U. S. gunboat Oriole, and issue to him an honorable discharge from the Navy of the United States.

Also the following committee amendment was read:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert the following:

"That the Secretary of the Navy be, and he is hereby, authorized to remove the charge of desertion against John Mitchell, who served in the U. S. S. Great Western, Oriole, and Huntress, and to issue to the said John Mitchell, or in case of his death to his heirs or other legal representatives, a certificate of discharge: Provided, That no pay or bounty for any period of time during which the said John Mitchell was absent from his command without leave of absence shall accrue or be payable by virtue of the passage of this act."

Mr. WITHERSPOON. Mr. Chairman, this bill was recommended by the Committee on Naval Affairs to the House to be passed under this state of facts: John Mitchell enlisted in the United States Army in 1861 for two years and served his time and had received an honorable discharge. In March, I believe, in 1865 he enlisted in the Navy and served until August, 1865, when he deserted. Now, under the general law the Secretary of the Navy had the authority to remove the charge of desertion from one who had deserted from the Navy, provided he had served six months in the Navy prior to the 1st of May, 1865. This young man had not served a sufficient length of time in the Navy to authorize the Secretary to remove the charge of desertion, but he had served much longer than was required in the Army, and he asks by this bill to be given the benefit of his service in the Army; and the committee took that view of it and reported the bill to the House with the recommendation that it pass. I think the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. REILLY] can explain the fact to the House more fully.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, this bill brings up a very interesting proposition. For years, I think, after I came here we passed bills occasionally that removed the charge of desertion, and the rules provide for giving preference to bills to remove the charge of desertion. Some years ago when Gen. Ainsworth was at the head of the Record and Pension Office in the War Department, if that was the title, he reached the conclusion—and other gentlemen connected with the War Department—that Congress could not alter a fact. We might write history as we pleased, but we could not change facts. We might say that the Federals or the Confederates won at some battle which was not according to history, but that would not alter the fact; that the fact would remain that the one who had won did so regardless of what Congress might say. And when a man had deserted and the record showed he deserted, we could not change the fact of his desertion. The fact existed.

Mr. WITHERSPOON. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. WITHERSPOON. It is self-evident that we can not change a fact, but I observed that this House spent one entire day doing nothing else than removing the charge of desertion against men who had had that charge standing against them for half a century.

Mr. MANN. I do not remember that day.

Mr. WITHERSPOON. I remember it. It made a profound impression upon my mind. The object of it was to permit them to draw pensions. Now, while we can not change a fact we can put this man in a position where he can get a pension.

Mr. MANN. I was reciting to the House not my conclusions but the conclusions of the War Department. The War Department reached that conclusion after full consideration and deliberation, and the result of it was that the President commenced to send veto messages to Congress, and they vetoed, not a great many bills but all the bills that were passed in that form. And the result of that was that the Committee on Military Affairs adopted a new form of bill, that wherever a Member of the House had introduced a bill to remove a charge of desertion the Committee on Military Affairs, for a number of terms of Congress, if it reported the bill at all, reported striking out all after the enacting clause and inserting a provision something like this—and I am reading from a bill now before the House:

That in the administration of the pension laws and the laws governing the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers, or any branch thereof, Jacob M. Cooper, now a resident of Iowa, shall hereafter be held and considered to have been honorably discharged from the military service of the United States as a private in Company C, Twenty-second Regiment United States Infantry, July 18, 1868: Provided, That no pension shall accrue prior to the passage of this act.

That became the settled policy of the administration and of Congress. There were not many of these bills before the Committee on Naval Affairs. I do not recall any in recent years, I think, until I ran into this one, although I may be mistaken about that. It became the settled policy. Once in a while the Committee on Military Affairs, in reporting a bill into the House for the removal of the charge of desertion, through some one's inadvertence, has not had the amendment printed into the bill, and in every such case that has come up in recent years, when the bill was reached for consideration in the House, the Committee on Military Affairs or the gentleman in charge of the bill offered the amendment on the floor, because it was the settled policy of both the administration and Congress that these bills should not pass with the idea that Congress could change a fact and say that a man had not deserted when the facts showed that he had deserted, and that they could not alter the records, and also the settled policy of the administration to veto such bills.

Mr. BURKE of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Illinois yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin?

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. BURKE of Wisconsin. Is there any way in which a charge of desertion that has been entered upon the records by mistake against a soldier or sailor can be corrected?

Mr. MANN. I beg to say that I am not going to offer any individual opinion of mine on the subject, and I have not yet offered one. I have not expressed any opinion on the subject. I do not know. But that has been the position of the administration for a number of terms, and the position of the War Department, and the position which Congress has taken in the legislation which it has enacted. Whether it is right or wrong I do not know.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. Yes; I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. Did not that position of the War Department grow out of the fact that in about 99 per cent of the cases the desire was to enable the applicant to obtain a pension from the Government?

Mr. MANN. Well, I presume that very likely that is pretty close to the fact, if not the absolute fact. Whatever the reason may have been, it was a policy established after a good deal of consideration. We had a number of veto messages sent to Congress on the subject. Now comes along a bill, referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs, and the Committee on Naval Affairs is not subject to criticism in anything that I say. That bill provides:

That the Secretary of the Navy be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to remove the charge of desertion against John Mitchell, late of U. S. gunboat Oriole, and issue to him an honorable discharge from the Navy of the United States.

If that bill had been a bill to remove the charge of desertion in the Army, and had been referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and that committee had desired to report it favorably, it would have stricken out all after the enacting clause and inserted a provision giving the man rights under the pension laws and other laws without affecting the charge of desertion. The Committee on Naval Affairs, in reporting the bill, has stricken out all after the enacting clause, but has inserted this provision:

That the Secretary of the Navy be, and he is hereby, authorized to remove the charge of desertion against John Mitchell, who served in the U. S. S. Great Western, Oriole, and Huntress, and to issue to the said John Mitchell, or in case of his death to his heirs or other legal representatives, a certificate of discharge: Provided, That no pay or bounty for any period of time during which the said John Mitchell was absent from his command without leave of absence shall accrue or be payable by virtue of the passage of this act.

This amendatory or substitute provision reported by the committee was reported upon the recommendation of the Secretary of the Navy, who furnished the language, and we shall soon be in this anomalous position—if this bill is passed and the President signs it—that if a bill passes through the Committee on Naval Affairs to remove a charge of desertion from the Navy, the President, on the recommendation of the Secretary of the Navy, will sign it; but if an identical bill, in identical form, to remove a charge of desertion from the Army should pass the House and the Senate and go to the President, the President, on the recommendation of the War Department, will veto it on the ground that the Congress can not do it. I think we ought to have some fixed policy on the subject, and not leave it to that haphazard. What does my friend from Mississippi [Mr. WITHERSPOON] think of it? Or has he paid any attention to this matter at all?

Mr. WITHERSPOON. So far as I am concerned, I am personally opposed to all pensions, and opposed consequently to all bills whose object it is to secure pensions. But the House has to my certain knowledge done this very same thing a number of times. As I said before, I saw the House spend one entire day doing nothing else than removing the charge of desertion from the records of soldiers, all for the purpose of putting them on the pension roll.

Now, in this man's case he had this additional claim, that if his service had been altogether in the Navy, instead of partly in the Navy and partly in the Army, the Secretary of the Navy could have removed the charge of desertion without appealing to Congress.

Mr. MANN. Well, I do not like to put my recollection up against the recollection of the gentleman from Mississippi; but I watch the proceedings of the House very closely, and I undertake to say that we have not passed a bill to remove the charge of desertion while the gentleman from Mississippi has been a Member of the House.

Mr. WITHERSPOON. That seems to raise a conflict between the gentleman and myself.

Mr. MANN. Well, it is a conflict that I think will not exist when I have gone a little further. The gentleman has in mind bills which come under the provision of the rule to remove charges of desertion, but these bills are to grant the right of pensions and other rights which honorably discharged soldiers have, without removing the charge of desertion.

I will ask the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MCKELLAR], who is, I believe, the chairman of the subcommittee of the Military Affairs Committee that has charge of these matters, and who handles most of these bills from that committee, whether he knows of any bills to remove the charge of desertion which we passed coming from the Military Committee?

Mr. MCKELLAR. No. Our committee has adopted the plan since I have been chairman of the subcommittee—and, as a matter of fact, I do not think any were reported before I became chairman of the subcommittee—but we adopted this year the plan of striking out everything after the enacting clause, regardless of how the bills are drawn, unless they are drawn according to our formula, and simply putting the applicant on a pensionable status, with the provision that no back pay, bounty, or back allowance of any kind shall be allowed.

Mr. MANN. I understand also—and the gentleman will probably know—that the Senate follows the same practice, in the main at least.

Mr. MCKELLAR. No. The Senate undertakes to follow that with amendments to nearly all of their bills that leave out the proviso about back pay, and frequently they run the gantlet here.

Mr. MANN. They do not pass bills to remove the charge of desertion any more?

Mr. MCKELLAR. I think not.

Mr. REILLY of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. REILLY of Wisconsin. Perhaps I can throw some light on how the change in the ruling of the Navy Department to which the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] has referred came about.

In 1911 a similar bill was introduced in this House for the relief of John Mitchell, and was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs. The Committee on Naval Affairs referred the bill to the Secretary of the Navy for a ruling, and the Navy Department, through the Assistant Secretary, gave an opinion to the effect that the records of the Navy Department could not and should not be changed; that a compliance with the bill would require an altering of the historical records of the department, which should be kept inviolate; and the said Assistant Secretary of the Navy suggested the enactment of such a bill as has been outlined by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN].

When this bill was introduced in this Congress it contained the words "honorable discharge." The bill took the usual course from the Committee on Naval Affairs to the Navy Department for an opinion. It was suggested to the authorities in the Navy Department that while a former Assistant Secretary of the Navy had ruled that a bill in the language and form in which this bill was when it was introduced should not be passed, because the records of the Navy Department should not be altered and should be kept inviolate, that a great many of the records of the Navy Department had been changed in the removal of the charges of desertion from the records of the Navy Department pursuant to a law passed by Congress in 1888.

The Secretary of the Navy replied to the Naval Committee on the matter of this bill that the relief sought should be granted; but he suggested a phraseology for the bill, which language as recommended by the Secretary of the Navy the committee adopted.

The only practical difference between the bill as introduced and the bill as recommended by the Secretary of the Navy and reported from the committee to this House is that the word "honorable" is omitted, the Secretary of the Navy being simply required to furnish a discharge and not an honorable discharge to John Mitchell.

In 1880 Congress passed an act empowering the Secretary of the Navy, in his discretion, to remove the charge of desertion from the records of certain enlisted and appointed men who deserted from the Navy, providing such men deserted after May 1, 1865, and had served faithfully six months prior to May 1, 1865.

The facts of this case are, briefly, as follows:

Mitchell enlisted in the Army May 14, 1861, for two years' service and was mustered out of service and honorably discharged from the Army May 24, 1863. On March 15, 1865, he enlisted in the Navy as a landsman for two years and served until August 26, 1865, when he went home without having been formally discharged.

Had Mitchell served in the Navy six months prior to May 1, 1865, he would have come within the terms of the law of 1888, and would have been entitled to have his war record cleared up by an act of the Secretary of the Navy without any act on the part of Congress.

The Secretary of the Navy has ruled that Mitchell having had a record of honorable service for two years in the Army prior to May 1 and having deserted after the war was over, his case comes within the spirit of the law of 1888, and that Mitchell was entitled to the same relief by a special act of Congress that other enlisted men of the Navy who deserted after May 1, 1865, after having served six months, received under the general act of 1888.

The soldiers and sailors who deserted after May 1, 1865, and who have had the charge of desertion removed from their records in the Navy Department by the Secretary of the Navy received a discharge, and not an honorable discharge.

It is submitted that John Mitchell, on his record as a soldier in the Army, and in view of the fact that he went home after the war was over, and in view of the further facts, as shown by the evidence filed with this committee, that he had a brother who had recently died in the war, and that his father had recently died, and that he went home at the urgent solicitation of his widowed mother, is entitled to some consideration at the hands of Congress.

He was in no sense a deserter, as the term is ordinarily used. He did not turn his back on the enemy; he did not leave his colors when the war was raging; he simply went home when he thought that the work for which he had enlisted was accomplished, when his country was safe, and when a widowed mother's call came to him.

John Mitchell did not know he was deserting the Navy; he did not know it was necessary for him to go through certain formalities in order to be discharged from the service of the Government; and if he had known of the necessity of such steps, he could easily have secured a discharge and could have gone home with an honorable discharge from the Government.

The contention of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN], that the records of the War and Navy Departments can not and should not be altered or changed is absurd in view of the fact that for years the records of these departments have been changed as regards the records of soldiers in the service of our late wars.

In 1913 Congress passed a bill correcting the war record of one Bartley L. Dennison and construing his discharge to be an honorable discharge as of a certain date. There is no difference between the correcting of a war record and the removing of a war record. When you correct a war record you change the record just as much as when you remove a war record.

I do not know what the President will do with this bill, but I do know that the bill has the sanction of the Secretary of the Navy and that he apparently sees no insuperable objection to the removal of the charge of desertion against John Mitchell.

This man is not asking for a pension in this bill. He believes that his record as a volunteer soldier in the war, his enlistment in the Navy, and the circumstances under which he left the service of the United States Government entitle him to have the charge of desertion removed from his record in the Navy. The matter of a pension he is willing to take up afterwards with the proper authorities.

John Mitchell is asking to have the charge of desertion removed from his record not because he is asking for a pension, but because he feels and believes he was not a deserter when he went home after the war was over, and because he did not know at the time that he was doing something that he had no right to do. He supposed the war was over and that the Government no longer had use for his services, knowing full well that a widowed mother at home had great demand for his services.

Mr. MANN. I should like to ask the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. REILLY] a question.

Mr. REILLY of Wisconsin. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. MANN. Does this man expect to get a pension?

Mr. REILLY of Wisconsin. That question has never been raised.

Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman from Wisconsin think that he could get a pension after this bill passed?

Mr. REILLY of Wisconsin. I have been informed that the soldiers and sailors of the war who got relief under the act of 1888 or had charges of desertion removed by virtue of that act are drawing pensions from the Government. These men received from the Government the same kind of a discharge that this bill contemplates that John Mitchell shall receive.

Mr. MANN. My recollection about the law is that a man must have an honorable discharge in order to get a pension.

Mr. REILLY of Wisconsin. That is what the general conception is.

Mr. MANN. That is what the law is, whatever the general conception is.

Mr. REILLY of Wisconsin. As stated before, I have been informed by the Pension Department that the soldiers and sailors who had the charge of desertion removed under the law of 1888, and who received the same kind of certificate of discharge that this bill provides that John Mitchell shall receive, are drawing pensions from the United States Government; but, as stated before, the question of a pension is not the paramount idea in the mind of John Mitchell. John Mitchell is interested in having his war record cleared up, in having this charge of desertion now on the records of the Navy Department against him removed, because he believes the circumstances of his case are such as to warrant such action on the part of Congress.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I do not know but I agree largely in theory with the gentleman from Wisconsin. But what is the use? Here the President vetoes these bills coming from the War Department; and while it is true that the President and the Secretary of War may reverse the ruling, it is also true that in matters of that sort both of them are likely to be guided in the main by the men in the War Department who are permanent, and who fix the policy, or ought to fix it, in the main in matters of that kind. It would certainly be an anomaly to veto a bill relating to the Army and sign a bill relating to the Navy, both alike, vetoing one because it is not in proper form, and signing the other because it is in proper form, when both are in the same form.

Mr. LOBECK. In a report which I have in my hand I find under "Findings of fact"—

III. By Special Orders, No. 121, War Department, A. G. O., dated Washington, March 17, 1866, claimant was, by direction of the President, dropped from the rolls of the Army, to date October 6, 1865, for desertion. An extract from Special Orders, No. 304, War Department, A. G. O., dated July 30, 1866, is as follows:

"By direction of the President, upon recommendation of his commanding general, so much of Special Orders, No. 121, paragraph 8, March 17, 1866, from this office, as dropped from the rolls the name of Capt. Guy C. Pierce, Fourth Wisconsin Cavalry, is hereby revoked and he is honorably discharged the service of the United States upon tender of resignation, to date October 6, 1865."

Mr. MANN. What is the gentleman reading from?

Mr. LOBECK. I am reading from the report in the case of Guy C. Pierce.

Mr. MANN. Oh, some other case.

Mr. LOBECK. I want to show that the War Department and the President have reversed their order.

Mr. MANN. But you can not show that, because they have not.

Mr. LOBECK. It says:

By direction of the President, upon recommendation of his commanding general, so much of Special Orders, No. 121, paragraph 8, March 17, 1866, from this office, as dropped from the rolls the name of Capt. Guy C. Pierce, Fourth Wisconsin Cavalry, is hereby revoked, and he is honorably discharged from the service of the United States upon tender of his resignation, to date October 6, 1865.

Mr. MANN. Why, certainly. Congress has passed a general law, as it has the right to pass a law, saying that certain things were not desertion. For instance, after a certain date in 1865, if a man who was in the Army went home and was marked as a deserter, Congress said it was not desertion, and hence the War Department removed the charge of desertion in such cases; but that is an entirely different thing from changing a fact.

Mr. REILLY of Wisconsin. Will the gentleman explain why the Secretary of the Navy, under that theory, said they could not remove the charge of desertion or could not change the records when that has been done in hundreds of cases under the law?

Mr. MANN. The gentleman is mistaken about the law. We have the right to change the articles of war. It has always seemed to me as though Congress had pretty full power under the Constitution, and might say a good many things about the Army and the Navy.

I am calling attention to the distinction which is being made between the Army and the Navy. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. HAY], if the matter is referred to his Committee on Military Affairs, will not report one of these bills in this shape, because it has been the policy of the War Department that they should not be signed by the President. Are we to make a distinction between that committee and the Naval Committee?

As to the facts in the case, this report is made upon the strength of a report from the Navy Department, and it is claimed that the man served in the Army a certain length of time, and that if that service in the Army had been in the Navy they would have been authorized to grant him a discharge under the general law. The Secretary of the Navy says that if the Mitchell is identical with the one who served in the Navy, as above set forth, he would be entitled to a discharge, and again he says:

Assuming that the Mitchell who served in the Army is identical with the one who served in the Navy, the department, in view of the above, recommends to the favorable consideration of the committee the draft of the bill herewith submitted in lieu of that now in the hands of the committee.

They have no information that I know of, and we have no information, as far as I am informed, that the "if" has been wiped out or that the "assuming" has been wiped out. Of course if the moon were made of green cheese and we would get at it we might do away with the high price of food.

Mr. REILLY of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. Yes.

Mr. REILLY of Wisconsin. These affidavits have been filed with the committee, showing that this man is the same person, and I called the attention of the Navy Department to that very language, and they said they invariably used that language, no matter whether the facts were true or not.

Mr. MANN. I do not care what they said; that statement is not correct as to what the department does.

Mr. REILLY of Wisconsin. That is what they told me.

Mr. MANN. Then the gentleman saw the wrong man. The gentleman can not find another report from the Navy Department in the House in recent years where they used any such language as that.

I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I am somewhat familiar with the circumstances under which Congress first began to modify the language of the acts which were intended to relieve to a greater or less extent those who were suffering under charges of desertion. In my early service in the House I had the honor of being placed upon the Committee on Military Affairs, and I was assigned to the very honorable and exceedingly arduous duty of a subcommittee on desertion cases. I think I may truthfully say that I gave more time to the study of the cases before the committee than any man who had served on that committee prior to my service, and I think that my record of inquiry in these matters has not been equaled since unless it has been by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MCKELLAR], who has reported so many of these bills which are now upon the calendar, and who has given these cases much attention, and who, I am sure, has gone into them carefully. About the time of the beginning of my service upon that committee Congress awoke to the fact that it had been rather too liberal in correcting military records, and there was a feeling in the House and all over the country that Congress ought to be very careful about taking any action that would place a man who deliberately deserted the colors, particularly in time of war, on a par with a man who had been faithful in his service, and so the committee began to scrutinize these cases more carefully than it had been accustomed to do. There were some fifteen hundred cases at that time, if I recollect right, before the committee, and I think I gave more or less personal study to some 500 of them, careful consideration to more than half that number. I discovered some very curious and some very extraordinary things in connection with some of those applications. About that time Gen. Ainsworth, then at the head of the Record and Pension Division of the War Department, having charge of military records, suggested that instead of changing the record we should in meritorious cases remove the disability under which the charge of desertion placed the soldier, and particularly when the fact was that the man had deserted. In such a case to remove the charge of desertion and to write on the record the statement that he had not deserted would be to write in the record an untruth.

Mr. Chairman, it is too bad that men deserted in the face of the enemy. It is unfortunate that men under different circumstances left the colors and went home, where it was much more comfortable in every way than at the front—it is to be regretted.

Many of those men as they grew older very much regretted their action, and they are good citizens, some of them; and the better citizens they are, the more they regret their conduct. We all live to regret some things we do. We may live them down, we may be forgiven for them, but we can not wipe them out. There ought never to come a time when the record that tells the story of a soldier's service shall tell anything but the facts and the truth. Under certain circumstances and conditions offenses may properly be condoned. Under certain circumstances and conditions the soldier should not suffer the lack of a pension; he should not suffer without some relief the odium which attaches when a soldier has placed against him in an official record a charge of having deserted his flag and service.

Mr. CLINE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. In a moment. But if the fact is that he did, through weakness or thoughtlessness or forgetfulness or homesickness, desert, if the fact is that he did not stick, then he is not entitled to the same amount of credit that the man is who, under those same circumstances and conditions and under possibly infinitely more trying conditions, did stay with the colors and did remain loyal. I now yield to the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. CLINE. I think the gentleman is correct, but I do not understand the gentleman to assume that there may not have been conditions and circumstances where the record is wrong and ought to be corrected. Is it not possible, for instance, that a soldier might have been detailed to some duty by a superior officer, and the man making up the record makes up a wrong record and states that he is a deserter?

Mr. MONDELL. The question was asked the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] as to what his opinion is as to the practice of the War Department in correcting a record.

Mr. CLINE. I was wanting to get the gentleman's opinion more than that of anyone else.

Mr. MONDELL. I am prefacing what I am about to say by that observation. The gentleman from Illinois, as I recall, did not express an opinion. My understanding is that one provision of the act of 1888, which I have not the time to read now, does authorize the department in certain cases to correct errors.

It further authorizes the department, where certain acts have been considered acts of desertion, to no longer consider them such and to change the record to that extent. My understanding is that the department holds that it has the right, where the record is clearly in error, possibly a clerical error in transcribing from one record to another, to make those changes, but the cases that we have to consider are not that sort of cases. This man did desert; nobody denies it. Now, I do not altogether agree with the view of the Secretary of the Navy in his letter as to what might be done for this man had conditions been different, and yet I will not say the Secretary is not right; it may be I am wrong, but my opinion is that the charge of desertion could not have been removed from this man had all of his service been in the Navy, because my interpretation of the act referred to is that the service from which the charge of desertion is removed has no relation to some service the man might have rendered at some other time somewhere else, and, therefore, if this man had served in the Army or in the Navy altogether, instead of part of the time in one and part of the time in another, the charge of desertion could not have been removed from his record under the law.

Mr. REILLY of Wisconsin. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. I will.

Mr. REILLY of Wisconsin. Suppose he had enlisted six months prior to May, 1865, would he not have the right to try to get the Secretary of the Navy to remove the charge?

Mr. MONDELL. It would depend upon conditions; it would depend upon certain conditions.

Mr. REILLY of Wisconsin. Provided the other conditions come in there.

Mr. MONDELL. We have conditions applying to a soldier enlisting in a volunteer organization that do not apply to the Regular Establishment. There are men who served during the Rebellion more than six months who deserted and the charge of desertion is not removed by the act referred to.

Mr. REILLY of Wisconsin. They had to serve up to May 1.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman from Wyoming yield?

Mr. MONDELL. In just a moment. If a man had enlisted in a volunteer regiment as a volunteer, with the understanding that he would serve during the war, and after the war was over and there was no longer anyone to fight—there was nothing to do but remain in camp—he concluded his services were no longer needed and went home, Congress has said that should not be considered a desertion, provided he had served six months; but that does not apply to a man in the Regular Establishment—does not apply to a man who enlisted with the idea of serving without regard to service in the War of the Rebellion. Now I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. MANN. I would like to call the attention of the gentleman from Wyoming to the fifth paragraph of the Secretary's letter. I do not recall the exact provisions of the act of 1888, but the paragraph of the Secretary says that the man—

> Shall have served faithfully until May 1, 1865, having previously served six months or more, or shall have been prevented from completing his term of enlistment by reason of wounds received or disease contracted in the line of duty.

Mr. MONDELL. Well, I think——

Mr. MANN. I see that is in the alternative, "or shall have." The gentleman from Wyoming calls my attention to an error I made.

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman from Illinois further called attention to the fact that, as far as the Navy Department has information, it does not even know whether this John Mitchell is the same John Mitchell who served in the Army in the early part of the war. I understand that matter has been cleared up by affidavits. Now, John Mitchell served, and it is to be hoped he served well. It is said that several years later the same John Mitchell enlisted in the Navy, the inland Navy, the landlocked Navy—rather a safe Navy—the latter part of the war, being stationed on the placid waters of the inland lakes and rivers. He served, how long—a month, or was it quite a month?

Mr. TOWNER. He served until August 26, 1865.

Mr MONDELL. He served less than six months, and finally concluded that he would go home. Now he wants us to write into law a statement that he did not go home, that he remained on duty. Should we declare that this valiant landlocked sailor still continued to tread the gunboat deck in defiance of the enemy when, as a matter of fact, he was at home taking care of the cows and chickens, safe and comfortable? I do not think we should do it; not but what I have a kindly feeling for such a man—no doubt he is a good man—but John did go home, and we have no business to say that he did not go home. Now, if Mr. Mitchell is suffering by reason of the fact that he is barred from a soldiers' home because he can not secure a pension, which he can not, it is possible we should relieve him from that particular disability, leaving his record as he made it. We had nothing to do with it then; we have not anything to do with it now. If he had had a little more stamina, a little more enthusiasm, a little more patriotism, he would have served out his time and he would have had an honorable discharge, as many men did who served out their time, on both sides. Now, it has been a long time since Congress ceased passing this kind of bills. I do not recall having seen one in this form for years. We ought not return to that very bad practice, though we may remove a disability which prevents him from drawing a pension or from receiving the benefits of a soldiers' home. With an amendment to the bill, putting it in the usual form, I should not specially object to it, assuming that the two military records have been completely connected and that the desertion was at a time when the man's services were no longer needed by his country.

Mr. NORTON. Mr. Chairman, at first I was not very familiar with this case, and so I listened with a great deal of interest to the argument of the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL]. On general principles I am not personally in favor of removing this stigma of dishonorable discharge from any soldier or any enlisted man in the Navy who deserts without good cause. But after listening to the gentleman from Wyoming I have come to the conclusion from his citations of the law covering other cases that this man Mitchell has a pretty good case and that he has reasonably good ground for having this dishonorable charge removed.

Mr. MONDELL. How a good case, may I ask my friend?

Mr. NORTON. I will be very pleased to tell the gentleman from Wyoming. It appears that if he had served in the Navy for 6 months prior to May 1, 1865, he would come under certain provisions of law that would permit the Secretary of the Navy to remove that charge. Now, it appears that instead of serving in the Navy 6 months prior to May 1, 1865, he, as a matter of fact, served 5 months and 11 days, from the date of his enlistment on March 15 until August 25, 1865, the date of his alleged desertion. Now, the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] says that this man enlisted in the landlocked Navy of our Great Lakes, and enlisted, as he intimates, at a time and at a place where Mitchell felt safe and secure from the strife and dangers of war, and suggested that he was not the ordinary brave American citizen who is found enlisted in our Navy, but that his enlistment was to secure some temporary employment.

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman knows that I did not say anything of that sort.

Mr. NORTON. Well, I listened carefully to the gentleman's statements, and I gained from what the gentleman did say that impression of his argument. I further call the gentleman's attention to the fact that some of the most glorious and historic battles that have been fought by the American Navy and our American sailors have been fought on the Great Lakes and by our landlocked Navy. This man Mitchell enlisted when the Civil War was being most bitterly contested between the North and South and——

Mr. MONDELL. At Mound City, Ill.?

Mr. NORTON. Yes; at Mound City, Ill. Can the gentleman inform me where the ships on which this man served were plying?

Mr. MONDELL. Probably on the turbid waters of the Missouri.

Mr. NORTON. Possibly that may have been true.

Mr. MONDELL. Or possibly on the rolling surges of the Mississippi.

Mr. NORTON. It appears that the gentleman does not know where the service of this man was given to his country. I want to say that no facts appear in the report on this bill or elsewhere to indicate that John Mitchell was not just as brave, just as patriotic, and just as worthy an American citizen as any man who enlisted in the Navy of the United States in the trying days of March, 1865, when the ranks of our Army and Navy were most in need of heroes and brave defenders. It seems when the war drums ceased beating and when the chance of fighting was over, Mitchell became dissatisfied with life in the Navy and took his departure from the Navy without receiving a formal discharge or release. In view of the fact that he served in the American Army during the first two years of the Civil War, it seems unfair and unjust that an honorable discharge should be withheld from him at this time, under all the circumstances of this case.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on laying the bill aside with a favorable recommendation.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise and report the bill with a favorable recommendation.

The motion was agreed to.

Thereupon the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. CARLIN, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 12161) to remove a charge of desertion against John Mitchell, and had directed him to report the same to the House with a committee amendment, with the recommendation that the amendment be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was read the third time.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the bill.

The question was taken, and the Speaker announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. HAY. Division, Mr. Speaker.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 32, noes 3.

So the bill was passed.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 3 o'clock and 3 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until Saturday, August 15, 1914, at 12 o'clock noon.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII,

Mr. LINTHICUM, from the Committee on Foreign Affairs, to which was referred the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 292) authorizing the President to accept an invitation to participate in an exposition to be held in the city of Panama, and for other purposes, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1088), which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXII, committees were discharged from the consideration of the following bills, which were referred as follows:

A bill (H. R. 10979) granting a pension to Mary Pierce; Committee on Invalid Pensions discharged, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

A bill (H. R. 18188) granting an increase of pension of Joseph L. Hall; Committee on Invalid Pensions discharged, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills, resolutions, and memorials were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. SMALL: A bill (H. R. 18368) to authorize the construction of a lighthouse and fog signal upon Diamond Shoal, at Cape Hatteras, on the coast of North Carolina; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. THOMAS: A bill (H. R. 18369) authorizing the Treasury Department to make certain advances for the relief of the tobacco growers of Kentucky and Tennessee; to the Committee on Appropriations.

By Mr. WINGO: A bill (H. R. 18370) providing for the issuance of Federal reserve notes to producers of cotton, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

By Mr. O'HAIR: A bill (H. R. 18371) compensating the privates of the Capitol police force for extra services; to the Committee on Appropriations.

By Mr. KAHN: A bill (H. R. 18372) for erecting a suitable monument to Commodore Uriah P. Levy in the city of Washington, D. C.; to the Committee on the Library.

By Mr. ALEXANDER: A bill (H. R. 18373) to authorize the United States Government to establish and operate a steamship service between ports of the United States and ports of the various countries of South America, and such other ports as may from time to time appear desirable, and to establish a service of value to the national defense in time of war; to the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries.

PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, private bills and resolutions were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. ALEXANDER: A bill (H. R. 18374) granting an increase of pension to J. A. Neff; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. BARKLEY: A bill (H. R. 18375) for the relief of the estate of James E. Morgan, deceased; to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. FITZHENRY: A bill (H. R. 18376) to correct the military record of John B. Ford; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. STEPHENS of Texas: A bill (H. R. 18377) granting an increase of pension to Clara Robinson; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. STONE: A bill (H. R. 18378) granting an increase of pension to Henry Hotchkiss; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 18379) granting an increase of pension to Sarah McDaniel; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk and referred as follows:

By the SPEAKER (by request): Petition of the Socialist Party of Ohio, protesting against the war in Europe; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also (by request), petition of certain members of the St. John's Lutheran Church of Ambler, Pa., favoring national prohibition; to the Committee on Rules.

By Mr. ALEXANDER: Memorial of the Grant City (Mo.) Chautauqua, favoring an amendment abolishing polygamy in the United States; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. BOOHER: Petition of A. D. Gresham and 72 other citizens of Platte City, Mo., favoring the passage of House joint resolution 282; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

By Mr. CONNELLY of Kansas: Petitions of 50 citizens of Beloit, 29 citizens of Osborne, and 43 citizens of Mankato, all in the State of Kansas, favoring national prohibition; to the Committee on Rules.

By Mr. DILLON: Petition of 34 citizens of Milltown, S. Dak., favoring national prohibition; to the Committee on Rules.

Also, petition of A. G. Leonard, of North Dakota, regarding means of distribution of topographic and hydrographic surveys; to the Committee on Expenditures in the Interior Department.

Also, petition of the Fargo Chautauqua Association, relative to abolishing polygamy; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

SENATE.

SATURDAY, August 15, 1914.

(Legislative day of Tuesday, August 11, 1914.)

The Senate reassembled at 11 o'clock a. m., on the expiration of the recess.

THE CALENDAR.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The calendar under Rule VIII will be proceeded with.

The bill (S. 1240) to establish the legislative reference bureau of the Library of Congress was announced as first in order on the calendar.

Mr. GALLINGER. Let that go over.

Mr. SMOOT. I ask that it may go to the calendar under Rule IX.

Mr. GALLINGER. The Senator presenting it is not present. I think it had better be passed over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 41) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to sell or lease certain public lands to the Republic Coal Co., a corporation, was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The joint resolution will go over.

The bill (S. 2242) making it unlawful for any Member of Congress to serve on or solicit funds for any political committee, club, or organization was announced as next in order.

Mr. GALLINGER. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will go over.

The resolution (S. Res. 156) limiting expenditures for telegrams sent or received by Senators was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will go over.

The resolution (S. Res. 84) providing that any Senator, upon his own request, may be recorded and counted as present in order to constitute a quorum was announced as next in order.

Mr. McCUMBER. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will go over.

The resolution (S. Res. 218) proposing an amendment to the standing rules of the Senate was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It will go over.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 26) proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States was announced as next in order.

Mr. GALLINGER. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The joint resolution will go over.

PUBLICATION OF LAND-OFFICE NOTICES.

The bill (S. 3023) relating to the duties of registers of United States land offices and the publication in newspapers of official land-office notices was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. BURTON. I have an amendment to offer to the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. There are amendments from the Committee on Public Lands to be acted on first. The amendments will be stated.

The amendments were, on page 1, line 8, to strike out "some certain stated day" and insert "Saturday," and in line 10, to strike out "such day" and insert "each Saturday," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That whenever the law requires the register of a United States land office to publish a notice for a certain period of time in a newspaper to be designated by him, such publication may be made by publication each week, successively, in a weekly newspaper of general circulation for the prescribed period of time, or by publication once a week on Saturday of each successive week in the daily issue for each Saturday of a daily newspaper of general circulation until such prescribed period of time shall have elapsed from the first day of publication in such daily newspaper.

The amendments were agreed to.

Mr. BURTON. I offer the amendment I am sending to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. Add at the end of the bill the following proviso:

Provided, That in the selection of newspapers in which such notices are published no distinction or discrimination shall be made by reason of political opinions expressed or advocated therein.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Mr. President, I really think there is no necessity for that amendment. The law already provides that notices shall be published in the newspaper of general circulation nearest the land in question.

Mr. BURTON. I think it will do no harm, however. I have a circular letter which I have received, and I think the Senator from Wyoming has heard something about it, in which it is said:

It is considered that the registers of the land service should recognize the propriety of designating newspapers whose political principles are in harmony with the administration.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Well, Mr. President, that may be so where there are two newspapers within equal distance of the land. I am inclined to think the register still ought to have the say-so as to the paper in which the notice shall be published. The law is very explicit that the notices shall be printed in the newspaper which is published nearest the land in controversy. While, perhaps, the theory upon which the Senator offers his amendment is a correct one, I have lived a great many years in a public-land State and in a town where Democratic and Republican newspapers are published, and I do not think there are any further safeguards to be thrown around the matter. I do not know that I have any particular objection to the amendment. I do not think it will change the situation in any way.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I wish to voice my objection also to the amendment. I should not object to an amendment to allow the party making the proof to select the paper if it came within the character of papers required.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. No; I would not, either.

Mr. McCUMBER. I should object to nothing of that kind, but I do not believe it is a good plan to get into a conflict over what constitutes the political policy of a paper. There are quite a number of papers in my State that I think it would take a very big magnifying glass to discover what are their political policies, and considerable question might arise upon that point.

Mr. BURTON. This amendment does not seek that. It merely seeks to ignore entirely the political opinions expressed by newspapers. If they have no opinions, they are eligible; if they have opinions on political subjects they are also eligible.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. We have tried for a great many years to keep the public-land service and everything connected with it free from any political bias so that there might be a business operation of the Land Office. I think the present system has succeeded fairly well, and I do not like to see any more legislation upon land matters or upon the execution of the functions of the Land Office than can possibly be avoided. I do not see how the amendment can possibly do any good. I do not see how it could change the situation in any particular, and I for one am not in favor of the amendment.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, I am not in sympathy with the amendment offered by the Senator from Ohio. I believe it should be left to the discretion of the register and receiver of the land office. It will conserve a better purpose to leave the law as it is rather than to adopt the amendment of the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. BURTON. But, Mr. President, will the Senator from North Dakota yield for a question?

Mr. GRONNA. I will yield.

Mr. BURTON. How can it be left to the discretion of the register of the land office, which no doubt would be safe, when an instruction goes out, which is that the register of the land office "should recognize the propriety of designating newspapers whose political principles are in harmony with the administration." It is not now left to the law.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Has any such thing as that gone out?

Mr. BURTON. I am so informed, and I have a copy of the circular letter.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I should like to see it, because any department that has sent it out has done it in absolute and direct violation of the statute laws.

Mr. GRONNA. I will say to the Senator from Wyoming that I have seen it; and, as the Senator has said, it is in violation of the law; but it is no reason that because some one has violated the law we should change the law now.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. The way to remedy that is by action on the official who sent out the circular, and I give notice right now to the Senator from Ohio and to the official who sent it out that, if a circular of that sort has been sent out, the official will receive attention from official quarters.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, if there has been a circular sent out, it has simply been done in harmony with the practice of the Interior Department for the last half a century. We all know that the administration in power patronizes, in the publication of such articles, as far as it can be done, papers which are in sympathy with the administration. I am glad of it. It ought to be done. It was done during the long period of time when the Republican Party was in power; and, so far as that feature of the Republican administration is concerned, it has always met with my sincere and hearty approbation.

My objection to the amendment offered by the Senator from Ohio is that it will not accomplish anything. Registers and receivers who are in political sympathy with the administration will, wherever there is more than one paper coming within the purview of the law, give these publications to the paper which is in sympathy with the administration. The Senator from Wyoming knows that; we all know it. Hence the incorporation of an amendment of this sort in the bill would still leave it entirely within the power of these officials to carry out that policy; and it is perfectly consistent, and it is due to no expression of opinion, political or otherwise, on the part of the chief in question.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I agree with the last part of the Senator's statement, but the first part is entirely contrary to my experience. I have had some experience in these matters during the last 30 years and I know that that experience has not justified the statement the Senator has made, which is that the policy of the officials of the General Land Office was controlled or influenced in any way by political consideration. I know that time and again complaints have come to me from Republican publishers in my own State, because they thought they were entitled to the land office printing, which, of course, as the Senator knows, is a very considerable item in the revenue of country newspapers in the public-land States, and I have taken occasion to refer those letters to the department, and invariably the reply has come—I have not had any experience with this administration in that respect—but invariably the reply has come from prior administrations that the Land Office at Washington does not seek to control and can not, under the law, as it is put down, control in any way the publications of the local land office; that they are entirely within the control of the register of the land office, who designates the paper, and in designating that paper he must designate the paper of general circulation which is published nearest the land in question.

Of course, where there are two papers of opposite political views in the same town the register is left to his discretion, and equally, of course, as the Senator remarked in the last part of his statement, that patronage goes to the paper of the party in power. I think that is right. I do not think it has been abused, and I think the less we meddle with the established ways of transacting affairs in that way the better it is for everybody concerned.

Mr. THOMAS. Whatever the ostensible and outspoken policy may have been, the practice is as I have stated; at least that is my experience. I am perfectly frank to state that, so far as protests are concerned, of course they are made. Since the 4th of March last I have been in receipt of a large number of such protests, some of them from Republican papers and some from Democratic papers, which papers complain of favoritism, and also complain that they are not receiving their share of this patronage. The practice will still proceed, and it ought to proceed, whatever may be the fate of this amendment.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, I thought the calendar was to be considered this morning by unanimous consent. If we are going to waste time on amendments and differences between parties, I shall object to the further consideration of this bill.

Mr. THOMAS. Unanimous consent does not preclude the offering of an amendment or the discussion of it, as I understand it.

Mr. BURTON. I think the general impression is as the Senator from Colorado has stated, and for that reason I do not blame any person particularly for issuing such an order. Oftentimes officials are possessed of the opinion that the administration should be conducted along political lines, and one main reason is because of the opinion that their opponents have pursued the same policy. I have a letter from Mr. Garfield, who was Secretary of the Interior, in regard to this matter under date of June 23, 1913, in which he says:

CLEVELAND, June 23, 1913.

Hon. T. E. BURTON,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR BURTON: I have your letter of the 20th with the inclosure. I am very confident that during my administration no such direction to registers to land offices was issued. * * * I remember very well that the question of publication came up several times, and

I invariably directed that the publication be made in papers of such character and circulation as would most surely give the information to those who might be affected by the entry.

Very truly, yours, JAMES R. GARFIELD.

I do not have it in my file here, but I have a similar letter from Secretary Fisher.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I simply want to say, as coming from one of the public-land States, that my experience is exactly the same as that of the Senator from Wyoming. During the few years I have been down here I have had this matter called to my attention several times, and, as the Senator suggests, the reply has come from the department exactly as he states.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I think the Senator from Ohio could not possibly have reflected upon the practical operation of the amendment which he offers. It can have none whatever. It is utterly impossible under the law as it exists now. The paper published nearest the land must be designated by the register as the one in which the publication shall take place.

Mr. BURTON. Will the Senator from Montana yield for a question?

Mr. WALSH. Certainly.

Mr. BURTON. Suppose there is an entry 3 miles from a town in one of the public-land States and there are two newspapers published on opposite sides of the same square in that city. Is an exact measurement made and the one selected that is a few feet nearer the entry?

Mr. WALSH. Not at all. That is exactly the case I was going to put to the Senator. I want to put the case of a Republican newspaper and a Democratic newspaper published in the same town. This commands that no preference shall be given upon any political consideration, but the register is obliged to select one of the two newspapers. Now, how are you going to control the discretion that you repose in him?

Mr. BURTON. As a matter of policy, it seems to me where you have a rule that there shall be no discrimination made according to politics the selection will be made according to the circulation and efficiency in informing the largest number of persons, ignoring politics.

Mr. WALSH. Yes; but I want the Senator to assume two papers, as there are, for instance, in my town a Republican newspaper and a Democratic newspaper. They are both good mediums of advertising. They circulate through exactly the same fields, and they both stand on an equality, so far as an advertising medium is concerned. Now, what will you do? You command the register not to pay any attention to the politics of the papers in making the assignment; and, under those circumstances, what would you say if a Republican register would give the patronage to the Republican paper? What would you say if a Democratic register gave it to the Democratic newspaper? How would this injunction of the law affect or control his action under those circumstances?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. BURTON].

The amendment was rejected.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS, ETC., PASSED OVER.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 94) to authorize the Secretary of Commerce to investigate the condition of trade in China, for the purpose of determining the desirability of establishing there a permanent exposition of the products of the United States of America, was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Let the joint resolution go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It will go over.

Mr. POMERENE. Will not the Senator consent to have it taken up?

Mr. SMOOT. Not to-day, Mr. President.

Mr. POMERENE. At this time, when we are trying to extend the foreign trade, it seems to me it would be good policy to pass the joint resolution.

The bill (S. 2425) to authorize the Roanoke River Development Co. to construct and maintain a dam across the Roanoke River in Mecklenburg County, in the State of Virginia, approximately 20 miles below the town of Clarksville, in said State, was announced as next in order.

Mr. BURTON. I ask that the bill may go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It will go over.

The bill (S. 3971) to provide for a permanent exhibit of the resources of the States of the Union in or near Washington, D. C., was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It will go over.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 10) proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States fixing the time for the convening of Congress and commencement of the terms of the President, Vice President, Senators, and Representatives was announced as next in order.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I should like to have the joint resolution considered. It has been on the calendar for quite a while.

Mr. WALSH. I object.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The joint resolution will go over.

The resolution (S. Res. 254) to create a special committee of five Senators to assist the Interstate Commerce Commission in investigating certain facts regarding the methods and practices of the Louisville & Nashville Railroad, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. GALLINGER. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will go over.

The bill (S. 392) to create in the War Department and Navy Department, respectively, a roll designated as "the Civil War volunteer officers' retired list," to authorize placing thereon with retired pay certain surviving officers who served in the Army, Navy, or Marine Corps of the United States in the Civil War, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. OVERMAN. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will go over.

The bill (S. 121) to provide that petty officers, noncommissioned officers, and enlisted men of the United States Navy and Marine Corps on the retired list who had creditable Civil War service shall receive the rank or rating and the pay of the next higher enlisted grade, was announced as next in order.

Mr. OVERMAN. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will go over.

TRAFFIC IN OPIUM.

The bill (H. R. 6282) to provide for the registration of, with collectors of internal revenue, and to impose a special tax upon all persons who produce, import, manufacture, compound, deal in, dispense, sell, distribute, or give away opium or coca leaves, their salts, derivatives, or preparations, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. CUMMINS. I ask that that bill go over.

Mr. THOMAS. I trust the Senator from Iowa will permit this bill to come up now. It has been considered as in Committee of the Whole, and a number of amendments at that time offered were adopted. It then went over and was ordered to be reprinted. It is a bill the passage of which is necessary for the proper enforcement of the provisions of the opium treaties between the different countries which have been signed. The State Department has been especially urging its early consideration, stating that it has been largely handicapped in the execution of other laws on account of the failure of this bill to become a law. But for the tacit assurance given yesterday, when the unanimous-consent agreement was entered into, that this bill could be considered the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS], in charge of the subcommittee which considered this bill, would have objected. This is a very important matter, and I appeal to the Senator from Iowa to permit its consideration.

Mr. CUMMINS. I hope the Senator from Colorado will allow the bill to pass over for a few moments until I can look it over. I have some communications about it, but I have them not in mind now.

Mr. THOMAS. Of course, I am entirely helpless if the Senator from Iowa insists on his objection. I may say to the Senator, however, that ever since the bill was before the Senate the last time I have been overwhelmed with communications concerning it, and if it is going to be postponed because of objections to it coming up, then unfortunately we shall not be able to have the bill passed at this session.

Mr. OVERMAN. The Senator from Iowa suggested that the bill be passed over temporarily.

Mr. THOMAS. I am quite willing that it shall be passed over temporarily.

Mr. CUMMINS. I have an objection to an amendment which has been agreed to, as I understand, although I do not know whether or not it is now in the bill. If it is, I shall object to the consideration of the bill; and if it is not, I shall not object. If, however, I am compelled to decide just at this moment, I shall ask that the bill go over.

Mr. THOMAS. I will, of course, consent that the consideration of the bill may be temporarily suspended.

Mr. GALLINGER. Before the bill goes over——

Mr. THOMAS. Pardon me just a moment. If the Senator from Iowa will get the two-star reprint of the bill, it will show all of the amendments which have been agreed to up to date.

Mr. GALLINGER. If the Senator from Colorado will permit me, I wish to say that I have had numerous letters in reference to this matter, only one of which is at hand, and one particular objection that has been urged against it is this:

That such a record—

Alluding to a provision in the bill—

such a record requirement is unnecessary in the general plan of this proposed law, and, therefore, an unreasonable burden upon the medical profession, entailing enormous clerical labor; is of such a character as to be impossible of exact compliance, and, therefore, an intolerable and dangerous restriction on the medical profession; and it is so prohibitive in application as to curtail the useful, legitimate, and humane service of the medical practitioner, particularly in the rural districts.

Mr. THOMAS. Let me ask if the Senator refers to the proviso on page 5?

Mr. GALLINGER. I confess I have not examined the bill.

Mr. THOMAS. I will read it to the Senator.

Mr. GALLINGER. But I have had letters from several physicians, saying that under the provisions of this bill they would have to keep a record of every prescription they make.

Mr. THOMAS. That is the proviso to which I now refer. For the sake of getting this bill passed at this time, if that is the same objection to which the Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS] refers, I will consent that that proviso be stricken out.

Mr. GALLINGER. From what knowledge I have of the matter, I think it should be stricken out. I think it would be, as is stated, almost an intolerable burden, particularly upon the country practitioner.

Mr. THOMAS. Let me ask the Senator from Iowa if that is the objection to which his attention has been called. The proviso is on page 5, beginning with line 6.

Mr. CUMMINS. That is the objection I have to the bill.

Mr. THOMAS. That being so, I will consent that that language be stricken out.

Mr. CUMMINS. I do not think it practicable to require every person who compounds a medicine to make a record of the fact.

Mr. THOMAS. That language may be stricken out.

Mr. GALLINGER. I think probably that is the only objection to the bill. I have a communication likewise from the National Drug Co., which I find among my papers, calling attention to this very provision, and I feel sure that with that stricken out there can be no objection to the bill.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, when that part of the bill is reached I will move to reconsider the vote by which that amendment was agreed to, and then ask that it may be rejected.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The vote by which the amendment was agreed to will, by unanimous consent, be reconsidered, and by unanimous consent it will be stricken out. The Secretary will state the amendment.

The SECRETARY. On page 5 of the original print, line 2, after the word "act," it is proposed to strike out the following proviso:

Provided also, That a record of the drugs thus dispensed shall be made in a suitable book kept for that purpose, and shall be preserved for two years in such a way as to be readily accessible to inspection by the officers, agents, employees, and officials hereinbefore mentioned.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The proviso is stricken out by unanimous consent.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I desire to ask the Senator from Colorado with regard to a portion of the bill which is found before the part just stricken out. Suppose that a doctor in a hospital prescribes for one of the patients in the hospital; he is not specially employed. Does the Senator from Colorado intend that he shall be required to report every prescription that he makes?

Mr. THOMAS. With the striking out of the proviso I do not see how any special record of the prescription by the physician would be required.

Mr. CUMMINS. I refer to the following language in the bill:

Provided, That such physician, dentist, or veterinary surgeon shall have been specially employed to prescribe for the particular patient receiving such drug.

Now——

Mr. THOMAS. It is impossible, Mr. President, to enlarge that provision without subjecting the proposed act to the danger of constant infractions by unscrupulous physicians ministering to the wants of those addicted to the use of drugs.

Mr. CUMMINS. What is the difference between "specially employed" and "employed"?

Mr. THOMAS. There may be no difference, generally speaking, but the purpose of this amendment was to prohibit, so far as possible, those pretended employments to which some physicians would resort in order to comply with the wishes of those addicted to the drug habit, and who would thus obtain the drug regardless of the prohibition of the statute.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, if I may be permitted to make a suggestion, I will say that my attention was also called to this provision to which the Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS] referred, and it occurred to me that if the phrase "personally attend upon such patient" were restored, and perhaps qualified by words like these, "personally attend in good faith upon such patient," it would meet the purpose which the Senator from Colorado had in mind. To use an illustration, if a physician were going along the street and saw some one who was severely injured, and he went immediately to his assistance, and found that it was necessary, in the proper practice of his profession, to administer some drug of the prohibited character, the physician is not in that case "specially employed" to do that, but from humanitarian instincts he may administer a remedy. It seemed to me that if we would strike out the phrase "have been specially employed," and say "shall personally in good faith attend upon such patient," it would meet all the criticisms which have been made.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, this is an amendment which was inserted in the bill on my motion after very lengthy consideration of the subject. It was to avoid the very objection which the Senator suggests in connection with the requirement of personal attendance. Let me give the Senator an illustration. Here, we will say, is a person out in the country who may have been riding with a little child 12 or 15 miles, perhaps, from a doctor; that child may have nothing more than a cinder in his eye, but considerable pain may follow. According to this bill, as it read before the adoption of the amendment, it would be necessary to send for a doctor and have that doctor "specially employed" in actual attendance upon that child, when the moment the physician was informed of what the trouble was he could have written out a prescription containing a little cocaine in order to alleviate the suffering. If we adopt the rule that the surgeon "shall personally attend upon such patient," which means actual physical attendance on the individual, you compel the attendance of a physician in thousands of cases where it is not at all necessary. It was to avoid that and yet at the same time to be careful and not get over the line whereby a physician might send drugs in some way to persons generally, without any employment by them, that the words were inserted.

I can not see any objection to striking out the word "specially" if the Senator wants that word stricken out. I do not think it adds very much to the provision, because if the physician is employed generally to look after patients in a hospital, I think that is all that is necessary, and I do not believe we need the words "specially employed."

Mr. CUMMINS. There are two words in the bill, Mr. President, that ought not to be used, in my opinion, and I think if they should be stricken out the section would accomplish the objects sought to be accomplished by the Senator from North Dakota. They are the words "specially," in the second line, and "particular," in the third line.

Mr. GALLINGER. On what page?

Mr. CUMMINS. On page 5. We have every day this situation: The hospitals of the country employ surgeons and physicians to do the work of the hospital; they are not specially employed to prescribe for a particular patient, but they are regularly employed to prescribe and care for probably all the patients in the hospital.

Mr. McCUMBER. Let me ask the Senator, does not the greater include the less? If they are employed to prescribe for all, they are necessarily employed to prescribe for the particular ones constituting the all.

Mr. CUMMINS. I think not.

Mr. McCUMBER. I think so.

Mr. CUMMINS. If they are employed generally by the hospital, they are not specially employed to do a thing for a particular patient, and if those two words were stricken out I would have no objection.

Mr. McCUMBER. Let me say to the Senator that while I will agree with him in thinking that the word "specially" does not add very much to the provision, I think there is danger in striking out the word "particular," for this reason: We know it is a custom of those people who want to secure cocaine from any source to dispense it again or to hand it over to divers persons, to go to a physician who may get it for himself and yet turn it over to some one else, or he may get it for some one, a particular person, and yet it may not be used by that person.

It is to prevent the indiscriminate disposal of the drug that we seek in every instance to require that there should be some relation, a direct relation, between the physician prescribing it and the patient who is to receive it, and I am fearful if we strike out the words "particular patient" that some one may get from a physician any quantity of drugs and may dispense them generally.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I do not think that the case the Senator has in mind will be left unprovided for if these words are stricken out, because it would simply be required that the physician "shall have been employed to prescribe for the patient receiving such drugs."

All that I am afraid of is that you will paralyze the ordinary operations of the great hospitals of the country.

Mr. McCUMBER. I can not give it that construction; and yet I do not know that it is of very great importance, except I can see that if we strike out the words "particular patient," we lose the relationship between the doctor and his patient, and the law may be avoided by any person obtaining drugs for persons who are in no way known to the physician; and we ought to be very careful about that.

Mr. CUMMINS. I agree to that; I agree that we ought to be careful; but the Senator from North Dakota has just this case in mind, of a physician prescribing generally and not for a patient, and he fears that the drug may then escape into the hands of persons who ought not to use it. If you say, however, that the physician must be employed to prescribe for the patient receiving the drug, you have, I think, covered every case, and you will then permit physicians employed for patients generally when they are brought together in groups, as they are found in the hospitals, to prescribe under the law.

It has been pointed out to me—it is not an original notion on my part—by those who are deeply interested in that subject that there would be grave danger if those two words were left in the amendment.

Mr. McCUMBER. Let me suggest a case to the Senator to see how he would meet the supposition: Suppose that a physician—of not the very best standing possibly, but still a physician who is authorized by law to administer to patients—should go to another physician and say to him, "I have a dozen patients who are all affected by some particular disorder; I want to get a dozen prescriptions in which cocaine is used, leaving it to me to dispense that to my particular patients." Suppose, then, that he obtains cocaine and gives it to those who do not need it in any way whatever. You have then avoided the direct relation and responsibility of the doctor making the prescription to any particular individual. In other words, if the prescription is always made to a certain person so that you can establish the connection between them, I should have no fear.

Mr. CUMMINS. I should think the case stated by the Senator from North Dakota would be prohibited by the amendment, as it would be with these words stricken out. The physician who compounded the medicine or who made the prescription must be employed to do so, and he must be employed to prescribe for the patient who receives the drug. In the case put by the Senator from North Dakota there would be no employment at all. The patient who was to receive the drug would have had no relation of any kind with the physician who prepared the prescription.

I move, Mr. President, that the word "specially," in line 2, be stricken out.

Mr. THOMAS. Let me inquire of the Senator from North Dakota whether that is satisfactory to him.

Mr. McCUMBER. As I have stated, I have no objection to the word "specially" being stricken out. I still think the other ought to be retained.

Mr. THOMAS. Then, I accept that amendment and ask to have the word "specially" stricken out.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment agreed to as in Committee of the Whole will be reconsidered by unanimous consent.

Mr. SMOOT. Just one word in relation to the amendment on page 5, which was allowed to be stricken from the bill.

Mr. BURTON. Has this amendment been disposed of? Has the word "specially" been stricken out?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Not yet.

Mr. BURTON. As I understand, the Senator from Utah is taking up a different phase of the bill.

Mr. SMOOT. I understood that amendment had been disposed of.

Mr. BURTON. No; it has not yet been disposed of.

Mr. SMOOT. Then, of course, I will not say what I intended to say until that has been done.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. GALLINGER in the chair). The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Iowa to strike out the word "specially."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SMOOT. Now, Mr. President——

Mr. CUMMINS. I have not finished with this amendment. I move that the word "particular," in line 3, be stricken out, so that it will read:

Provided, That such physician, dentist, or veterinary surgeon shall have been employed to prescribe for the patient receiving such drug.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In the original print, on page 4, line 24, it is proposed to strike out the word "particular" where it appears before the word "patient."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President——

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, if the Senator from Ohio will pardon me, the word "specially" is also used on page 10, line 7, in the same connection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment as amended.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the vote whereby the amendment on page 10 was agreed to will be reconsidered.

Mr. CUMMINS. I move to strike out the word "specially," on page 10, line 7.

Mr. THOMAS. I accept that amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Iowa will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 10, line 7, of the print of June 5, it is proposed to strike out the word "specially" where it appears before the word "employed."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, on the same page, in line 1, after the word "shall," I move to insert the words "personally attend upon such patient or." My reason for that amendment is this—and I can perhaps make my reason clear by an illustration:

If a physician were to be going along the street and should be an eyewitness to a severe accident wherein a man was severely hurt, and he should rush to his assistance and find it necessary to administer a drug, he would not be specially employed to attend the injured party, but, prompted by humanitarian instincts and with full knowledge of what his professional duty should be under the circumstances, if he were to administer a drug he would be subject to the provisions of this act with regard to record, and so forth, and he would not be regularly or specially employed. It seems to me it would be well to insert this provision so as to apply to that class of cases.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, it was considered by the committee that emergencies might and probably would arise whereby a physician would not be immediately available, but who might be reached by telephone or telegraph. Therefore it was thought best to strike out that proviso and to insert in place of it the amendment which follows immediately afterwards.

Mr. POMERENE. It would meet my objection if both of these provisions were retained. In the instance I have suggested the physician would not be specially employed, but he would be attending, nevertheless; so that if my amendment is adopted it would read:

Provided, That such physician, dentist, or veterinary surgeon shall personally attend upon such patient or have been employed to prescribe.

Mr. BURTON. Mr. President, will my colleague permit me to make a suggestion?

Mr. POMERENE. Certainly.

Mr. BURTON. I think the word "shall" should be inserted before the word "have," so as to read "or shall have been employed."

Mr. POMERENE. Perhaps that is so.

Mr. BURTON. Because the word "shall" is used in the preceding line.

Mr. POMERENE. I will modify my amendment, then, so as to have it read as follows: After the word "shall," in line 1, insert the words "personally attend upon such patient or shall."

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President——

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President——

Mr. THOMAS. I yield to the Senator from North Dakota.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Two bills seem to be before the Senate, and some confusion on the part of the clerk is occasioned by that fact. Does the Senator refer to page 10 of the two-star bill?

Mr. POMERENE. Mine is the two-star bill, page 5, lines 1 and 2.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I think we are refining refinement down to its very last essence in some of the suggestions that are being made. I suppose a man who is unconscious is scarcely capable of employing a physician; I assume, also, that a horse is not capable of employing a veterinary surgeon; but I do not think I would change the law to meet that contingency. I think when a man seizes another and drags him out of the water and stands him on his head to get the water out of his lungs he may be guilty of an assault in law. There is no law authorizing him to handle another——

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. McCUMBER. Just one moment; let me finish my sentence. There is no law authorizing a man to use his brother in such a way as that, and yet no court would sustain the proposition that he had unlawfully assaulted another under those circumstances.

I think it may be assumed that if a physician finds a man unconscious he is supposed to do everything that is necessary. Ordinarily the unconscious man must be in the hands of somebody, somewhere, and in whosoever's custody he may be there may be an employment of the physician by that individual. I can scarcely conceive of a case where a physician will go out and find a man lying on the street, with no one in charge of him, and be called upon to administer an opiate of this kind without some one calling upon him to do so.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I am not speaking of a man who is unconscious. I am speakng of a man who is suffering intensely. Every physician in his experience comes in contact with many cases of that kind, where there is an emergency, where accidents happen, where they have gone to the rescue at once, and they ought not to be hampered by any red tape such as this is under those circumstances.

Mr. McCUMBER. Why, I do not think the Senator would say for a moment that if a physician was called upon in a case of emergency of that kind it would not be an employment. The individual does not have to employ him under this law. If his services are requested in that case he meets the law by responding to whatever may be necessary.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I think the language of the bill as amended includes everything that is expressed in the proposed amendment. The amendment reads:

Provided, That such physician, dentist, or veterinary surgeon shall have been employed—

And so forth. That includes both personal attendance and the emergent cases that have been supposed. Hence, I think the addition of the words suggested by the Senator from Ohio is entirely unnecessary.

Mr. POMERENE. But my thought is—perhaps I have not made myself clear—that in the case I have recited there is no employment at all. The physician simply happens on the scene.

Mr. THOMAS. I am inclined to agree with the Senator from North Dakota that there is employment wherever there is attendance. It may be one not followed by pecuniary compensation, but certainly it is employment. Consequently, I do not see the necessity for the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Ohio will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In the original print, on page 4, line 22, after the word "shall," it is proposed to insert the words "personally attend upon such patient or shall."

Mr. LANE. Mr. President, perhaps a physician ought to have very little to say about the phraseology employed by lawyers. I wish to say, however, for the benefit of the Senator from North Dakota, that there are times when a physician or surgeon is compelled by necessity to attend upon patients without being employed by anyone. For instance, he may be walking or driving down a street, and an accident may occur while he is in the immediate vicinity, and then the responsibility of his profession forces him to take charge of the case without being employed by anyone. Perhaps the injured person is an entire stranger to everyone who is passing, himself included, and he sometimes secures his very worst cases in that way. The most serious cases which are presented to him are sometimes forced upon him without any will or any employment by anyone. If this would prevent him from immediately responding, it should not do so. If it does not, it is a matter of no importance.

Mr. McCUMBER. I should say, most emphatically, that it does not.

Mr. LANE. In the case of railway accidents he is compelled to volunteer his services without respect to payment or anything of the kind. If it does not affect cases of that kind, it is all right.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The parliamentary situation is that the words that the Senator from Ohio proposes to insert, with two exceptions, were in the original bill, and were disagreed to. The question is upon reconsidering the action of the Senate in striking out the words "personally attend upon such patient."

The motion to reconsider was rejected.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from North Dakota will please suspend for a moment. The Chair would like to consult the Senator from Ohio for a moment. [After a pause.] The Chair will state that a good deal of difficulty arises from the fact that there are two separate prints of the bill, and it is very difficult to find the place where amendments come in.

Mr. THOMAS. The two-star print, if used, will obviate all difficulty. It is the last print.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the amendment proposed by the Senator from Ohio.

The SECRETARY. On page 4, line 22 of the original print, after the word "shall," it is proposed to insert the words "personally attend upon such patient, or shall."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President——

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

Mr. THOMAS. I yield to the Senator from Utah.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. A moment ago the Chair asked the Senator from North Dakota to suspend. The Chair will now recognize the Senator from North Dakota.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, I was going to ask what action has been taken on the amendments offered by the committee?

Mr. THOMAS. We have not yet taken up the committee amendments, but we will do so very shortly.

Mr. SMOOT. I was going to call attention to the amendment that was agreed to be stricken from the bill on page 5. In a letter from the Acting Secretary of the Treasury to the Secretary of State in connection with the bill I call the attention of the Senate to the fact that the Acting Secretary specifically recommended that amendment which has been stricken from the bill. I find that he uses these words in commenting upon it:

> The bill as the House passed it exempted the physician from the operation of the law only with respect to patients he personally attended. The Senate committee has amended the bill so as to make it possible for a physician to send to a patient whom he has not seen but whom he has been specially employed to prescribe for. It is argued that this amendment is necessary to provide for emergencies that the physician otherwise might not feel at liberty to meet. The amendment, however, opens a way for illegal traffic by mail or express under the guise of prescribing for and supplying to distant patients. The above addition to the paragraph is designed to control this evil.
> Surely if the manufacturer or wholesale purveyor must keep a record in the form of official order blanks he is required to preserve, and the purchaser and dealer must keep a record in the form of duplicates of the orders he has sent and the druggist a record of his sales in the form of prescriptions he has filled, then the doctor who occasionally dispenses should keep a record of what he has dispensed to check against what he has purchased.

To my mind this is one of the most important amendments that have been made to the House bill. I was sorry to see it go out of the bill, and I simply want to record my dissent to the action at this time. I shall not ask, however, that it be reconsidered.

Mr. THOMAS. I was quite as unwilling to see this amendment go out as was my colleague on the committee, but it is very necessary that this bill should be passed at the present session of Congress, and it is obvious to my mind that the only manner in which we can secure that result is to take the course which I did take in the premises.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President——

Mr. THOMAS. Now, Mr. President, I ask to take up the bill for committee amendments.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is informed that all the committee amendments in the bill have been agreed to.

Mr. THOMAS. There are amendments which have been suggested and which have been accepted in addition to those which have been agreed to, and it is those to which I wish now to recur.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will again state that he is informed by the clerks that those amendments were agreed to on the 5th day of June, and unless there are some new amendments to be offered there does not seem to be anything to consider.

Mr. THOMAS. I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment beginning on line 19, page 2, was adopted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 2, line 19, the following proviso was inserted:

Provided further, That officers of the United States Government who are lawfully engaged in making purchases of the above-named drugs for the various departments of the Army and Navy and for Government hospitals and prisons, and officers of any State government, or of any county or municipality therein, who are lawfully engaged in making purchases of the above-named drugs for State, county, or municipal hospitals or prisons, and officials of any territory or insular possession of the United States who are lawfully engaged in making purchases of the above-named drugs for hospitals or prisons therein shall not be required to register and pay the special tax as herein required.

The motion to reconsider was agreed to.

Mr. THOMAS. After the word "Navy," in line 23, of the two-star print, I move to insert "the Public Health Service."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. THOMAS. In the two-star print I move to amend the amendment now under consideration by inserting after the word "of" in line 2, page 3, the words "the District of Columbia or of."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The proposed amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In the two-star print, page 3, line 2, after the word "of," insert the words "the District of Columbia or of," so as to read "and officials of the District of Columbia or of any territory or insular possession," and so forth.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. THOMAS. On page 4 of the two-star print, line 24, I move to reconsider the vote by which the words "registered under this act" were stricken from the bill.

Mr. LANE. I should like to ask the Senator how they are to be registered? What provision is made for their general registration?

Mr. THOMAS. I want to reinsert those words.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Colorado moves to reconsider the vote whereby the words "registered under this act" were stricken from the bill in line 24, on page 4.

Mr. LANE. The Senator wishes to restore them, and then they will have to register under this act?

Mr. THOMAS. Yes.

Mr. LANE. How will they register?

Mr. THOMAS. The act provides for a means and method of registration.

Mr. LANE. All physicians are to be registered?

Mr. THOMAS. Yes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion to reconsider.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, just a moment. I want to understand it. Does the Senator mean to say that no physician can practice unless he registers under this act? A physician, in order to be entitled to practice, must register under certain acts within his own State according to the State law.

Mr. THOMAS. He may practice, Mr. President, but unless registered he can not dispense or distribute any of the aforesaid drugs. The words "registered under this act," which it was designed to strike out at this point, occur on page 5 of the two-star print, lines 15 and 16, and my purpose in wanting a reconsideration of the amendment is to make that change.

Mr. McCUMBER. I understand the Senator. I think he is correct.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion to reconsider.

The motion to reconsider was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The words will remain in the bill.

Mr. THOMAS. On page 5 of the two-star print, lines 15 and 16, I move to strike out the words "registered under this act."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. THOMAS. On page 6 of the two-star print, I move to reconsider the vote by which subsection (d), beginning in line 11 and ending at line 17, was stricken out.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The subsection will be read.

The SECRETARY. On page 6, beginning in line 11, subsection (d) reads as follows:

(d) To the sale, barter, exchange, or giving away of any of the aforesaid drugs to any officer of the United States Goverment or any State, county, or municipal government lawfully engaged in making purchases thereof for the various departments of the Army and Navy, and for Government, State, county, or municipal hospitals or prisons.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Colorado moves to reconsider the vote by which the subsection was agreed to.

The motion to reconsider was agreed to.

Mr. THOMAS. I move to insert the word "of" after the word "or," in line 13; the words "Territorial, District" after the word "State" in the same line; the words "or insular" after the word "municipal" in the same line; and to add the words "Territorial, District" after the word "State" in line 16.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Will the Senator kindly take them up separately? The Senator from Colorado moves to insert the word "of" after the word "or" in line 13.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. THOMAS. I move to insert the words "Territorial, District" after the word "State" in the same line.

Mr. SMOOT. May I ask the Senator to read the subsection as it will read after the several amendments he has offered are agreed to?

Mr. THOMAS. Certainly:

(d) To the sale, barter, exchange, or giving away of any of the aforesaid drugs to any officer of the United States Government or of any State, Territorial, District, county, or municipal or insular government lawfully engaged in making purchases thereof for the various departments of the Army and Navy, and for Government, State, Territorial, district, county, or municipal or insular hospitals or prisons.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The remaining amendments to the amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In line 13, after the word "State," insert the words "Territorial, District"; after the word "municipal" insert the words "or insular"; in line 16, after the word "State," insert the words "Territorial, District"; and in line 16, after the word "municipal," insert the words "or insular."

The amendments to the amendment were agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. THOMAS. On page 7 of the two-star print I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment beginning with the word "Provided," in line 2 on that page, was adopted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 7, line 2, after the word "District," the proviso reads:

Provided, That such forms shall be furnished by the collector without cost to the officers of the United States Government or the State governments who are lawfully engaged in making purchases of the aforesaid drugs for the various departments of the Army and Navy and for Government and State hospitals.

The motion to reconsider was agreed to.

Mr. THOMAS. I ask that the proviso be stricken out.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. THOMAS. On page 8 of the two-star print I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment on that page beginning in line 3 was adopted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 8 of the two-star print, commencing in line 3, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, inserted matter, down to and including line 25, in the following words:

The provisions of this act shall apply to the United States of America, the District of Columbia, the Territory of Alaska, the Territory of Hawaii, the insular possessions of the United States, and the Canal Zone. In Porto Rico and the Philippine Islands the administration of this act, the collection of the said special tax, and the issuance of the order forms specified in section 2 shall be performed by the appropriate internal-revenue officers of those Governments, and all revenues collected hereunder in Porto Rico and the Philippine Islands shall accrue intact to the general Governments thereof, respectively. The courts of first instance in the Philippine Islands shall possess and exercise jurisdiction in all cases arising under this act in said islands. In the Canal Zone the administration of this act, the collection of the said special tax, and the issuance of the order forms specified in section 2 shall be performed by such officer or officers in said Canal Zone as the President may designate for that purpose. The courts of the Canal Zone having jurisdiction of crimes and offenses committed in said zone shall have jurisdiction to hear, try, and determine all actions and proceedings in which any person shall be charged with having violated any of the provisions of this act within the limits of said Canal Zone.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on reconsidering the provision just read.

The motion to reconsider was agreed to.

Mr. THOMAS. I move to strike out that part of the amendment on page 8 beginning in line 16 with the words "in the Canal Zone," down to and including line 25, ending with the words "in the limits of said Canal Zone," and to insert:

The President is authorized and directed to issue such Executive orders as will carry into effect in the Canal Zone the interest and purpose of this act, by providing for the registration and the imposition of a special tax upon all persons in the Canal Zone who produce, import, compound, deal in, dispense, sell, distribute, or give away opium or coca leaves, their salts, derivatives, or preparations.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. THOMAS. That amendment was offered in accordance with the request of the War Department, and in this connection I ask to place in the RECORD, without reading, a letter from the Secretary of War to the chairman of the Committee on Finance.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

WAR DEPARTMENT, Washington, July 3, 1914.

Hon. F. M. SIMMONS,
Chairman Committee on Finance, United States Senate.

DEAR SENATOR: Referring to the bill (H. R. 6282), now pending in the Senate, providing for the registration of all persons who produce, import, manufacture, compound, deal in, dispense, sell, distribute, or give away opium or coca leaves, etc., it having been noticed that an amendment was adopted on the floor of the Senate, at the end of section 2, making the provisions of the bill applicable to the Canal Zone, with the proviso that in the administration of the act in the zone the collection of the special tax and the issuance of forms specified in section 2 shall be performed by such officers in the Canal Zone as the President may designate, a copy of the bill was forwarded to Col. Goethals, Governor of the Panama Canal, for his information. The Washington office of the Panama Canal is just in receipt of a cable from Col. Goethals requesting that all reference to the Canal Zone in this bill be omitted. Col. Goethals expresses the opinion in the cable that the bill is too complicated and cumbersome for local application in the Canal Zone and suggests that the matter can be taken care of by Executive order if additional legislation is needed.

It is hoped that Col. Goethals's request may be complied with, but if it is not considered desirable to do so, it would seem that the desired object might be obtained by eliminating the present clause in the bill relating to the Canal Zone and substituting therefor a provision somewhat of the following nature:

"The President is authorized and directed to issue such Executive orders as will carry into effect in the Canal Zone the intent and purpose of this bill by providing for the registration of and the imposition of a special tax upon all persons in the Canal Zone who produce, import, manufacture, compound, deal in, dispense, sell, distribute, or give away opium or coca leaves, their salts, derivatives, or preparations."

Very respectfully,

LINDLEY M. GARRISON,
Secretary of War.

Mr. THOMAS. On page 9 of the two-star print, line 22, I move to insert the word "acting" after the word "employee," so that the clause will read "or to any employee acting within the scope of his employment."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. THOMAS. I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment beginning on page 10, line 4, was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The provision will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

Or to any person who shall deliver any such drug which has been prescribed or dispensed by a physician, dentist, or veterinarian, who has been specially employed to prescribe for the particular patient receiving such drug.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is upon reconsidering the paragraph just read.

The motion to reconsider was agreed to.

Mr. THOMAS. I move to amend the amendment by adding thereto the following words:

Or to any United States, State, county, municipal, District, Territorial, or insular officer or official acting within the scope of his official duty.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. THOMAS. On page 11, line 24, of the two-star print, I move to strike out the word "or," before "dispensing," and after the word "dispensing" to insert the words "or possession," so as to read "giving away, dispensing, or possession of preparations," and so forth.

Mr. LANE. Before this section is adopted as amended——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Will the Senator from Oregon permit the Chair to put the question on the amendment to the amendment?

Mr. LANE. Certainly.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. LANE. Before the section is adopted I wish to——

Mr. THOMAS. I will state to the Senator that these are verbal amendments, and the objection which he wants to offer will come in later.

On page 12, line 11, I move to strike out the word "or," before "dispensed," and after the word "dispensed" to insert the words "or possessed," so as to read:

That such remedies and preparations are sold, distributed, given away, dispensed, or possessed as medicines—

And so forth.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. THOMAS. On page 13, I move to strike out the last word in line 13, all of lines 14 and 15, and down to the word "otherwise" in line 16, and to insert in lieu thereof what I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 13, after the word "State," it is proposed to strike out "or municipal officer, board, or other authority who or which has possession of any of such drugs for purposes of investigation, enforcement of law, or otherwise" and to insert "county, municipal, District, Territorial, or insular officer or official who has possession of any of said drugs by reason of his official duties."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Colorado.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. THOMAS. On page 13, line 23, I move to strike out the words "said exception" and insert the words "such exemption."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. THOMAS. Those are all of the committee amendments, Mr. President.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, on June 20 I gave notice of my intention to offer an amendment to this bill exempting from its provisions physicians and surgeons who prescribed or administered the drugs in good faith, or to nurses or attendants who gave such drugs in good faith under the direction of physicians given in good faith. That amendment was suggested by the fact that what is known as the Nelson amendment had been offered, and, as I understood at the time, had been adopted. After some publicity had been given to that amendment I received telegrams from members of the medical profession in my own State, both from societies and from individuals in large numbers, and I have many of them here [exhibiting]. After investigating the subject, I found that the Nelson amendment had not, in fact, been adopted.

I think the amendment as I offered it was too broad. I recognize the very great evil which grows from the excessive use of improper drugs quite as much as do any of my brethren in this Chamber. At the same time, I also recognize the difficulty which surrounds the country practitioner, whose patients may be 5, 10, 15, or 20 miles away from his office and away from a drug store. I know something about the embarrassments which surround the country practitioner, and I know how utterly impossible it would be for him to practice his profession and keep the records as required by the Nelson amendment, so called. I feel, however, that the physicians ought, under all the circumstances, to be required to take out a license. I have had conferences with a number of men who have given a great deal of study to this question and a number of letters from men who have been very conversant with the subject. I am satisfied that, in view of the fact that the Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS] has consented to strike out the record provisions of the bill as applied to regularly licensed practitioners, we have all in the bill which ought to be placed in it in the way of regulations.

I do not believe that as the bill now stands there is any necessity for the amendment which I offered, and if I were to offer it now I should modify it so as to narrow its scope. In other words, I believe that the physicians and surgeons ought, in view of the prevalence of this evil, to be required to take out a license, so that the Government officials may be able to keep in touch with whatever of growing evils there are in the country.

We must have a cure for the drug habitué, but we must not forget the innocent sufferer on his or her bed of sickness and pain. Let us protect the country from the physician or druggist who is encouraging the drug habit for purely commercial purposes; but let us not by too much red tape hinder the physician in the proper practice of his profession. We can prevent the abuse of the drug without unduly hampering its proper use.

In view of the fact that the record provision of the bill as applied to physicians and dentists has been stricken out of the bill, I do not insist on my amendment in any form.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is in the Senate and open to amendment.

Mr. LANE. Mr. President, I wish to call attention, without any hope of accomplishing any change in this bill, to one of its provisions which I know is a bad provision. I refer to section 6. Under the terms of that section it is provided:

SEC. 6. That the provisions of this act shall not be construed to apply to the sale, distribution, giving away, or dispensing of preparations and remedies which do not contain more than 2 grains of opium, or more than one-fourth of a grain of morphine, or more than one-fourth of a grain of heroin, or more than 1 grain of codeine, or any salt or derivative of any of them in 1 fluid ounce.

There carte blanche is given to anyone without any responsibility fixed anywhere to dispense, to sell, to give away, a preparation which contains 2 grains of opium to a fluid ounce. A fluid ounce is equivalent to about three of the ordinary household tablespoonfuls. That license permits anyone who wishes to do so to set up business and manufacture a colic cure—he can call it anything he wishes—a cough mixture—to advertise it extensively, and to sell it all over the country. The trouble with it is not that it affects adult persons but that it affects children. Infants, helpless little babies from 10 days old up to a year old, will be subjected to medication of this sort.

If the baby becomes fretful and begins to cry, the mother, who loves her baby with a love that is not equaled by any other love in the world, not knowing what is the trouble, in her effort to seek relief for the child, not knowing herself what else to do, gets hold of somebody's soothing sirup, if you please, and gives the child 5 or 15 or 20 drops of it, or whatever the dose may be. The baby goes to sleep; its pain, which is nature's warning, ceases; it quits fretting and the mother is lulled into a feeling of safety. The child, however, may have in its intestinal canal something which has been fed to it that is fermenting there, and that substance is kept locked up in the child's system. The proper thing to do is to remove the irritating cause, but instead of that it is locked in, to be reabsorbed into the general circulation, and the child may develop a fever and in a few days may die. In many instances the child gets well—in fact, in most cases—but thousands upon thousands of babies die in consequence of that kind of treatment each and every year in this country. Within half a mile of where we are now standing discussing this bill death has claimed scores of little children under such circumstances during hot weather.

An intelligent physician, a man who has studied medicine and anatomy and dissected the human body and made all the scientific research that is at the command of the human race to-day, is not allowed to prescribe any of these articles without restrictions being placed upon him. If anyone should know about these things, he is the one, and he is the man who should be intrusted with the responsibility of using such medicines if he deems it wise; but I have no objection to restricting him; I want him to register and take the responsibility for his acts. Here, however, you turn loose, not upon the dope fiend, for 2 grains of opium to the ounce will not satisfy him—it is not strong enough—but upon little babies a concoction 1 tablespoonful of which might cause death in nine out of ten cases. Yet it is proposed to allow these mixtures to be placed in the hands of ignorant old women who, no matter how well-meaning and kindly they may be and how greatly they wish to do the child good, may in their ignorance be the indirect cause of its death. We propose to give permission to the men to market and advertise these nostrums extensively to do all this harm. There have been millions of dollars made from the sale of those preparations. Firms have manufactured them and sold them over this country for years and years, and as a consequence little babies have died by the thousand.

In the old days we used to read in folklore stories about ogres who demanded a toll of the handsomest girls and the finest boys of a village in order that the inhabitants might be left in peace for another year, and the parents took the best of their children out and delivered them over to be eaten by such monsters. We are doing the same thing here in a different way. We are doing it in a less merciful way, for the reason that the fabled monster made a single meal of his victims and the end was over. A quick death is always a merciful death; the cruel death is the slow, the lingering one. The little child with his bowels locked up and the symptoms of disease disguised sleeps and the mother's fears are quieted until the disorder progresses, and then when an intelligent person, be it a nurse or a physician of any one of the different schools who understands medicine, is called in, it is too late.

The worthy Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER], at the present time occupying the chair, will confirm what I have said. He has practiced medicine for years, and has been called in, I have no doubt, to attend children under such circumstances when it was too late for him to do any good, for the reason that the time had gone by when the simplest of remedies could have saved the life of some poor helpless baby.

I wish to say that there should be some restrictions placed upon the manufacture and sale of such nostrums. I am informed that if the portion of this bill to which I have referred is not allowed to stay in the bill will be defeated; that the interests who sell these articles containing these pain killers, consisting of not to exceed 2 grains of opium to the ounce, are so strong and their influence is so great upon the executive officers of this Government who have this matter in hand, and upon this legislative body and the legislative body at the other end of the Capitol, that if I fight it and cause the elimination of that section the bill will fail and the traffic in opium and cocaine for the morphine and cocaine drug fiends will go on.

Now, I wish to state that at one time I was the superintendent of an institution where opium, cocaine, and other drug fiends were cared for, and I have had a number of them in my charge. As a rule, after they have become addicted to the habit the percentage of ultimate recoveries is very small. I have seen very few, after they once became addicted to the habit, who afterwards remained free from it; but we are now by this legislation attempting to save those who have already contracted the habit and stop others from acquiring the habit, and that is a good motive.

A little child, with its tissues so soft that you can bend its bones in any shape you wish and they will remain where you place them, with the same pliability existing in all its tissues, with its brain just forming and the cells beginning to come in connection with one another, is in the most impressionable period of its life. Now, if a baby—we will say an infant under a year old—has been soothed with a soothing sirup and by the grace of God and the kind treatment of its mother in other respects has got well, despite the original cause of its trouble and the opiate which has been given it, later along in life, when 25 or 35 years old, under the stress of the daily struggle of life and the effort to make a living, because of the early impress made upon his little brain and his little nerves will not have entirely forgotten the pleasant tingle and soothing effect of opium, is likely to search for a somnolent; and from that class of babies, if you will believe me, although I can not prove the theory, come a large percentage of adult dope fiends.

As I said when I began, it will do no good to protest against this, for a gentleman who represents the Treasury Department and is anxious to secure the passage of this bill asked me not to protest. I said to him: "It kills 10,000 children a year." He said, "More than that." Think of it. More than 10,000 babies will die each year if we compromise and allow the enactment of this particular section. I said, "Do some men make millions out of it?" "Yes; they have made millions, and they are here to protect it. They are protecting it—they and others—and they will beat the bill if you beat this section." I said, "Well, I will not promise you anything but that I will try to beat it if I can. I will not be responsible for it. I will make the representation fair, without prejudice, as nearly as I can, and then leave it. If the people of this country must pay a toll of thousands upon thousands of little babies, helpless folk, and this bill can not pass without containing a provision that allows the shoemaker, the blacksmith, the bootblack, or anybody else to go out on the street and sell, give away, or dispense preparations containing 2 grains of opium to the ounce: if this Congress can not pass a bill unless it has that provision tied on to it, tantamount to the destruction of many innocent lives, it is unfortunate. I do not expect to stop it, but I shall make it known and protest it."

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, before the Senator leaves I should like to ask him a question. Did I understand the Senator to say that as a result of the passage of this bill there would be killed 10,000 babies more than are killed or die under the laws as they exist?

Mr. LANE. Yes; I think probably more than that will come to their death in consequence of this; yes, probably many times more. The Government representative acknowledges there will not be less than that.

Mr. SMOOT. What I want to know is this, Mr. President: The soothing sirups of which the Senator speaks, and other medicines carrying opiates, are sold to-day, and what I can not understand is how the passage of this act would increase the death rate that is taking place to-day. I am fully aware of the fact that there are many, many infants killed through the administration of medicines carrying opiates; but I was wondering how the Senator figures that there would be an additional number of 10,000 or more killed on account of the passage of this bill.

Mr. LANE. Mr. President, I will say, in answer to the Senator, that there are many being killed now through the use of these preparations.

Mr. SMOOT. I think more.

Mr. LANE. And more; and we are now making it lawful for that practice to continue, and as the population increases there will be a greater death rate in proportion. Why not strike it out and stop the death rate? Why not make these people register for every grain of opium that they put out, and hold them responsible, as nearly as you can, for the effect of it? You can not do it entirely. It is insidious. It is because it is insidious and you do not see it that you do not notice it, but any physician will tell you what it does.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will take the liberty of suggesting that we are operating under the five-minute rule.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President I do not think I shall take that amount of time. I merely wish to say that I think the Senator's humanitarian instincts and impulses cause him to exaggerate this situation a good deal. If the only use of opiates were in such forms as paregoric, which has been a standard remedy for a great many years, there would be no necessity for this measure. In addition to that, this is a measure which affects interstate commerce and which is designed to supplement State legislation. Nearly all of the State statutes upon this subject, which are very stringent and beneficent in their operations, make the same exception that is here found, and, among others, the Senator's own State.

I have a letter on this subject from the National Association of Manufacturers of Medicinal Products, whose headquarters are in the city of Detroit. It is an association of high-class business men and manufacturers of medicinal products, men who are very anxious to secure the enactment of this and all other laws designed to suppress the inordinate and unhealthful use of drugs and who are quite as humanitarian in their impulses as my esteemed friend the Senator from Oregon. The secretary of that body wrote me upon the subject of the Senator's remarks which were made on the occasion of the last consideration of this bill, and in that letter he says, speaking of the Senator's objection to this section made at that time:

It is strange that this question never arose before. The Senator is mistaken if he thinks the exceptional clause originated with the druggists and manufacturers connected with the National Drug Trade Conference. As I explained yesterday, it is inherited, so to speak, from all previous legislation upon the subject and from the previous Harrison bills introduced in Congress.

I have before me a "Digest of laws and regulations in force in the United States relating to the possession, use, sale, and manufacture of poisons and habit-forming drugs," by Dr. Martin I. Wilbert and Murray Galt Motter, prepared by direction of the Surgeon General, published by the Treasury Department, and identified as Public Health Bulletin No. 56, November, 1912. I quote section 4759 of Lord's Oregon Laws, 1910, as found upon page 193 of this work. The underscoring, of course, does not appear in the original.

"It shall be unlawful for any person from and after the passage of this act to retail any of the following poisons, to wit: Arsenic and its preparations, corrosive sublimate, white precipitate, biniodide of mercury, cyanide of potassium, hydrocyanic acid, strychnine, morphine, cocaine and their combinations, and essential oil of bitter almonds, aconite, belladonna, nux vomica, oil of savin, oil of tansy, ergot, cotton root, cantharides, digitalis, and their pharmaceutical preparations, croton oil, chloroform, chloral hydrate; preparations containing opium, except paregoric and other preparations containing less than 2 grains to the ounce, and other deadly poisons, without labeling the box, vessel, or paper in which said poison is contained with the name of the article, the word 'poison,' and the name and place of business of the seller, nor shall it be lawful for any person to deliver or sell such poisons unless upon due inquiry it be found that the purchaser is aware of its poisonous character, and represents that it is to be used for legitimate purposes."

The same work indicates that Oregon has a law restricting the sale of opium except to those who present a prescription for the same, etc., that makes no mention of compounds and mixtures containing opium as do the laws of other States. Dr. Wilbert, who represented the American Medical Association at several meetings of the National Drug Trade Conference, is connected with the Public Health Service, has made a special study of State legislation, and is doubtless prepared to give yourself and Senator LANE full information upon this subject.

I find from a supplement to this volume (reprint No. 146 from Public Health Reports, dated Oct. 10 and 11, 1913) that this law was amended by omitting any reference whatever to preparations containing opium, and in the same year (1913) a law was passed controlling the sale and use of cocaine and narcotics. Dr. Wilbert's compilation does not pretend to give this narcotic law in full, but makes this remark:

"The provisions do not apply to sales at wholesale, to preparations containing less than specified quantities of the drugs, nor to the sale and compounding of remedies used for veterinary purposes and liniments."

Of course I have not the remotest desire of reflecting in the slightest degree upon the laws of the State of Oregon nor upon the sentiments of the Senator from Oregon, because the laws of the State of Oregon with reference to this subject are practically the same as those of other States, as far as my examination has gone, and in harmony with this general provision.

I continue reading:

The American Association of Pharmaceutical Chemists issue from time to time bulletins containing new laws of interest to the drug trade.

And then other extracts are given. The writer is the secretary of the association, and he adds these comments:

I wonder if Senator LANE did not have morphine in mind when he spoke. The United States Pharmacopœia gives the average dose of opium as 1½ grains.

The dose of a liquid mixture is generally 1 fluid drachm, or a teaspoonful; each teaspoonful would therefore contain about one-fourth grain opium; but, as you probably know, paregoric is dosed out by drops.

It would appear, then, that Oregon and all the States of the Union except three or four "permit the use of these drugs in soothing sirups, cough mixtures, and all kinds of dopes which can be sold by fakirs, and which are deadly to infants." There is one thing, however, that we have forgotten. The provision of the food and drugs act of June 30, 1906, which requires the content of opium to be stated upon the label has practically driven out of the market these fake preparations or compelled their proprietors to substitute some drug not required to be stated upon the label for opium, etc.

Evidently Mr. LANE does not understand the composition of the National Drug Trade Conference, for he says: "You can, no doubt, secure many indorsements from manufacturing druggists who make patent medicines, for the reason that they sell them at a profit, and they are in many patent medicines." The manufacturers represented in the National Drug Trade Conference through either the National Association of Manufacturers of Medicinal Products, of which there are 31 members (see inclosed), or the American Association of Pharmaceutical Chemists, of which there are 50 members, are not commercially interested in patent or proprietary medicines (for definitions see inclosure with my letter of yesterday), but are manufacturing purveyors to the medical profession and make only those things which are likely to be prescribed or purchased by physicians.

I doubt if there is a manufacturer represented in the National Drug Trade Conference who is not going to lose money by reason of the fact that the sale of one or more of the preparations they put out will be materially curtailed. Let me try to explain this more clearly. Some years ago Parke, Davis & Co. introduced to the medical profession a preparation that promised and proved to be of special value in the treatment of certain forms of cough. Because of its peculiar therapeutic properties it was never advertised or offered by them to the public, and Parke, Davis & Co. never expected that it would be finally dispensed otherwise than upon the prescriptions and orders of physicians. Its popular sale has exceeded all bounds without any effort or intention on their part. The sale of this preparation will be decreased 50 if not 75 per cent by the Harrison bill, due to the fact that under the operation of the Harrison law it can only be dispensed upon orders and prescriptions of physicians. But of this Parke, Davis & Co. do not complain. The other pharmaceutical manufacturers are in the same boat.

The manufacturers do not care anything about section 6, so far as it would effect sales. They feel, however, that it is going to be burdensome at best to comply with this law, and that the burden should not be increased by including a large number of items to look after that are not within the reason of the law.

The patent and proprietary medicine men have an association of their own called "The Proprietary Association of America." This association was not and is not represented in the National Drug Trade Conference. It was invited to express its views but replied, through its attorney, Mr. Harry B. Thompson, of Chicago, Ill., that it had no interest in the legislation whatever and felt it should not take part in our deliberations, even in an advisory capacity.

No doubt individually some patent or proprietary medicine concerns have petitioned respecting H. R. 6282; but I venture a statement that you are probably in position to confirm, qualify, or refute. The remonstrances from these sources have far outnumbered the petitions. It seems to me that Senator LANE will agree that he has been hastily unjust in his aspersions upon manufacturing pharmacists. He will surely concede that physicians do not prescribe opium, morphine, heroin, and cocaine from choice; that physicians would gladly accept any available substitutes that might be discovered and proved efficient and enable our legislatures to make laws absolutely prohibiting the importation and manufacture of these drugs, just as smoking opium is outlawed.

I shall only add the reflection that the requirement of this law which makes it necessary to state publicly and particularly by label the equivalent proportions of these drugs which are part of the contents of these proprietary medicines will, as is stated in this letter, very largely minimize the evils of which the Senator complains.

Mr. LANE. Mr. President, I do not wish to be considered as criticizing the manufacturing druggists; it is the fakers who manufacture these things for immediate sale and dispense them themselves.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I am satisfied the Senator did not.

Mr. LANE. Oh, no; I did not.

Mr. THOMAS. But the remarks he made upon the subject when the bill was before the Senate in June would justify that impression.

Mr. LANE. I think not. I think they have been a little bit sensitive on that. I said that anyone could manufacture these articles and sell these drugs, but what I referred to was the irresponsible persons who will manufacture them. The large manufacturing houses will not enter into that kind of business. I know that. They are all right. I have no fear of them.

With respect to the laws of Oregon, I will say to the Senator from Colorado that I am in nowise more responsible for the laws of Oregon than he is for those of Colorado. I never had any part in the making of them.

Mr. THOMAS. I did not intend to intimate that.

Mr. LANE. No; I know that; but the Senator read that quotation.

Mr. THOMAS. Pardon me a moment. I called attention specifically to the fact that the laws of Oregon upon that subject were like the laws of all the States of the Union, except about four.

Mr. LANE. I wish to say that I should like to have this bill go over until to-morrow, so that I can put in an amendment in regard to registration, forcing the people to register who sell these articles, which do take a tribute of thousands upon thousands of the lives of little children.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I can not consent to that.

Mr. LANE. Well, I object to the consideration of the bill.

Mr. McCUMBER. I hope the Senator will not object to the final disposition of this matter at this time. I want to say just one word about the idea of striking out this section. Remember that the section as it now appears is a limitation, and that by striking it out you take away the limitation and allow the sale in any quantity, in any proportion, of these particular drugs.

Let me call the Senator's attention to another matter. It is this: I do not believe the Senator would be in favor of preventing the sale of all kinds of prepared medicines in drug stores. There are a great many different kinds of pains in the human body the remedy of which is rather well known. A man has a headache. He will go to a physician, and the physician will prescribe 16 grains of antipyrin to a fluid ounce of water, and he will tell him to take a teaspoonful every half hour until the headache disappears. Now, you can get half a thousand headache medicines in the different drug stores that are put up in about that proportion, without going to a physician. By striking out this provision you will send everyone to a physician for every little ache he might have and which he might easily cure.

I appreciate the fact that the death of a great many little children has been caused by the use, perhaps, of Castoria or Mrs. Winslow's Soothing Syrup or like medicines, but I appreciate also that there are tens of thousands of people in the United States who die every year from the excessive use of cigarettes; and yet I find Senators still pulling away at the cigarette as though it were a perfectly harmless thing. I believe the Senator will agree with me that there are many thousands of people who die from what is called tobacco cancer, a cancerous growth affecting the throat from the overuse of cigars; and yet we find perhaps 60 per cent of the Senators pulling away at the cigar as unconcerned as though no one were dying as a result of these cancers.

I believe the Senator would simply compel us to go to a doctor for the alleviation of almost every known pain. There are a great many of these preparations which the physician would prescribe himself, and perhaps in nearly half of the cases in which prescriptions are written out they prescribe a prepared medicine by Parke Davis or some one else. It may contain heroin, it may contain a given amount of cocaine, a very small amount, so that one could scarcely gain the habit unless he were to take a full glassful of the medicine at one time. I believe that greater danger and greater hardship would follow if we should prevent those people from getting at the ordinary drug stand what they want for the little ordinary ills of life and compel them to go to a physician in every instance.

Mr. POMERENE. I send to the desk the following amendment.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry. I think we are proceeding under a rule which requires speeches to be limited to five minutes and under which a Senator is allowed to speak but once.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator is correct. The Chair called attention to the matter in part, and as the Chair's attention has been called to it, the rule will now be enforced.

Mr. POMERENE. In explanation of the amendment——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will allow the amendment to be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 3, line 25, and page 4, line 1, strike out the words "purchaser or person to whom such article is given" and insert "persons to whom such article is sold, bartered, exchanged, or given," so as to read:

That it shall be unlawful for any person to sell, barter, exchange, or give away any of the aforesaid drugs except in pursuance of a written order of the persons to whom such article is sold, bartered, exchanged, or given.

Mr. POMERENE. The Senate will notice that the first part of the section makes it unlawful for any person to sell, barter, exchange, or give away any of the aforesaid drugs except in pursuance of a written order from the person to whom such article is given, but it makes no requirement for a written order in case the article is bartered or exchanged. The amendment is simply in the interest of certainty and in harmony with what I am sure was the intent of the section.

Mr. THOMAS. Please let the Secretary read the section as it would read if amended.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

SEC. 2. That it shall be unlawful for any person to sell, barter, exchange, or give away any of the aforesaid drugs except in pursuance of a written order of the persons to whom such article is sold, bartered, exchanged, or given, on a form to be issued in blank for that purpose by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue.

Mr. THOMAS. Why is the word "purchaser" omitted?

Mr. POMERENE. That is included in the words "to whom such article is sold."

Mr. THOMAS. I accept the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

PUBLIC HEALTH SERVICE.

The bill (H. R. 6827) to amend an act entitled "An act to change the name of the Public Health and Marine-Hospital Service to the Public Health Service, to increase the pay of officers of said service, and for other purposes," approved August 14, 1912, was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. I have no personal interest in this bill and I would not object to its consideration, but one of the Senators has asked me to request that it go over to-day because he desires to be present when it is considered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will go over.

UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURTS.

The bill (S. 2902) to reduce fees in the United States district courts, to fix the salaries of the clerks of such courts, to increase the mileage and per diem of witnesses and jurymen therein, and to repeal section 840 of the Revised Statutes and all other conflicting laws, was announced as next in order.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I move that the bill be indefinitely postponed. The subject matter was included in the sundry civil appropriation act, and it has been finally disposed of.

The motion was agreed to.

IMPORTATION OF CONVICT-MADE GOODS.

The bill (S. 4161) to prohibit the importation and entry of goods, wares, and merchandise made in whole or in part by convict, pauper, or detained labor, or made in whole or in part from materials which have been made in whole or in part or in any manner manipulated by convict or prison labor, was announced as next in order.

Mr. VARDAMAN. The bill was reported by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED], who is not in the Chamber. I suggest that it go over temporarily.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

POSTAL SAVINGS DEPOSITORIES.

The bill (H. R. 9318) to amend the act approved June 25, 1910, entitled "An act to establish postal savings depositories for depositing savings at interest with the security of the Government for repayment thereof, and for other purposes," was announced as next in order.

Mr. McCUMBER. That is an important measure, and it ought to go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will go over.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Does the Senator insist on that? It is a matter the committee has carefully considered and the Post Office Department are very anxious that it should be passed. It merely abolishes the stamp and——

Mr. McCUMBER. It struck me that a bill of this vast importance ought not to be passed with the limited number now in the Senate Chamber. I know it was opposed by those who had made a study of the question when it was before the Senate on a former occasion. I have not been informed that the differences have been settled. Under those circumstances it seems to me the bill ought to go over.

Mr. SMOOT. Allow me to ask the Senator from Mississippi if he knows whether the objections of the Senator from Kansas [Mr. BRISTOW] were withdrawn to the provisions of the bill?

Mr. VARDAMAN. I do not know whether he has withdrawn his objections or not. It is the purpose of the bill to change the law so as to prevent the necessity for using special stamps in correspondence transmitting through the mails matter relating to the Postal Savings System.

Mr. McCUMBER. I think the bill had better go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from North Dakota repeats his objection, and the bill has gone over.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Of course I have no personal interest in the matter, except that the department is very anxious it shall be passed.

Mr. McCUMBER. As far as I am concerned, I confess I do not know enough about the conditions or the present status of the matter. So I make the objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill has gone over.

PUBLIC HEALTH SERVICE.

The bill (S. 2616) to promote the efficiency of the Public Health Service was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Public Health and National Quarantine, with amendments, in section 2, page 2, line 8, after the word "That," to strike out "a vacancy in the grade of Surgeon General shall be filled by appointment by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, from among the commissioned medical officers in the grade of senior surgeon or surgeon, and"; in section 3, page 2, line 23, after the word "Service," to strike out "and" and insert "be appointed by"; in line 24, after the word "Treasury," to strike out "be commissioned by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate"; on page 3, line 5, after the word "the," to strike out "President may commission, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate," and insert "Secretary of the Treasury may appoint"; in line 11, after the word "appointed," to strike out "unless recommended by the Surgeon General and the Secretary of the Treasury" and insert "until"; in line 13, after the word "examination," to strike out "as being fully qualified" and insert "to be conducted under the direction of the Surgeon General of the Public Health Service, to determine their fitness"; so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That hereafter when commissioned medical officers of the Public Health Service on the active list are not provided quarters they shall receive in lieu of same commutation therefor at the rate of $12 per room per month, as follows: Surgeon General, eight rooms; Assistant Surgeon General, seven rooms; senior surgeon, six rooms; surgeon, five rooms; passed assistant surgeon, four rooms; assistant surgeon, three rooms; and shall receive commutation for necessary fuel and lights for the same at rates to be fixed by the Secretary of the Treasury: Provided, That officers while serving beyond the continental limits of the United States or on sea duty shall receive an additional 10 per cent of their salaries and increase while on such duty.

The allowance for baggage and personal effects to an officer in changing stations shall be fixed by the Secretary of the Treasury, not to exceed in any case 7,200 pounds.

SEC. 2. That the term of office of the Surgeon General shall be for a period of four years, at the expiration of which term he shall, unless reappointed, be carried as an extra officer in the grade of senior surgeon. Assistant surgeons shall be promoted to the grade of passed assistant surgeon in the order of seniority at the expiration of three years' commissioned service and after satisfactory examination.

SEC. 3. That the chiefs of the Divisions of Zoology, Pharmacology, and Chemistry in the Hygienic Laboratory may, upon the recommendation of the Surgeon General of the Public Health Service, be appointed by the Secretary of the Treasury as professors of zoology, pharmacology, and chemistry, respectively, of the Public Health Service, and they shall be entitled to leaves of absence as now provided by law for the commissioned medical officers of the Public Health Service: Provided, That the Secretary of the Treasury may appoint five additional professors in the Public Health Service, who shall be entitled to the same leaves of absence, pay, and allowances as are the commissioned medical officers in the grade of senior surgeon: Provided further, That said additional professors shall not be appointed until after satisfactory examination, to be conducted under the direction of the Surgeon General of the Public Health Service, to determine their fitness for special work in sanitary engineering, epidemiology, pathology, bacteriology, housing, or other matters that relate to the propagation and spread of diseases of man.

The amendments were agreed to.

Mr. SMOOT. I have a number of amendments to offer to the bill. I will state that I have discussed the amendments with the Senator having the bill in charge, and I understand that they are satisfactory to him and also to those who are interested in this legislation. I will also say that the amendments to section 1 that I shall offer are to conform with the bill that was passed some two years ago and went to the House for consideration and failed of passage.

The first amendment that I offer is on page 1, line 7, to strike out the word "eight" and insert the word "six" before "rooms," so as to read "six rooms."

Mr. RANSDELL. There is no objection to that amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SMOOT. In line 8, before the word "rooms," I move to strike out "seven" and insert "six."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SMOOT. In the same line I move to strike out "six" and insert "five," so as to read, "five rooms."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SMOOT. On page 2, line 25, I move to strike out the words "professors of zoology, pharmacology, and chemistry," respectively, and insert the word "officers," so that it will read:

Be appointed by the Secretary of the Treasury as officers of the Public Health Service.

Mr. RANSDELL. There is no objection to that amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SMOOT. On page 3, line 7, I move to strike out the word "professors" and insert the word "officers," so as to read:

Five additional officers in the Public Health Service.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SMOOT. Beginning with line 9, I move to strike out the words "pay and allowance as are the commissioned medical officers in the grade of senior surgeon" and to insert: "and each shall receive a salary of $4,000 per annum."

Mr. RANSDELL. I have no objection to that amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SMOOT. On page 3, line 11, I move to strike out the word "professors" and insert the word "officers," so as to read:

That said additional officers shall not be appointed—

And so forth.

Mr. RANSDELL. There is no objection to that amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SADDLE MOUNTAIN NATIONAL PARK, OREG.

The bill (S. 531) to set apart certain lands in the State of Oregon as a public park, to be known as the Saddle Mountain National Park, was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. At the request of a Senator, I ask that the bill may go over for the present.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will go over.

S. W. LANGHORNE AND ESTATE OF H. S. HOWELL.

The bill (S. 2334) for the relief of S. W. Langhorne and the legal representatives of H. S. Howell was announced as next in order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. This bill formerly had consideration as in Committee of the Whole.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill. It proposes to pay to S. W. Langhorne and the legal representatives of H. S. Howell, of Helena, Mont., $1,568, being the amount paid by them for rent of the building used by the United States for a land office at Helena, Mont., from November, 1885, up to and including June, 1900, a period of 56 months, at $28 per month.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

RADIUM-BEARING ORES.

The bill (S. 4405) to provide for and encourage the prospecting, mining, and treatment of radium-bearing ores in lands belonging to the United States, for the purpose of securing an adequate supply of radium for Government and other hospitals in the United States, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Let that go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will go over.

REGULATION OF IMMIGRATION.

The bill (H. R. 6060) to regulate the immigration of aliens to and the residence of aliens in the United States was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. I hardly think that bill could be considered to-day.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will go over.

OMNIBUS CLAIMS BILL.

The bill (H. R. 8846) making appropriation for payment of certain claims in accordance with findings of the Court of Claims, reported under the provisions of the acts approved March 3, 1883, and March 3, 1887, and commonly known as the Bowman and the Tucker Acts, and under the provisions of section 151 of the act approved March 3, 1911, commonly known as the Judicial Code, was announced as next in order.

Mr. BURTON. That is a measure too elaborate to take up at this time.

Mr. BRYAN. I wish to make a statement to the Senator from Ohio, and then I think he will consent to consider the bill now or let it be passed temporarily and come back to it later in the day.

The bill was passed by the House of Representatives and reported to the Senate in December, 1913. It was shortly thereafter referred to a subcommittee of three, consisting of the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON], the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. GOFF], and myself, as chairman of the committee. We went over each item contained in the House bill. We were very glad to have the assistance of the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. GOFF] and the benefit of his long judicial experience in passing upon the items. There is not an item contained in the bill that has not been passed upon by the Court of Claims. There is not an item contained in the bill about which there is any question either as to the loyalty of the claimant or as to the reasonableness of the amount stated in the bill.

The bill was reported to the full committee, and my recollection is that practically every member of the committee was present, and the bill after consideration was reported to the Senate by the unanimous vote of the entire Committee on Claims, with the exception that the Senator from Kansas [Mr. BRISTOW] reserved the right to oppose it, if he saw fit. My understanding is since that he does not desire to oppose it.

I wish to say to the Senator from Ohio that it is the first claims bill, I believe, that has ever received the unanimous indorsement of the Committee on Claims, which is indicative of the fact that the bill has in it no claims that have not been passed upon by the court and that do not meet with the approval of the members of both parties after a full and thorough investigation.

The bill was reported to the Senate in March. This is August. We have had many meetings to consider the calendar by unanimous consent, and because of the length of the bill I have not felt that it would be proper to call it up. I do not know of anybody who desires to discuss it. The chief difficulty is in having it read, I apprehend. I am willing to have it go over temporarily, but I should like to have it considered during this day.

Let me say also to the Senator from Ohio that there is in the bill nothing but war claims or claims growing out of the war. There are two other classes of claims known as the longevity pay claims and overtime navy-yard cases that have also been reported.

At one time or another either the Senate or the House has passed every one of these items except the very few which have been reported by the Court of Claims since Congress has had an opportunity to act upon them. I should say that 98 per cent of the items incorporated in the bill have had the approval of both the Senate and the House, but not during the same session, and therefore the bill has heretofore failed. The session is drawing to a close. I do not know that we will have another opportunity to present the bill for the consideration of the Senate.

It is a matter of considerable work to go over a bill containing 1,200 or 1,500 items. That work has been done. It was done by the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. CRAWFORD], who was chairman of the committee during the last Congress. It takes two or three months to go through the bill and it is hardly fair to these claimants, who have met every test and convinced the court and the committees of the justice of their claims, not to allow the bill to be considered because of its extreme length.

If the Senator from Ohio will be willing to go through the calendar and then return to this and the other omnibus claims bills reported by the Committee on Claims I would appreciate it very much. In that way there would be no impediment to the consideration of the other bills on the calendar.

Mr. BURTON. Mr. President, I do not say definitely that I would object if we could finish the calendar, but it seems to me this is not at all the kind of a measure which it was intended should be considered to-day. There are 131 pages of the bill, and in glancing over it I see that the number of claims to a page must aggregate eight to a dozen. There are over a thousand claims in this bill. Undoubtedly it will lead to some considerable amount of discussion. So I must for the present object; but I do not say definitely that I will object after the calendar shall be finished, though I am inclined for the present to do so.

Mr. BRYAN. I am willing that the bill shall be passed over temporarily with the understanding that we shall come back to it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over temporarily.

PURCHASE OF MONTICELLO.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 120) creating a joint committee of Congress and authorizing said committee to acquire, by purchase or condemnation, the property known as Monticello, and embracing the former home of Thomas Jefferson and the family graveyard in which his remains were interred, with such lands and grounds appurtenant thereto as the committee shall find necessary in order to carry out the various public objects and purposes in said resolution set forth, all of said property being located in Albemarle County, Va., was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. While I am in favor of the joint resolution, I know there are a number of Senators who want to discuss it who are not present. For that reason only I ask that the joint resolution may go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The joint resolution will go over.

HIGHWAY-IMPROVEMENT WORK.

The bill (S. 3545) to provide for the highway-improvement work by the United States Department of Agriculture in cooperation with the highway departments of the several States was announced as next in order.

Mr. WHITE. At the suggestion of the senior Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS] I ask that the bill may go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

COST OF LIVING IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 93) authorizing and directing the Department of Labor to make an inquiry into the cost of living in the District of Columbia and to report thereon to Congress as early as practicable was announced as next in order.

Mr. BRYAN. I observe by the papers that the grand jury here is conducting such an investigation, and perhaps it will not be necessary for us to expend the money to carry out the purpose in view. Therefore I ask that the joint resolution may go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The joint resolution will go over.

HYGEIA HOTEL PROPERTY.

The resolution (S. Res. 313) referring to the Court of Claims the bill (S. 1495) to compensate the Old Point Improvement Co. for the demolition and removal of the Hygeia Hotel property from the Government reservation at Old Point, Va., was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Allow me to ask a question first. I have not had time to read the resolution. Does it provide for an appropriation or does it authorize the finding of facts?

Mr. BRYAN. I think it is for the finding of facts.

Mr. SMOOT. Let it be passed temporarily.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There is no appropriation stated in the resolution, the Chair will state.

Mr. SMOOT. If it only authorizes the court to report the findings of fact I have no objection to it.

The resolution was agreed to.

COAL LANDS IN ALASKA.

The bill (S. 4425) to provide for the leasing of coal lands in the Territory of Alaska, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. PITTMAN. This is the bill known as the coal-leasing bill for Alaska. I trust no Senator will object to the consideration of it. There seems to be an urgent need for that coal. The telegrams we are receiving indicate that the coal supply from British Columbia will probably be cut off on the Pacific coast in the very near future, and that makes the Alaska coal more needful.

This bill has been considered in the Committees on Public Lands of both Houses. It has been carefully considered, and I believe it was reported practically without objection.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President——

Mr. PITTMAN. I insist that it may be allowed to come up at this time. I ask to have the telegram which I send to the desk read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The telegram will be read, as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

CORDOVA, ALASKA, August 12, 1914.

Hon. KEY PITTMAN, Washington, D. C.:

British Columbia coal Alaska's only supply. Liable to be withheld any day. Can't you give us legislative assistance opening our coal?

CORDOVA CHAMBER OF COMMERCE.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, as indicative of the concern the people of Alaska feel over the existing condition of affairs, I will state to the Senate that there was sent me a like telegram. I also add to the urgent request of the Senator from Nevada my own that we proceed to the consideration of this measure.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, I feel that the discussion of this question involves the question of a leasing system for the entire Government, and that is going to take several days in order to get through with it. We could not consider it under the five-minute rule for debate.

I will state that under the laws of the United States at the present time the coal laws apply to Alaska. A man has the right to locate upon 160 acres of land containing coal without entering into any lease whatever. For that reason, it seems to me, that urgency can not exist; but even if the emergency exists, there is the great fundamental question as to whether we are going to make tenants of our people or whether we are going to make independent, loyal citizens of them.

I therefore can not consent to the discussion of this bill under any five-minute rule.

Mr. WALSH. Before the Senator from Colorado insists upon an objection of that character I feel like saying to him that all the coal lands of Alaska are withdrawn from entry.

Mr. SHAFROTH. The Government can open them in just a minute.

Mr. WALSH. They have been withdrawn for the purposes of classification under the provisions of the law. There is no law, the Senator ought to know, and doubtless does know, by which any man can to-day take up an acre of coal land in Alaska.

Mr. SHAFROTH. It is all within——

Mr. WALSH. I wish to say further that we have passed the Alaskan bill for the construction of railways in Alaska. We have charged the President of the United States with the undertaking of that great piece of constructive work. He himself said that it would be one of the great achievements he hoped of his administration. The Senator from Colorado must recognize that you can not turn a wheel in that work until the coal lands of Alaska are opened up to appropriation.

The Senator from Colorado does not certainly expect that that great work is going to be carried on by means of power supplied by oil carried from Colorado or coal imported from the Province of British Columbia. Accordingly, sir, all of that beneficent work is interrupted and held up.

Now, the people of Alaska are confronted with this situation: With limitless deposits of coal at their very door, they are denied the opportunity to take any of that coal. They have been obliged to rely to protect them against the rigors of their winter climate upon the coal from the neighboring Province of British Columbia, and they are now in hourly dread that for the purposes of war that supply will be shut off. The Senator stands here opposing the bill upon the academic proposition that the States have certain rights; but let me say to him——

Mr. SHAFROTH. I am opposing it upon the ground that it should not be considered under the five-minute rule. I will ask the Senator whether he thinks the bill ought to be considered under a unanimous-consent rule?

Mr. WALSH. I very cheerfully say to the Senator from Colorado that if I felt there was any hope of getting consideration for this measure at any other time during the present session I would not think of insisting upon its consideration now. But I ask the Senator from Colorado whether he thinks, in view of the important legislation which engages this body in its ordinary sessions, we may hope to have consideration for this measure at this session? The Senator knows that an objection now will absolutely defeat this measure for this session.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, I regard this as one of the greatest questions before the American Congress. I regard the question of fastening a leasing system upon this Government as fraught with consequences too momentous to be even considered under Rule VIII, under which we are now proceeding, which limits speeches to five minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Colorado insist upon his objection?

Mr. SHAFROTH. I want to say to the Senator that it is all within the power of the Interior Department to waive these classifications and to permit entries under the coal-land laws. The policy which was inaugurated six or seven years ago of withdrawing those lands and withdrawing other lands of the United States was for the purpose of forcing a leasing system upon the people of the West, and that I do not believe is right.

Mr. SMOOT. Regular order!

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The regular order having been demanded, the Chair will ask if the Senator from Colorado insists upon his objection?

Mr. SHAFROTH. I will ask that the bill go over, because I can not consent to argue it within five minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill goes over under objection.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I merely wish to make a suggestion in reference to the bill which has just gone over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill has gone over.

Mr. JONES. I understand that it has gone over, but I only desire to occupy a few moments to make a suggestion.

I wish to say that I do not think there is any more important proposition which can come before Congress than the one involved in the bill last under consideration; there is nothing much more urgent; in fact, I think it is far more important, and would be of far more greater benefit to the people of this country, than the legislation which it is proposed to force through this Congress; and I hope that the Senator from Montana will use every effort in his power to bring this bill up for consideration before this Congress adjourns at a time when it can be considered, and that he will urge its passage. I know that he is just as much interested in this matter as am I; but I do not believe that Congress could spend its time in any more important legislation than the legislation involved in the bill. I simply want to express the hope that the Senator will endeavor at some other time to get this bill up, and, if possible, to get it made the unfinished business and let us put it through.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I want to say that this is a very good illustration of the objection which I expressed yesterday without making it. Whenever a matter comes up which is of any public importance, there is objection to its consideration because it will take a little time perhaps to discuss it; but when matters come up which are of no importance at all, or rather which are merely important to individual Senators, they go through without objection.

Mr. SMOOT. We have passed the very bill which the Senator from Mississippi said on yesterday he was afraid we would not consider.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I know that; but I am talking about the bill to which the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES] just referred.

Mr. SMOOT. But this bill could not be passed if we discussed it all day.

Mr. WILLIAMS. And because of the failure to pass it the whole Pacific slope is destined to suffer for coal pretty soon. I am just as much opposed as is anybody to a general leasing system of this sort.

Mr. SHAFROTH. The Interior Department can open these lands to entry in 10 minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The matter has gone over and is not open to debate.

EXPENDITURES ON RIVERS AND HARBORS.

The resolution (S. Res. 312) requesting of the Secretary of War information as to expenditures upon harbors, rivers, and canals of the United States by the Government since the adoption of the Constitution was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, the information asked for by that resolution was intended to be considered in connection with the bill to repeal the tolls-exemption clause of the Panama Canal act. That act has passed, and I will ask that the resolution go over under Rule IX.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the resolution will go over under Rule IX.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN subsequently said: Mr. President, a while ago the Senate passed over Calendar No. 319, being Senate resolution 312. I desire to move its indefinite postponement, because subsequent to the presentation of the resolution another resolution was passed which elicited the information which was sought by this resolution.

Mr. SMOOT. I have asked that it go over under Rule IX.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I ask that it be indefinitely postponed.

The VICE PRESIDENT. In the absence of objection, Senate resolution 312 will be indefinitely postponed.

CENSUS ENUMERATION OF TULSA, OKLA.

The bill (S. 4601) to authorize the Director of the Census to enumerate the population of the city of Tulsa, State of Oklahoma, was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Let that go over, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Being objected to, the bill goes over.

EXPERT ASSISTANCE FOR BANKING AND CURRENCY COMMITTEE.

The resolution (S. Res. 318) authorizing the Committee on Banking and Currency to employ expert assistance in drafting a bill relating to rural credits was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I will ask the Senator from Mississippi if this resolution was not reported when we were considering the currency bill?

Mr. WILLIAMS. No; this is in connection with a bill providing for rural credits. The committee are taking up the question of rural credits, and they want experts to help them in that work.

Mr. SMOOT. Has the Senator from Mississippi inquired as to whether the committee really needs the expert help now?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I think they do, because I consider the work of the experts they had in connection with the banking and currency legislation over with; and I would not be willing to let those accounts be allowed after the work was done. They were allowed for a certain purpose, and that purpose has been accomplished.

Mr. SMOOT. Does the Senator think that the proposed investigation will be made during the remainder of this session?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I am not sure whether the investigation is to be made at this session or at the next session. The committee have been already making, to some extent, an investigation of the matter, as the Senator knows.

Mr. SMOOT. I certainly think they have. They have had enough matter printed to inform all the world as to the rural-credit systems of every country on earth. I do not see why we should go to the expense of securing any more information.

Mr. WILLIAMS. There is a good deal in that; but the Committee on Banking and Currency, of which committee, by the way, I am not a member, are of the opinion that they need this expert assistance in connection with drafting and coordinating and indexing and various other things, and I think the resolution ought to go through.

Mr. SMOOT. I understand the bill has already been prepared, and I know that, so far as information is concerned, the committee has collected it from all over the world. I can not see why extra help should be authorized. I ask, therefore, that the resolution go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under objection, the resolution goes over.

BUSINESS PASSED OVER.

The concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 21) authorizing the printing of additional copies of Senate Document No. 147 (57th Cong., 2d sess.), "Bills and debates in Congress on trusts," was announced as next in order.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Let that resolution go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution goes over.

The resolution (S. Res. 305) to print a pamphlet entitled "The Power of the Federal Judiciary to Declare Legislation Invalid which Conflicts with the Federal Constitution," by David K. Watson, as a Senate document, was announced as next in order.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Let that go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution will be passed over.

Mr. BURTON. Mr. President, that resolution has been on the calendar for a long while, and it could be disposed of in a moment. I think we ought to dispose of such resolutions either favorably or unfavorably. They involve the mere question of printing documents. This resolution has been on the calendar since the 28th day of March last. We should dispose of it at some time, and it will take us a very short time to do so.

Mr. WILLIAMS. My objection to taking up this resolution is that I shall vote against it if it is taken up. Therefore I object to its consideration. I do not see any sense in publishing as Senate documents pamphlets written by everybody.

The resolution (S. Res. 322) relative to illiteracy among Jewish immigrants and its causes was announced as next in order.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Let that go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution will be passed over.

The bill (S. 4843) to amend section 4 of the act entitled "An act to provide for a permanent Census Office," approved March 6, 1902, was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I should like to ask if there is present any member of the committee from which this bill is reported who can state what changes are proposed to be made in the existing law? I wish to say that appropriations have already been made to provide for the Census Bureau, and I think if there is no Senator here who can tell what changes are proposed we had better allow this bill to go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There being objection, the bill goes over.

The resolution (S. Res. 320) for the printing of an address by Lewis Jerome Johnson before the First National Conference on Popular Government upon "The preferential ballot as a possible substitute for the direct primary," was announced as next in order.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I ask that that go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution goes over.

MINE RESCUE CAR.

The bill (S. 4891) to provide for the purchase and equipment of a mine rescue car, and for other purposes, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Mines and Mining with an amendment, on page 1, line 5, after the word "fields," to strike out "in Arkansas and Oklahoma," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed to purchase and equip a mine rescue car for advancing mine safety work in the southwestern coal fields with headquarters at Fort Smith, Ark.; and there is hereby authorized to be appropriated for the purchase and equipment of such car the sum of $10,000, and for the operation and maintenance of said car during the fiscal year 1915 the sum of $16,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

COAL AND MINERAL DEPOSITS IN INDIAN LANDS.

The bill (S. 587) relating to the disposal of coal and mineral deposits in Indian lands, was announced as next in order.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, if the Senator having that bill in charge will agree to strike out the words "or from the leasing or working thereof," in lines 10 and 11, I shall have no objection to its consideration. Otherwise, I ask that the bill go over.

Mr. STONE. The Senator reporting the bill is not present.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under objection, the bill goes over.

Mr. GRONNA subsequently said:

Mr. President, I was called out of the Chamber a moment ago when Order of Business 345, being Senate bill 587, was reached. I understand that some Senator objected to the consideration of that bill.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I will state to the Senator from North Dakota that I objected to it unless a certain amendment, which I indicated, were made. I will ask the Senator to look at line 10 and advise me whether or not he can consent to strike out the words "or from the leasing or working thereof." If the Senator will agree to that amendment, then I will have no objection whatever to the consideration of the bill.

Mr. GRONNA. Will the Senator please repeat his suggestion?

Mr. SHAFROTH. I desire to strike out, beginning in line 10, the word "or from the leasing or working thereof." If the Senator will strike those works out, leaving the bill otherwise intact—it is not dependent upon those words—I shall be perfectly willing to have the bill acted upon; but I regard all these references to leasing as establishing by the Government a policy of leasing to which I am absolutely opposed, and I do not want it taken up unless it can have full and careful consideration. I do not desire to obstruct or oppose the passage of measures, but I want time to consider such important questions, and under the five-minute rule it is impossible to do so.

Mr. GRONNA. I will say, Mr. President, that this bill does not establish a leasing system; but I simply, as a precautionary measure, put those words in. I have no real objection, however, to striking them out.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Then I shall at the proper time move that the bill be amended by striking those words out.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 587) relating to the disposal of coal and mineral deposits in Indian lands, which had been reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs with amendments, on page 1, in line 6, after the word "disposition," to strike out "such" and insert "the"; in line 7, after the word "reservation," to insert "of such coal and other minerals"; in line 8, after the words "of the," to strike out "Indians" and insert "Indian tribe or tribes"; in line 9, after the word "such," to strike out "lands" and insert "Indian reservation"; and in line 11, after the word "thereof," to insert "as may be determined by law," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That where the coal or other minerals contained in any lands embraced in any Indian reservation which have been opened to settlement and entry, or shall hereafter be opened to settlement and entry, have been reserved from disposition, the reservation of such coal and other minerals shall inure to the benefit of the Indian tribe or tribes to whom such Indian reservation belonged, and all proceeds arising from the disposal of such coal or mineral deposits or from the leasing or working thereof, as may be determined by law, shall be deposited in the Treasury of the United States and shall be applied in the same manner as the proceeds derived from the disposal of the lands contained in the reservation within which such coal or mineral deposits are located.

The amendments were agreed to.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I now move to amend the bill on page 1, line 10, after the word "deposits," by striking out the words "or from the leasing or the working thereof."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Colorado.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

WOMAN SUFFRAGE.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 130) proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States was announced as next in order.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Let that go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The joint resolution will be passed over.

GENEVA ARBITRATION EXPENSES.

The bill (S. 3002) making appropriation for expenses incurred under the treaty of Washington was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides for the reappropriation of the unexpended balance of the appropriation for expenses incurred under the treaty of Washington, being the sum of $831.59, together with the further sum of $668.41, to enable the Secretary of State to pay to any secretary to the counsel of the United States, as remuneration for services rendered by him in the preparation and trial of the case of the United States at Geneva, such sum, if any, as remains due and unpaid of the amount directed by Secretary Fish to be allowed as compensation to each of the secretaries to the counsel of the United States.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, might I ask for information whence this bill comes? What committee, if any, has reported it and who are the beneficiaries?

Mr. BURTON. The bill was reported from the Committee on Foreign Relations. I was directed to report it on behalf of that committee. It proposes to pay $1,500 as compensation for services rendered as secretary to Mr. Caleb Cushing in the Geneva award. The amount is made up of $831.59, an unexpended balance of an appropriation, and the further sum of $668.41, making in all $1,500.

Each of the other secretaries to our American counsel, Mr. Waite and Mr. Evarts, received $3,000, while Mr. Hackett received only $1,500. The committee thought that it was fair to him that he should receive the same compensation as the others. A memorandum was filed by the State Department justifying that course in regard to the matter. There can be no question that the services were of a very valuable nature.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

Mr. LEWIS. Has the matter received attention on the part of the Senator from Ohio and the Senator from Utah?

Mr. BURTON. I was instructed by the Committee on Foreign Relations to report the bill favorably, after a somewhat extended discussion.

Mr. SMOOT. I will say to the Senator from Illinois that this matter has been before Congress for many years. It has been before the Claims Committee, but I do not believe that there has ever been a favorable report from that committee.

As I understand, the amount paid to Mr. Hackett was the amount which had been agreed upon with him originally. I have not the facts in detail in my mind now, Mr. President, because I never thought the matter would come before the Senate again and I dismissed them from my mind, but I know that when the details were at hand the impression I had at the time was that the claim was not a just claim and should not be paid.

Mr. BURTON. The Committee on Foreign Relations held this opinion in regard to it: The other secretaries who had performed no more valuable services and showed no greater degree of ability and industry received $3,000. The attorney for the United States to whom Mr. Hackett was especially assigned, Mr. Caleb Cushing, filed no receipts, while the other attorneys did. I think there is no possible aspersion on his honesty; I would not under any circumstances wish to say anything in disparagement of an attorney of so high standing, but he did not pay—that is conceded—to Mr. Hackett more than $1,500. It is thought that he employed some other secretaries outside, but, be that as it may, Mr. Hackett labored in the preparation of the briefs and did very substantial work in connection with this arbitration, which was one of the most successful arbitrations ever conducted on behalf of any country. While the Committee on Foreign Relations recognize that the matter has been pending for some time and is an old claim, the bill was reported, as I recollect, unanimously.

Mr. SMOOT. Of course, Mr. President, this is purely a claim bill, and it ought to have gone to the Committee on Claims, where it has been many, many times. I want to ask the Senator from Ohio if I am not correct in stating that Mr. Hackett was paid every dollar which it had been agreed he should receive before he accepted the position as secretary to the counsel of the United States?

Mr. BURTON. I am not sure but that that is the case. However, when he entered upon this service there was no assurance as to the length of time he would be employed or as to the value or the extent of his services. Of course, everyone knows that a lawyer in a successful litigation feels entitled to somewhat more generous compensation than he would have received if he had been unsuccessful. As I understand, in entering on this service the understanding with all the secretaries was that they were to receive $1,500, but later an apportionment of $3,000 was made for secretarial services and the other two secretaries received that amount.

Mr. SMOOT. It is only another instance, Mr. President, of the evil that grows out of appropriations for conventions to be held on this subject and that subject in some foreign country. Of late we have made no appropriations whatever for such purposes, but just so soon as the delegates return from the conventions, then there is a claim of some kind made here and we are almost compelled to pay it, because of the fact that we have authorized the holding of the convention.

Mr. BURTON. It was not a convention at all, but an international lawsuit, and perhaps the most important one that was ever conducted.

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; I understand that to be true. I only cite this instance by way of comparison, but so far as the Government of the United States is concerned, it does not owe Mr. Hackett a cent.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, is this bill up for consideration?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is being considered as in Committee of the Whole, and objection can be made.

Mr. BORAH. I thought some Senator made objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection has not as yet been made.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ST. CROIX CHIPPEWA INDIANS OF WISCONSIN.

The bill (S. 4857) for the relief of the St. Croix Chippewa Indians of Wisconsin was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It directs the Secretary of the Interior to cause an investigation to be made of the condition and tribal rights of the so-called St. Croix Chippewa Indians now residing in the counties of Polk, Burnett, Washburn, and Douglas, State of Wisconsin, and said to be in a destitute condition, and to ascertain and report to Congress at the beginning of its next session whether the said Indians belong to the Lake Superior Chippewas of Wisconsin or to the Chippewas of Minnesota; what tribal rights, if any, they have with any band or tribe of Chippewa Indians residing in either Minnesota or Wisconsin; what benefits in land and money they would have received had they removed to a reservation in Wisconsin or had not been excluded from enrollment and allotment with the Chippewa Indians of Minnesota under the provisions of the act approved January 14, 1889 (25 Stat. L., p. 642). It also directs the Secretary of the Interior to cause a census and enrollment to be made of the St. Croix Chippewas and to report their actual condition and needs, with such recommendation for their relief as he may deem necessary. It also proposes to appropriate for the purpose of making the investigation and enrollment and for the immediate relief of such of the Indians as are now in need of food, clothing, medicines, and other supplies, $25,000.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

REVISION OF PUBLIC PRINTING LAWS.

The bill (S. 5340) to amend, revise, and codify the laws relating to the public printing and binding and the distribution of Government publications was announced as next in order.

Mr. OWEN. I ask that the bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I should like to inquire who objected to consideration of the printing bill?

Mr. OWEN. It is a very long bill, and it will arouse discussion, and therefore I think it had better go over.

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; if it will arouse discussion, but I did not think that it would.

Mr. OWEN. Oh, yes; it will.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is made, and the bill goes over.

CLAIMS OF SHOSHONE INDIANS OF WYOMING.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 5036) authorizing the Shoshone Tribe of Indians residing on the Wind River Reservation in Wyoming to submit claims to the Court of Claims.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment reported by the committee was agreed to when the bill was under consideration on July 9. Unless there is objection the bill will be reported to the Senate as amended.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS PASSED OVER.

The bill (S. 1991) correcting the military record of Abraham Johnson was announced as next in order.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, at the request of the senior Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS] I ask that that bill go over, and also the one next in order on the calendar.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. In the absence of objection, Senate bill 1991 and Senate bill 1988 will be passed over.

CAPT. TEMPLIN M. POTTS, UNITED STATES NAVY.

The bill (S. 3804) for relief of Templin Morris Potts, captain on the retired list of the United States Navy, was announced as next in order.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. President, the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. CHILTON] reported that bill from the Committee on Naval Affairs. The report was a favorable one by a majority of one. So far as I am concerned I am willing to have the bill considered now and disposed of, because I believe that the Senate will defeat the bill whenever it comes to a vote. I hardly think, however, that it would be fair to the Senator from West Virginia to act upon it in his absence, although I do not ask that it go over. I think in five minutes I can explain to the Senate my position on the bill if it is desired to take it up.

Mr. STONE. Let the bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

MUSKOGEE (CREEK) NATION OF INDIANS, OKLAHOMA.

The bill (S. 5392) to provide for carrying into effect the agreement between the United States and the Muskogee (Creek) Nation of Indians ratified by act of Congress approved March 1, 1901, and supplemental agreement of June 30, 1902, and other laws and treaties with said tribe of Indians, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs with amendments, on page 2, line 22, after the word "Nation," to insert "and any other Creek lands in townships 11 and 12 north, range 6 east, that may have been erroneously taken and disposed of by the United States," and on page 3, line 23, after "$15,000," to insert "in each case," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That to carry into effect the agreement between the United States and the Muskogee (Creek) Nation of Indians ratified by act of Congress approved March 1, 1901 (31 Stats., p. 861), and the supplemental agreement of June 30, 1902 (32 Stats., p. 500), and other laws and treaties providing for a minimum allotment to each Creek citizen whose name has been placed on the roll by the Government of the United States under authority of said agreements and laws, of the standard value of $1,040; and in order that the claim of said citizens of the Creek Nation who have received allotments in land and money of a less value than the standard allotment of 160 acres of the standard value of $1,040 might be determined and finally adjudicated, jurisdiction is hereby conferred upon the Court of Claims, with right of appeal as in other cases, to hear, determine, and render final judgment against the United States for such amount, if any, as may be found due by the United States, and as may be necessary to equalize all of such allotments up to the treaty standard value of allotments of $1,040; also to hear, determine, and render final judgment, with right of appeal as herein provided, in the matter of the claim of the Muskogee (Creek) Nation against the United States based on alleged errors in the survey of the boundary of said nation, and any other Creek lands in townships 11 and 12 north, range 6 east, that may have been erroneously taken and disposed of by the United States, and the actions herein authorized may be brought in the name of the Muskogee (Creek) Nation and against the United States. Said suits shall be begun by petitions filed within six months after the approval of this act, which petitions shall be verified by the principal chief of said nation or the national attorney for said nation, and said suit or suits shall be prosecuted by the national attorney for the Creek Nation and by attorney or attorneys, if any, employed by said nation or tribe, or its duly authorized representatives or individual members of said tribe, to prosecute said claims: Provided, That no attorney shall be authorized to represent said nation, or individual members of said nation, by reason of any contract or agreement made with the tribe or members thereof unless such contract of employment shall have been, subsequent to the passage of this act, approved by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs and the Secretary of the Interior: And provided further, That in the event of the employment of additional attorneys, as herein set out, the said attorney or attorneys shall not be paid out of any funds now to the credit of the Creek Nation, but his or their fee shall be fixed by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs and the Secretary of the Interior after final judgment, but in no event to exceed $15,000 in each case, and in event of a recovery shall then be taxed and paid as other costs of the actions in which such attorney or attorneys may be authorized to appear.

The money accruing under any judgment or judgments rendered under this act shall be distributed by the Secretary of the Interior to the persons entitled to participate therein under such rules and regulations as he may prescribe, payment to minors and restricted Indians to be subject to the conditions affecting the payments of funds derived from the sale of restricted lands. To effect a speedy settlement of the affairs of the Creek Nation said suits shall be advanced for hearing by the Court of Claims, and by the Supreme Court if the same shall be appealed.

The amendments were agreed to.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN], who, I understand, reported this bill, if the action of the committee was unanimous?

Mr. OWEN. I do not recall whether it was or not, but I think the report was unanimous.

Mr. SMOOT. I also notice there is no report from the department as to their opinion of the measure, and I wondered whether there had been such a report and whether the action of the committee was unanimous.

Mr. OWEN. I can state in just a moment what the facts are. The United States made a treaty with the Creeks promising them $1,040 per capita as the result of the disposition of certain land, that being its estimated value. Afterwards the Government used a part of the lands to give allotments to some additional Indians who were newly born children between 1902 and 1906, and diminished the amount which the Government had in hand for the distribution, and therefore cut down the $1,040 somewhat; and it is in order to settle that controversy now that it is desired to have this matter go to court.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

WOMAN SUFFRAGE.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 128) proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States was announced as next in order.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Let that go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The joint resolution will be passed over.

AARON KIBLER.

The bill (S. 146) for the relief of Aaron Kibler was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with an amendment, in line 7, after the words "United States," to insert "in his final service," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of the pension laws and the laws governing the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers, or any branch thereof, Aaron Kibler shall hereafter be held and considered to have been honorably discharged from the military service of the United States in his final service as a private of Company G, Sixth Regiment Iowa Volunteer Infantry: Provided, That no pension shall accrue prior to the passage of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LANDS IN CADDO COUNTY, OKLA.

The bill (H. R. 9829) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to sell certain unused remnant lands to the Board of County Commissioners of Caddo County, Okla., for fairground and park purposes, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It authorizes the Secretary of the Interior to sell to the Board of County Commissioners of Caddo County, Okla., at the price of $1.25 per acre, a parcel of land, or any part thereof, being that portion of the southwest quarter of section 14, in township 7, north of range 10, west of the Indian meridian, Oklahoma, lying south of the Chicago, Rock Island & Pacific Railroad, containing 111.40 acres, more or less, provided that said association shall, within 90 days from approval hereof, apply to purchase under this act, and that the sale shall be upon the express conditions that if the land be not used for park or fairground purposes within one year from date of conveyance to said association, or shall at any time thereafter cease to be so used, the title thereto shall revert to the United States upon the fact of such nonuse being ascertained and declared by the Secretary of the Interior.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

THOMAS SMART.

The bill (S. 717) to correct the military record of Thomas Smart was announced as next in order.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. President, I observe that the report accompanying this bill does not undertake to give any of the facts upon which the report is based. The report simply reads, "Amend the title so that it will read 'A bill for the relief of Thomas Smart.'" I do not think we ought to pass a bill unless we know something about the circumstances. There seems to be nobody from the Committee on Military Affairs here to explain it, and I will ask that it go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

DONATIONS OF CONDEMNED CANNON.

The bill (S. 5495) authorizing the Secretary of War to make certain donations of condemned cannon and cannon balls was announced as next in order.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, in reference to that bill I have offered two bills, which are in print, and which I desire to move as amendments, if the Senator in charge of the bill will withhold its consideration for a moment.

Mr. SMOOT. I will ask if the bill has been read.

Mr. GALLINGER. It has not been read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. GRONNA in the chair). The Secretary will read the bill.

The Secretary read the bill; and there being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration. It authorizes the Secretary of War, in his discretion, to deliver—

To Topeka Post, No. 71, Grand Army of the Republic, for use in its plat in the Mount Auburn Cemetery, in Topeka, Kans., four condemned bronze or brass cannon or fieldpieces;

To O. M. Mitchell Post, No. 69, Grand Army of the Republic, Osborne, Kans., two condemned bronze or brass cannon or fieldpieces;

To the city of Concordia, Kans., to be mounted in the courthouse square in the said city of Concordia, two condemned bronze or brass cannon or fieldpieces;

To the Masonic homes property at Elizabethtown, Pa., four condemned bronze or brass cannon or fieldpieces and a suitable outfit of cannon balls;

To the city of Stafford, Kans., one condemned bronze or brass cannon;

To the Fort Totten Indian School, at Fort Totten, N. Dak., one condemned bronze or brass cannon or fieldpiece and a suitable outfit of cannon balls;

To Wadsworth Post, No. 7, Grand Army of the Republic, Council Grove, Kans., two condemned bronze or brass cannon or fieldpieces and a suitable outfit of cannon balls;

To the city of Hope, N. Dak., one condemned bronze or brass cannon or fieldpiece and a suitable outfit of cannon balls;

To Custer Post, No. 25, Grand Army of the Republic, Cherokee, Iowa, two condemned bronze or brass cannon or fieldpieces and a suitable outfit of cannon balls;

To Post No. 305, Grand Army of the Republic, Towanda, Kans., one condemned bronze or brass cannon or fieldpiece;

To the village of Ellsworth, Wis., two condemned bronze or brass cannon or fieldpieces and a suitable outfit of cannon balls;

To the town of Eagle River, Wis., two condemned bronze or brass cannon or fieldpieces and a suitable outfit of cannon balls;

To the Grand Army of the Republic post, Chariton, Iowa, two condemned bronze or brass cannon or fieldpieces and a suitable outfit of cannon balls;

To the town of New Preston, Conn., to be placed in the village cemetery of that town, one condemned bronze or brass cannon or fieldpiece;

To the H. G. Libby Post, No. 118, Grand Army of the Republic, Newport, Me., one condemned bronze or brass cannon or fieldpiece and a suitable outfit of cannon balls;

To the incorporated town of Alden, Iowa, to be mounted and used in the public park of said town, one condemned bronze or brass cannon or fieldpiece and a suitable outfit of cannon balls;

To General Hazen Post, No. 258, Grand Army of the Republic, Lincoln, Kans., one condemned bronze or brass cannon or fieldpiece and a suitable outfit of cannon balls;

To the town of Nottingham, N. H., to be used in the public square in said town, four condemned bronze or brass cannon or fieldpieces and a suitable outfit of cannon balls;

To the city of Pittsburg, Okla., one condemned bronze or brass cannon or fieldpiece and a suitable outfit of cannon balls;

To the town of West Warwick, R. I., to be used in the soldiers' park in said town, four condemned bronze or brass cannon or fieldpieces and a suitable outfit of cannon balls.

Provided, That no expense shall be incurred by the United States through the delivery of any of the foregoing condemned military equipment: And provided further, That each and every article of condemned military equipment covered by this act shall be subject at all times to the order of the Secretary of War.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk, to be inserted at the proper place in the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to insert, after line 7, page 4, the following:

To Maxwell-McKean Post, No. 1, Grand Army of the Republic, Salt Lake City, Utah, one condemned bronze or brass cannon or fieldpiece and a suitable outfit of cannon balls.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SMOOT. In behalf of the senior Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON], I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to insert, after the amendment just agreed to, the following:

To the village of Paynesville, Minn., to be placed on the tract of land lately given to the said village by the local camp of the Sons of Veterans, one condemned bronze or brass cannon or fieldpiece and a suitable outfit of cannon balls.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SMOOT. In behalf of the senior Senator from Delaware [Mr. DU PONT], I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to insert, after the amendment just agreed to, the following:

To the town of Newark, Del., three condemned bronze or brass cannon or fieldpieces and a suitable outfit of cannon balls.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I move to insert, at the proper place, Lintonia Park, Yazoo City, Miss.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to insert, after the amendment just agreed to, the following:

To the city of Yazoo, in the State of Mississippi, to be placed in Lintonia Public Park, one condemned bronze or brass cannon or fieldpiece and a suitable outfit of cannon balls.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BRYAN. I ask for two for Tallahassee, Fla.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to insert, after the amendment just agreed to, the following:

To the city of Tallahassee, Fla., two condemned bronze or brass cannon or fieldpieces and a suitable outfit of cannon balls.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GALLINGER. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to insert, after the amendment just agreed to, the following:

To the town of Derry, in the State of New Hampshire, two condemned bronze or brass cannon or fieldpieces and carriages, together with a suitable outfit of cannon balls, to be used in connection with the soldiers' monument in said town.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, my recollection is that I offered one or two joint resolutions of this kind a short time ago. I have sent for them, but they are not here yet. I ask that the bill may be temporarily laid aside for just a few minutes until I can find these joint resolutions that I wish to offer as amendments.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I have no objection to that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Washington asks that the bill may go over temporarily without prejudice.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. The Senator asks simply that it may be laid aside temporarily, as I understand.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. In the absence of objection, that will be done.

BILLS, ETC., PASSED OVER.

The resolution (S. Res. 351) to print the manuscript entitled "A Treatise on the Economic Value of Man," by Dr. Chauncey Rea Burr, of Portland, Me., as a Senate document was announced as next in order.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Let that go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution will be passed over.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, what became of Order of Business 412, Senate bill 5495?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It went over temporarily.

Mr. STONE. I do not know but that I ought to object to that bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Missouri offer an objection?

Mr. STONE. No; I will not.

The resolution (S. Res. 357) to print the address of Chief Justice Walter Clark, of the North Carolina Supreme Court, upon "Government by Judges," as a Senate document was announced as next in order.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Let that go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution will be passed over.

The bill (S. 1887) to annul the proclamation creating the Chugach National Forest and to restore certain lands to the public domain was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Let that go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

CONSTRUCTION OF WAGON ROADS OVER PUBLIC LANDS.

The bill (S. 740) to promote and encourage the construction of wagon roads over the public lands of the United States was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Public Lands with amendments, on page 1, line 11, after the words "extent of," to strike out "one hundred" and insert "fifty," and on page 3, after line 7, to insert:

SEC. 7. That any road located, constructed, or operated under the provisions hereof shall be open and free for use by the public and no tolls or other charges shall be levied for the use thereof, and the upkeep and operation thereof shall at all times be under the direction and control of the highway authorities of the county or counties within which such road shall be situate.

So as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That any corporation or association of persons duly organized under the laws of any State of the United States is hereby granted the right of way over the public lands of the United States for the construction and operation of roads, wagon roads, and roads upon which vehicles operated by power can be operated, to and from any and all points and places where any public or private business shall be carried on within the State wherein such corporation or association of persons so organized shall be located, to the extent of 50 feet in width on each side of the center line of such roads.

SEC. 2. That any such corporation or association of persons desiring to construct any such road or roads shall file with the Secretary of the Interior due proofs of its organization, and shall make a definite survey of its road or roads, and shall file a map or maps with the Secretary of the Interior of the line or lines of road desired by them over the public lands, and upon the filing of such map or maps the corporation or association of persons shall have the right to construct such road or roads and put the same into operation for the passage of vehicles thereon.

SEC. 3. That upon the location of any such road or roads and the filing of the map or maps thereof as herein provided, the public lands upon which the same shall be located shall thereafter be disposed of subject to such rights of way, as shown and delineated on the map or maps thereof filed with the Secretary of the Interior.

SEC. 4. That the rights of way herein granted shall be void and of no effect unless the said road or roads shall be completed and put into operation for the passage of vehicles thereon within two years after the date of the approval of the maps thereof filed as herein provided for.

SEC. 5. That upon the completion of such road or roads ready for operation of vehicles thereon the corporation or association of persons shall file with the Secretary of the Interior due proofs of the completion of said road or roads, in such form as shall be provided by the rules and regulations under this act.

SEC. 6. That the Secretary of the Interior shall have the right to make all needful and proper rules and regulations for carrying into effect the provisions of this act.

SEC. 7. That any road located, constructed, or operated under the provisions hereof shall be open and free for use by the public and no tolls or other charges shall be levied for the use thereof, and the upkeep and operation thereof shall at all times be under the direction and control of the highway authorities of the county or counties within which such road shall be situate.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

RAILROADS IN ALASKA.

The bill (S. 5526) to amend an act entitled "An act extending the homestead laws and providing for right of way for railroads in the District of Alaska, and for other purposes," was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Nevada a question about this bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. GALLINGER in the chair). Will the Senator permit the bill to be read?

Mr. SMOOT. I did not think there was any necessity for having it read if we are going to object; but I did not want to do that until I asked a question of the Senator from Nevada.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Utah is recognized.

Mr. SMOOT. I notice in the report of the committee that there is no report from the Secretary of the Interior in relation to this bill. Was the bill referred to the Secretary of the Interior?

Mr. PITTMAN. It was, and he approved of it. It originated because of a great many troubles that the Department of the Interior were having by reason of this very act. It seems that for the purpose of preventing the monopolization of certain harbors in Alaska, in 1898, in extending the homestead act to Alaska they reserved along all navigable waters spaces 80 rods in length. That was done so that there would always be an outlet from the interior to these harbors. It has undoubtedly served a very good purpose in some cases; but there are thousands of miles of coast line in Alaska, and many thousands of miles of rivers that are navigable, and in many cases this land has been located upon and improved to a great extent, through either mistake or misapprehension as to the law.

These complaints have been coming in to the Department of the Interior for years, and the Department of the Interior had no authority in law to grant any remedy, although there were many cases of merit that required remedying. For that reason the suggestion was first made to me, as chairman of the Committee on the Territories, by the Commissioner of the General Land Office. This bill was then prepared and submitted to the Department of the Interior, and met with their approval. It simply permits the Secretary of the Interior, whenever in his opinion the interests of the Government will be subserved by doing so, to allow so much of this land as he sees fit to revert to the Government.

Mr. SMOOT. Let me ask a question of the Senator. Does the bill provide that there shall be reserved by the Government the 80 rods between the 80 rods that are supposed to be opened for entry under this bill?

Mr. PITTMAN. Yes; it does.

Mr. SMOOT. In other words, when the land was withdrawn it was withdrawn for the purpose of preventing monopolization of the harbor. I have not had time to read the bill, but I want to ask the Senator if the bill provides that there shall be a reservation made by the Government of every alternate 80 rods?

Mr. PITTMAN. It does, and the only provision is that if a portion of one of these 80-rod spaces is actually settled upon and improved, and the Secretary of the Interior believes that it is for the interest of the Government to dispose of it, then he has the authority to do so.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The Secretary read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 1 of the act entitled "An act extending the homestead laws and providing for right of way for railroads in the District of Alaska, and for other purposes," approved May 14, 1898, be, and the same is hereby, amended to read as follows:

"SECTION 1. That the homestead laws of the United States and the rights incident thereto, including the right to enter surveyed or unsurveyed lands under provisions of law relating to the acquisition of title through soldiers' additional homestead rights, are hereby extended to the District of Alaska, subject to such regulations as may be made by the Secretary of the Interior; and no indemnity, deficiency, or lieu lands pertaining to any land grant whatsoever originating outside of said District of Alaska shall be located within or taken from lands in said District: Provided, That no entry shall be allowed extending more than 80 rods along the shore of any navigable water, and along such shore a space of at least 80 rods shall be reserved from entry between all such claims: Provided, however, That if in the opinion of the Secretary of the Interior the reservation of any such space or tract of land or any portion of any reserved space or tract is no longer necessary in order to prevent the monopolization of sites suitable for use in connection with the navigation of such navigable stream, inlet, gulf, bay, or seashore, or for other public use, or wherever, in the opinion of the Secretary, the public interests require that any lands so reserved shall be restored to the public domain and become subject to settlement, entry, appropriation, and disposition under the provisions, conditions, and restrictions applicable to such lands; and if any person, association, or corporation, or the predecessors in interest of any person, association, or corporation, has entered into and remained in possession of any of said land and has made improvements thereon under the belief that title could be acquired thereto and with the bona fide intention of acquiring title to such land under the laws of the United States, then such person, association, or corporation, if otherwise qualified and if prior in time in the initiation of such acts, shall be granted the prior right to appropriate, enter, purchase, or acquire title to such land under the provisions of this act or other acts of the United States that may be applicable to the same."

SEC. 2. That section 10 of the same act be, and the same is hereby, amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 10. That any citizen of the United States 21 years of age, or any association of such citizens, or any corporation incorporated under the laws of the United States or of any State or Territory now authorized by law to hold lands in the Territories, hereafter in the possession of and occupying public lands in the District of Alaska in good faith for the purposes of trade, manufacture, or other productive industry, may each purchase one claim only not exceeding 80 acres of such land for any one person, association, or corporation, at $2.50 per acre, upon submission of proof that said area embraces improvements of the claimant and is needed in the prosecution of such trade, manufacture, or other productive industry, such tract of land not to include mineral or coal lands, and ingress and egress shall be reserved to the public on the waters of all streams, whether navigable or otherwise: Provided, That no entry shall be allowed under this act on lands abutting on navigable water of more than 80 rods: Provided further, That there shall be reserved by the United States a space of 80 rods in width between tracts sold or entered under the provisions of this act on lands abutting on any navigable stream, inlet, gulf, bay, or seashore, and that the Secretary of the Interior may grant the use of such reserved lands abutting on the water front to any citizen or association of citizens, or to any corporation incorporated under the laws of the United States or under the laws of any State or Territory, for landings and wharves, with the provision that the public shall have access to and proper use of such wharves and landings at reasonable rates of toll, to be prescribed by said Secretary; and a roadway 60 feet in width, parallel to the shore line as near as may be practicable, shall be reserved for the use of the public as a highway: Provided, however, That if in the opinion of the Secretary of the Interior the reservation of any such space or tract of land or any portion of any reserved space or tract is no longer necessary in order to prevent the monopolization of sites suitable for use in connection with the navigation of such navigable stream, inlet, gulf, bay, or seashore, or for other public use, or wherever in the opinion of the Secretary the public interests require that any lands so reserved shall be restored to the public domain and become subject to settlement, entry, appropriation, and disposition under the provisions, conditions, and restrictions applicable to such lands; and if any person, association, or corporation, or the predecessors in interest of any person, association, or corporation, has entered into and remained in possession of any of said land and has made improvements thereon under the belief that title could be acquired thereto and with the bona fide intention of acquiring title to such land under the laws of the United States, then such person, association, or corporation, if otherwise qualified and if prior in time in the initiation of such acts, shall be granted the prior right to appropriate, enter, purchase, or acquire title to such land under the provisions of this act or other acts of the United States that may be applicable to the same: Provided further, That in case more than one person, association, or corporation shall claim the same tract of land, the person, association, or corporation having the prior claim, by reason of actual possession and continued occupation in good faith, shall be entitled to purchase the same; but where several persons are or may be so possessed of parts of the tract applied for, the same shall be awarded to them according to their respective interests: Provided further, That all claims substantially square in form and lawfully initiated prior to January 21, 1898, by survey or otherwise, under sections 12 and 13 of the act approved March 3, 1891 (26 Stat. L., ch. 561), may be perfected and patented upon compliance with the provisions of said act, but subject to the requirements and provisions of this act, except as to area, but in no case shall such entry extend along the water front for more than 160 rods: Provided further, That the Secretary of the Interior shall reserve for the use of the natives of Alaska suitable tracts of land along the water front of any stream, inlet, bay, or seashore for landing places for canoes and other craft used by such natives: And provided further, That the Annette, Pribilof Islands, and the islands leased or occupied for the propagation of foxes be excepted from the operation of this act.

"That all affidavits, testimony, proofs, and other papers provided for by this act and by said act of March 3, 1891, or by any departmental or executive regulation thereunder, by depositions or otherwise, under commission from the register and receiver of the land office, which may have been or may hereafter be taken and sworn to anywhere in the United States, before any court, judge, or other officers authorized by law to administer an oath, shall be admitted in evidence as if taken before the register and receiver of the proper local land office. And thereafter such proof, together with a certified copy of the field notes and plat of the survey of the claim, shall be filed in the office of the surveyor general of the District of Alaska, and if such survey and plat shall be approved by him, certified copies thereof, together with the claimant's application to purchase, shall be filed in the United States land office in the land district in which the claim is situated, whereupon, at the expense of the claimant, the register of such land office shall cause notice of such application to be published for at least 60 days in a newspaper of general circulation published nearest the claim within the District of Alaska, and the applicant shall at the time of filing such field notes, plat, and application to purchase in the land office, as aforesaid, cause a copy of such plat, together with the application to purchase, to be posted upon the claim, and such plat and application shall be posted in a conspicuous place on such claim continuously for at least 60 days, and during such period of posting and publication or within 30 days thereafter any person, corporation, or association having or asserting any adverse interest in or claim to the tract of land or any part thereof sought to be purchased may file in the land office where such application is pending, under oath, an adverse claim setting forth the nature and extent thereof, and such adverse claimant shall, within 60 days after the filing of such adverse claim, begin action to quiet title in a court of competent jurisdiction within the District of Alaska, and thereafter no patent shall issue for such claim until the final adjudication of the rights of the parties, and such patent shall then be issued in conformity with the final decree of the court."

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILL PASSED OVER.

The bill (S. 1269) for the adjudication and determination of the claims arising under joint resolution of July 14, 1870, authorizing the Postmaster General to continue in use in the Postal Service Marcus P. Norton's combined postmarking and stamp-canceling hand stamp patents, or otherwise, was announced as next in order.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, the Senator who reported this bill [Mr. BRYAN] is not in the Chamber at present. It carries a pretty large appropriation, and I think it had better go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

TENNESSEE STATE CLAIMS.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 65) to amend S. J. Res. 8, approved May 4, 1898, entitled "Joint resolution providing for the adjustment of certain claims of the United States against the State of Tennessee and certain claims against the United States," was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. SHIELDS] to explain this joint resolution in as few words as possible. The report is not very extended. I should like to have the Senator explain the object of the joint resolution and what it is really intended to carry out.

Mr. SHIELDS. I will do so, Mr. President.

There are certain controversies between the United States and the State of Tennessee of long standing, beginning, in part, as far back, I believe, as 1850. The United States holds certain bonds of the State of Tennessee—approximately $400,000 in amount—and also has certain other claims against the State growing out of the sale by the United States to Tennessee of certain rolling stock that the Federal Government placed upon railroads in Tennessee while seized and operated by it during the Civil War. When it surrendered the roads to the State and the owners it sold to the State this rolling stock, and a value was then placed upon it, but which, as I understand, was open to future adjustment.

Those are the claims of the Federal Government against the State. As an offset against those claims Tennessee claims compensation for the use of railroads that were seized and operated by the Government, as I have just stated, and for certain rolling stock on those roads that the Federal Government wore out while operating them, and also the steel on one road which it took up and removed from the State, and certain rolling stock that was seized and converted in the same way.

Those claims have been standing since the close of the war, and an effort has been made from time to time to adjust and settle them between the two Governments.

Mr. WEST. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Tennessee yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. SHIELDS. I do.

Mr. WEST. All the time that the National Government was administering this property were the proceeds converted into the Treasury of the Government?

Mr. SHIELDS. There were no proceeds further than the use of the railroads in transporting the troops of the United States and supplies for the Army. Perhaps that statement is too broad. They may have done some business for the general public. On reflection, I recall that some business of that kind was done as common carriers, because the Government continued to hold and operate these roads after the close of the war, after all questions of loyalty and disloyalty were ended. I think they surrendered these roads some time in September to the State, and certainly there were several months in which no question of loyalty was involved.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I notice these words, "without regard to any question of loyalty or disloyalty."

Mr. SHIELDS. I will explain that.

Mr. SMOOT. Would the Senator object to striking those words out of the joint resolution and allowing it simply to read?—

The claims of the parties, respectively, shall be considered, adjusted, and settled on their merits and upon such terms as to amounts, allowance, and interest, and so forth, as shall do equal and impartial justice to the parties.

Mr. SHIELDS. Yes; those words are the meat of this amendment. If the Senator will bear with me, he will understand the bearing of them. I have not completed the statement.

Mr. SMOOT. Of course I think I understand why they are in there. If they were not there, the parties that were disloyal to the Government of the United States could have no claim against the Government.

Mr. SHIELDS. That is one of the questions to be settled in the final adjustment of this compromise. There are very grave questions presented, both under the question whether a State government could be disloyal or merely the citizens of the State; and, furthermore, as to the effect of the general amnesty law and certain other laws. I wish the Senator would let me conclude the statement, and he will see that those words do no harm at this stage of the proceeding.

With those controversies existing, Congress in 1868 passed a resolution of which I will read a portion:

Resolved, etc., That the Attorney General, the Secretary of the Treasury, and the Secretary of War be, and they are hereby, authorized and required to proceed, by conference with such agents, counsel, or commissioners as may be appointed by said States for that purpose, to compromise, adjust, and settle with the State of Tennessee, through such duly appointed agents, all said matters, upon such terms as to amounts, allowance of interest, and so forth, as shall do equal and impartial justice to both parties.

Pursuant to that resolution the State of Tennessee, by a resolution passed by its general assembly, appointed three commissioners to act for it, and these commissioners have met with the commissioners of the United States, the Secretary of War, the Secretary of the Treasury, and the Attorney General, but have been unable to agree. They have had several meetings. At various times it has been suggested that pending the time that part of these claims accrued to the State of Tennessee, Tennessee was disloyal and had seceded, and therefore those claims could not be allowed; but it has been insisted all the time by the commissioners of Tennessee that the facts should be reported, regardless of the legal status of the parties or any question of law that might be presented, so that Congress, when their report came in, might pass upon the merits of it. As I said, however, some one has always raised that question, and the commissioners have never gotten down to the merits. The object of this resolution is to amend the former one so as to direct them, regardless of that question, to proceed and ascertain all the facts and report.

I call the Senator's attention to the concluding clause of this amendment:

The claims of the parties respectively shall be considered, adjusted, and settled on their merits without regard to any question of loyalty or disloyalty, and upon such terms as to amounts, allowance of interest, etc., as shall do equal and impartial justice to the parties. The said compromise or settlement is not to be effective or final until approved by Congress.

So this is simply directing them to proceed, regardless of this question, and report all the facts, whether or not they have just claims, independent of this question of law and aside from it, so that Congress in the end, by a proper proceeding, may pass on the merits of the matter.
